He's In! First!

FIVE hundred miles of breakneck, death-defying speed—plunging into death at every turn—then—

Your audience will ride the race with Wallie! And at the end they'll let out a gasp of joy and a round of applause that'll do your heart good—and your pocketbook!

Better than "The Roaring Road" and "Double Speed."

Mollie King Returns in Very Well Done Domestic Drama

Mollie King in "WOMEN MEN FORGET" United Picture Theaters
DIRECTOR     John M. Stahl
AUTHOR       Elaine Sterne
SCENARIO BY  Paul Bern
CAMERAMAN    Percy Holbrook
AS A WHOLE   Domestic drama that holds interest admirably and shows unusual and intense conflict of characters.

STORY       Very well developed. Registers all points naturally and to good effect.
DIRECTION   Registers all points exceptionally well.

PHOTOGRAPHY Average. Mostly plain.
LIGHTINGS   Mostly plain.

CAMERA WORK Good. Star helped a lot by costumes that are practically all spoken.

STAR        Shows considerable emotional ability in this and registers exceedingly well.

SUPPORT     Edward Langfield and Frank Mills both handle big parts expertly.
EXTERIORS   Satisfactory.
INTERIORS   Appropriate.
DETAIL      Story helped a lot by costumes that are practically all spoken.

CHARACTER OF STORY Wife wins back husband from "other woman" through her understanding.

LENGTH OF PRODUCTION . . . . 4,000 feet

"Women Men Forget" is notable in that it marks Mollie King's return to the screen after quite an absence and also because of the fact that it presents a domestic drama of unusual interest, well developed and containing an interesting and at times intense conflict of characters. The picture is an example of what can be done with a very good story, a small cast, and at little, but no stinging expense. For while it never offers anything lavish in the way of setting or acting, the story and the characters are so well handled that the audience is impressed. At times they are genuinely affected by the fact that they are founded in such a fine drama.

Mollie King appears as Mary because the Wall Street woman who is attracted to Helen as a substitute for her own husband.

Mary's (Mollie King) and Helen's (Elaine Sterne) friendship is one of the most charming situations in the entire story. Helen's (Elaine Sterne) husband has deserted her and she is in the lowly position of a small-time actress. She is a woman for whom the sea of life is a desert. She is stranded in a place where she has no friends and is in the clutches of a man who is not even willing to support her. Her only hope is in the love of the man she loves. She is a woman who has a heart that is not cut out for the work of the world. She is a woman who has a heart that is cut out for the work of the world. She is a woman who has a heart that is cut out for the work of the world.

Mary's (Mollie King) friend, Helen's (Elaine Sterne) husband, is a man who is not only willing to support her but who is also willing to help her in any way he can. He is a man who is not only willing to support her but who is also willing to help her in any way he can. What Do You Want in Comedies?

Are you looking for comedies carrying every week the same little cast of "so-called" stars—whose names mean nothing at your box office—whose peculiar type fits them for only a certain type or kind of comedy story, so that the same situations and stories must be rehashed, week after week, to fit that little cast? If so—we have nothing for you.

But—If you want funny comedies—different in nature every week—a world wide range of laugh-forcing situations because they're built around stories selected only because they're screamingly funny—with real artists selected to fit the story whatever it may be—have been asking for something "different" every day for years.

There have been a few really "different" and really good, practical ideas in moving pictures. 100% of them have been 100% successes from the viewpoint of all of these fans, all of these exhibitors and all of these producers.

"Comedyart" is the latest and greatest of really "different," really good practical ideas.

8000 of the fastest thinking exhibitors have recognized it. Their inquiries have been received and referred to our branches, and their contracts are already flooding our offices.

Where do YOU stand in this list? YOU also have our postage-prepaid inquiry cards. There is still time to get in on the ground floor. Put it off and forget it, or use the card NOW and win with us.

is the 1400-foot comedy part of our first "COMEDYART" production released March 28th. For 1300 feet of rollicking, situation and classy slapstick comedy, there is not a sub-title nor a face on the screen. NOTHING BUT FEET. It is as "different" from the usual comedy as day is from night, and it's a knockout that will make your house the talk of the town.

GOD'S COUNTRY

is the 400-foot Artcolor with this release. It is stunning. It makes men think deep; it raises them out of themselves, it leaves them happy. When God fashioned the earth, His most awe-inspiring work became the "Rockies"—the backbone of the Americas. That's where this comes from. And because our Color process, latest child of Science, is fully protected by patents, you can bet that this is "different."

MEMORIES

This 200-foot Novelty is a riot. A "different" comparison of yesterday's "rum-hounds" with today's "powder-puff-fans." Yes, it's "different."

2000 feet of "different" value. Use that card right now, and a "different" kind of price will reach you in a hurry.

NEW YORK EVENING SUN

SAID:

Alice Joyce as the star of "The Sporting Duchess," the picturized version of the famous old Drury Lane melodrama, at the Broadway this week, does some of the best acting of her long and generally happy association with the drama that overcomes its modesty in celluloid. Miss Joyce is one of the very best of our screen actresses, exhibiting a poise and freedom from affectation which produces excellent results upon the wide-eyed witness of the screen solution of dramatic problems. The plot of the Drury Lane melodrama lends itself excellently to the extravagance of the screen in pictorial settings, and the story is sufficiently absorbing to keep the temperature of the audience at 104 or thereabouts until the final happy moment when the villain is clutched by the eager hands of the law; the hero by the eager hands of the heroine and the final close-up by the eager hands of the movie director. "The Sporting Duchess" provides excellent entertainment.
An essential fact in determining which trade paper is the indispensable link between producer and exhibitor

EXHIBITORS HERALD, published in Chicago, brings the news of the industry to exhibitors located from Ohio to California several days in advance of publications circulated from New York City.

This operation repeated week by week inevitably fixes and holds the undivided attention and interest of readers to the exclusion of every contemporary publication.

Publication in Chicago, the focal center of America, permits a swift and direct distribution of current information—which is as important in this industry as the speed of the stock ticker to the brokerage business.

COMMENT OF THE WEEK
by MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

Border-Line Pictures

A SITUATION has occurred in which it becomes proper to consider just how serious and how general has been the industry's realization that the immoral picture won't go.

Practically the entire record of the past year has been notably free of the suggestive, the obscene and the sordid picture. Those who are jealous of the good reputation of the motion picture and who realize that once it is dragged down to low repute its commercial possibilities will be gravely limited for a long time, if not forever, have seen good cause for rejoicing.

It is true there has been no general recurrence of the immoral picture, but here and there its sinister neighbor—the border-line picture—has been poking up its head. It seems to be the plan in certain quarters to take an obscene theme or situation and by means of lavish investiture to sugar-coat the obscenity and get it by the critical without offense.

It can't be done. The revolt of the public may not come so quickly but an elaborate production will not render permanently acceptable a theme or situation which has been branded as unfit in another form.

The border-line picture really constitutes a greater menace than the down-right smut film. In the case of the latter the public immediately registers its disgust with the exhibitor and the theatreman sees to it that nothing of the kind again appears on his screen. In the case of the border-line picture the careful veneer of respectability that has been applied through elaborate production allows it to pass unchallenged for the moment, but such a picture inevitably leaves with the greater part of the public the thought that it is not the type to be recommended.

This thought is very liable to evolve eventually into the idea that the moral standard of motion pictures has fallen pretty low and if ever this conclusion is reached by a substantial portion of the thinking public it will mark the day when an inevitable decline of standing and influence—and consequently commercial possibilities—of the motion picture will commence.

Potash on Producers

IN a sensational article Mr. Maurice Tourneur declares that the so-called producer of today is merely a middleman who has no good reason for existing. He says:

"This middleman who sits in his luxurious office is a seemingly important factor in the industry. His name is blazed on Broadway in electric lights, in the magazines, trade papers, on billboards—every place that pictures are advertised. He arrives in his office sometimes before noon—he must be late enough to give time for the careful polishing of the furniture and the careful sweeping of the priceless rugs. . . . One of his competitors made a lot of money some time ago with "Les Miserables," so he instructs his purchasing department to cable Victor Hugo and secure an option on his future works. . . . At noon he has a luncheon engagement with some star who is looking for a new contract . . . He swells with pride as they walk into the dining room of the Biltmore and through the meal listens to the flattery of the charming lady who convinces him he is the foremost man in the world of motion pictures. . . ."

It would seem that Mr. Tourneur gets his ideas of the commercial structure and operation of the motion picture industry from "Potash and Perlmutter."

Ventilation

CERTAINLY there is nothing more fundamental in the business of an exhibitor than keeping his theatre in such a physical condition throughout that patrons have at least no good cause for complaint.

A surprisingly large number of exhibitors are not doing this. Many failures to provide agreeable physical surroundings occur in the matter of ventilation—a basic and indispensable requirement for every well ordered theatre.

Poor ventilation or no ventilation at all strikes at the very root of a theatre's success. The day has passed when patrons may be expected to tolerate for any considerable length of time a theatre where the air is foul and unhealthy.

Thousands of dollars may be expended in good pictures and exploitation, but if this basic requirement of good ventilation is absent it will be found impossible to build up and maintain a satisfied patronage.
EXHIBITORS
April 3, 1920

Jerome C. Ward, who directs J. Warren Kerrigan, is a stickler for realism. When the scenario calls for likker, Ward demands that his actors have it. While making the Brunswick production of ‘The 26th Commandant,’ however, he went to the prop cupboard and found it bare and had to use a dozen bottles of good wine in his own stored away in his cellar. Now that the secret is out he sings: “There was a man in our town, and he said wondrous wise. He stocked his cellar to the roof, but told no other guys.”

Get an Eye-Full Free—
If women’s skirts keep creeping up much higher it’s going to knock an awful hole in “Aphrodite’s” receipts this summer.

“Forms Own Company”—
All the letters have been rubbed off most of the stars’ Oujia boards apparently but the “F. O. C.”

An Epoch As It Were—
Another director has just rushed across the continent with a print of a picture just completed. Some day some director will make the trip at normal speed, thereby establishing a precedent.

Set ‘Em Up Again—
To the noises that hang onto the polished mahogany soft-drink bars every day is Sundae now.

Shoot Him at Sunrise—
Omaha claims to have the meanest exchange manager in the world. He owns a quart of very old Scotch and won’t let one of the help smell of the cork.

Familiar Headlines—
“Song Dedicated to Actress.”

Bugs on the Subject—
“Can you imagine the beautiful Pauline Frederick doing such a plebian thing as picking potato bugs?”—but we read no further. It sounded too awful to be true.

THE motion picture poster that has power and force, vigor and vim, is bound to have the maximum of advertising value. It is likewise bound to be a RITCHEY poster because The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. is the only organization capable of invariably imparting these characteristics to a poster.

Arthur S. Kane Will Be General Manager Of Mayflower, Report
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 23.—Arthur S. Kane, former president of Realart Pictures Corporation and now head of the Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation, is to be made general manager of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation according to information from reliable resources.

"I should rather not say anything at this time," was the only comment Mr. Kane would make when asked to confirm the report.

"Anything is possible in the film business," declared Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower, "Nothing could please me more than Kane being with us."

John C. Ragland joined Mr. Kane as general manager of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation yesterday.

Zukor Has Thrills On Way to Europe
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LONDON, ENGLAND.—The Imperator, which numbered among its passengers Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, just completed the most sensational journey of its career. For three days, the giant vessel was virtually helpless with a list of 45 degrees. First-class staterooms were flooded. Some members of the crew were killed.

The Imperator left New York on March 8. Excessive weight of the superstructure resulted in the flooding of the ash-electors when they were opened. The passengers say there was no panic.

International News Lands Big Feature
(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 23.—The International News reel published Thursday will contain the first of four weekly installments of the exploits of the German raider, Moewe, the pictures suppressed in Germany.

The prints were obtained in Vienna. The Moeve sank 200,000 tons of allied shipping.

Forty Chicago Exhibitors Facing
Arrest for Withholding War Taxes
Special Prosecutor George M. Murdock Declares
Cases Will Not Be Compromised—Believed to Open Nation-Wide Drive

Warrants for the arrest of forty Chicago motion picture theatre owners on charges of withholding war taxes from the United States Government will be issued some time within the next few days, according to the statement of Special Prosecutor Murdock, special attorney of the solicitor’s department, Washington, D. C., and assigned to the internal revenue department at Chicago as special prosecutor in all war tax cases.

The step to prosecute the Chicago exhibitors will be followed within a short time by similar action in all parts of the United States, it is declared.

NO COMPROMISE IS MURDOCK’S DECLARATION

"There will be no compromise," declared Mr. Murdock in issuing his statement. "In the eyes of the government, all taxes, which have been withheld have been withheld in an attempt to defraud.

The taxes which have been held back are in the hands of the theatre owners as guardians. This offense comes under the classification of a felony and is punishable by two years imprisonment, and a $10,000 fine or both. The offenders can look for no leniency."

Denver Screen Club
Planning Convention

DENVER, COL.—The Rocky Mountain Screen club is planning for a convention of motion picture producers and exhibitors, at which will be presented types of model theatres and equipment and methods of exhibition of pictures.

Details of the gathering are in the hands of Harry E. Huffman, president, G. A. Brown, secretary-treasurer, H. A. Kyler, vice-president, and Harry T. Nolan, chairman of the committee on conventions.

The club also hopes to demonstrate to the producers that Colorado atmosphere is adaptable to the taking of pictures.

Strand Company Has Bought Three Houses

LOUISVILLE, KY.—The Princess and Dixie theatres at Mayfield and the Savoy at Princeton have been purchased by Strand Amusement Company. The price paid is said to be $50,000. Members of the company are Fred Levy, Lee L. Goldberg, John W. Keeler and Leo F. Keeler.

The concern also holds the Kentucky and Tennessee franchise for First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, and operates first National exchanges in the two states.

Will Convert Hotel Into Picture Palace

PARIS, KY.—It is reported that Phoe- nix Amusement Company has leased for ninety-nine years the Leonard hotel, which, according to an announcement, will be converted into a modern motion picture theatre.

The Grand Opera House and the Alamo theatre here belong to the amusement concern.

First National May Get Washburn Films

LOS ANGELES, March 23.—Unofficial indications here are that in the near future Revuat Washburn’s pictures will be distributed by First National Exhibitors’ Circuit. Announcement to this effect is considered probable.
EXHIBITOR GETTING GRAVY NOW

Jay Balfour Declares Producers and Stars are Anxious to "Cut In"—Says Theatre Men are Telling Others "Where to Head In at"

Jay Balfour, special correspondent of Exhibitors Herald, has his own ideas about the present situation in the industry and has his own way of expressing them. Both his ideas and style of putting them in black and white are distinctly Balfour—original, daring, and frank. In his letters appear from time to time in Exhibitors Herald. You cannot afford to miss them. This week he tackles the financial side of the picture business in his breezy jargon. In his next, he will—but that would take away the surprise. Watch for it.

By JAY BALFOUR
HOLLYWOOD, CAL., March 23.

—It wasn't so long ago that the movie theatre owner was bitterly complaining about the unjust division of profits.

"The producer is getting it all," he cried.

Then a little while later the producer reached the conclusion that the star was getting all the glory and he was holding the sack, if that figure of speech is permissible. "We're just working for the star," complained the producer.

And now the cycle is complete. The theatre owner is making the most money, according to producer and star and they would fain cut in on his profits through a percentage, or some other system.

It is quite true that the exhibitor is getting the first cut of the purse. He has waited a long time for it. He has paid tribute to the producing magnate, who not so long ago, would admit that he was getting all the traffic he could. The star problem had dwindled into insignificance almost overnight. Of course, there will be a star system as long as there are motion pictures, but it is nothing to worry about. There was a time when a few of the principal stars believed that they could hand over control and picture the industry. The fact that there is now no star system is due, perhaps as much to this fallacy as to any other single factor.

Getting back to the theatre man. He not only is getting most of the three-quarters of a billion dollars which the American public is spending annually for their movies, but he is telling the producer where to head in at.

Just now, the producer claims that he isn't getting his rightful allotment of the swag. Maybe he isn't, but he'll have to find a brand new way to jimmy it away from the wise exhibitor. And the only new way is to make such good pictures that the exhibitor will have to pay him at any price.

Divorce for Mayflower

There is a well authenticated report out from the East to the effect that Mayflower is soon to be divorced from the Zukor interests. Only current productions will be released by Paramount on Rückert, and the new ones which bear the Mayflower label will find an outlet through some other distribution organization.

Mayflower has had a brief but sensational career thus far. "The Miracle Man" was a miracle photoplay achievement in 1919 and the Zukor organization made a ten strike in grabbing it, not only because of the money it made but because of the additional prestige it acquired in releasing the year's best production. Other pictures made by Mayflower producing units have cost as much or more money than "The Miracle Man," but none came anywhere near the latter in gross returns. Conversely, some of them were released at a loss, it is said.

The report is current also that George Loane Tucker, who made "The Miracle Man," and then brought suit against Mayflower and Famous Players, will complete his contract with Mayflower.

Christies to the Front

New business arrangements made by Charles Christie while in the East will result in placing the Christie Film Company in the forefront of the comedy producers of the industry, it is freely predicted. No statement has been made as yet concerning the future plans of the rapidly growing concern at Sunset and Gower and news of the coming year's activities is awaited with considerable interest. In addition to a big increase in comedy output, the company will make a half dozen or more features of an exceedingly high standard.

Morris Manages Both Select and Republic
Change Made to Accomplish Greater Efficiency in Two Organizations

Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of Select Pictures Corporation, has been appointed to act in the additional capacity of general manager of Republic Distributing Corporation. Briton N. Ilushe, president of Republic, and Lewis J. Selznick, advisory director, announce that this change was made with a view to greater efficiency and consolidation with the welfare of the exhibitor in mind.

Selznick headquarters are at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, and Republic is located at 130 West Forty-sixth street. The executive offices of the latter, however, are at 729 Seventh avenue.

Mr. Morris has assumed his additional duties and has taken steps to give to Republic the efficient methods of operation and service to the exhibitor that have been characteristic of Select.

Another appointment made by Mr. Selznick concurrent with Mr. Morris' new duties is that of Charles R. Rogers as director of sales of Republic. Mr. Rogers will perform the duties of this position in addition to that of director of sales of Select. George R. Meeker, who has been sales director of Republic, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to the executive forces of Prisma Color Pictures.
Independent Exchanges Holding Second Convention in Chicago

J. L. Friedman, President of Celebrated Players,
Presides at Meeting of State Right Buyers
From All Parts of the United States

A second organization of state right buyers, founded on similar lines although on an even larger scale than that launched in Chicago three weeks ago, is expected to result from a convention of owners of independent exchanges from all parts of the United States being held at the Congress Hotel this week.

Many of the men interested arrived in Chicago as early as Sunday, March 21, and an informal session was held Tuesday, March 23. The convention was scheduled for formal opening on Wednesday.

Great Enthusiasm Shown in Project

The almost unanimous response to Mr. Friedman's invitations to attend indicates that independent exchange owners throughout the country feel that the organization of co-operative operating companies is the vital need at the present time to insure their continuance.

Until the delegates themselves decide upon what steps shall be taken, little definite information will be available. All of the problems now facing the state right buyers are to be discussed and an effort made to find solutions.

Former Project May Merge

The fact that many of the independent buyers attending the convention were present in the previous conference held in Chicago indicates that the first organ-

Negotiations Under Way in East
For New Film Exchange Building Structure Housing Practically All of Chicago’s Exchanges Will Be Erected on North Side—
E. G. Welch Is Agent

With less than six weeks in which to leave the Chicago loop or satisfy city authorities that construction of a new film building is under way, negotiations are being closed in New York this week for the erection of a twelve-story building at North Clark and Kinzie streets which will house practically all of the film exchanges in the city.

E. G. Welch, agent in charge of the proposition, hurried cast the latter part of last week and Saturday was sent full power to close the deal by owners of the property.

Nine Companies Ready to Sign

The Universal Film Manufacturing Company, Select Pictures, the Republic Distributing Corporation, United Picture Theatres of America, United Artists Distributing Corporation, Metro Pictures Corporation, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, First National Exhibitors Circuit and Goldwyn Pictures Corporation are said to be ready to sign leases during the present week at Wabash avenue and Fourteenth street. Assurance that the building at North Clark and Kinzie streets will be built, however, may result in a change in this plan.

If successfully closed the deal will solve a problem which has been a constant source of concern to Chicago film exchanges for the past six months.

A half dozen projects have been considered from time to time. Several of these appeared to have been settled when little points of difference interfered. As the date of ejection approached it seemed that the film exchanges would be compelled to scatter about the city.

Project Is Not New One

The proposed building at Kinzie and Clark streets is not a new idea. Two months ago the site was selected by representatives of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry as the most suitable.

It is understood that the only condition which remains to be met is the giving of assurance that the entire twelve floors of the building will be taken over by film exchanges and accessory companies.

The Chicago F. I. L. M. club is cooperating in every way with the executive officers of the national distributing companies.

City Ordinance Is Cause

The removal of all film exchanges from the loop in Chicago is the result of a city ordinance adopted two years ago prohibiting the handling of films in the loop after May 1, 1929.

City authorities have informed exchange owners and managers that a reasonable extension of time will be given if the actual work of construction of a new film exchange building has been started by May 1.

Kremer Gets Rights To “Screen Smiles” in U. S. and Canada

Victor Kremer, president of the Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., announces that negotiations have been completed whereby “Screen Smiles” has been acquired for the United States and Canada.

“Screen Smiles” is a 500-foot novelty reel dealing with current events and fads of the day in humorous style, with the various sayings illustrated with animated cartoons. “Screen Smiles” was developed by Herman Willkin, creator of the topical sayings, idea in slide form several years ago.

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., will distribute the production on the state right market, providing fifty-two reels a year. The following territory already has been disposed of: New York and New Jersey, First National Exhibitors Circuit; New England, First National Exhibitors Circuit.

An elaborate advertising campaign will be carried on in behalf of “Screen Smiles,” it is announced. Several publicity aids, including a novelty one-sheet, two-color heralds, motion picture announcement trailers, etc., have been provided.

Lewis Wants Sunday Pictures Authorized

TRENTON, N. J.—Burdette G. Lewis, commissioner of institutions and agencies, is of the opinion that cities of this state should have the power of referendum to authorize showing of educational and cultural motion pictures on Sunday, such as are recommended by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures.

“It is much better,” he said, “that the family should attend ‘movies’ of this kind than that the men members should be forced to find some gambling hole or some other ‘stube’ in which to spend their time on Sunday.”

Plan $100,000 Theatre For Opening in August

BILLINGS, MONT.—E. C. O’Keefe, manager of the Regent theatre, has started the tearing down of the building at 215 North Broadway, where he will erect a $100,000 motion picture theatre, opening of which is scheduled for August.

Though sufficient stage space is being reserved for the accommodation of presentation features and novelties, a strict motion picture program is planned. The fixtures, it is expected, will cost $50,000.

Will Seat 1,000

TAYLORSVILLE, ILL.—E. B. Range, formerly manager of the Gem theatre, in association with W. B. Adams, owner of the Rosa Milligan property, have announced plans for the building of a motion picture theatre to seat 1,000.

Builds Third House

CHARLESTON, ILL.—Dominick Frey, who owns two motion picture theatres here, has purchased property valued at $15,000 and will build a new $30-seat house to cost approximately $35,000.
Famous Players-Lasky in Battle With First National at St. Louis
Koplar and Goldman Reported to Have Allied Their Theatre With Zukor—Seurases Brothers May Affiliate With W. C. Seivers

ST. LOUIS, March 22.—A lively exhibitorial war has been raging here for several weeks.

The chief factors in the contest seem to be the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., represented locally by W. C. Seivers, the Zukor interests, Koplar and Goldman, who control sixteen theatres and the Seurases brothers, who also control a chain of theatres.

Report Koplar-Goldman Join Zukor

The chief development up to date seems to have been the reported alliance between the Koplar-Goldman interests and the Zukor interests.

It is understood that this deal has been closed and that Mr. Goldman is now in New York in conference with Famous Players official, deciding on what the St. Louis policy will be. Mr. Goldman, according to information now available will remain as general manager of the chain of theatres.

Seurases Brothers have been negotiating with both First National and with Famous Players. A few weeks ago it was reported that the Seurases interests had lined up with First National and that the Seurases New Grand Central Theatre was to be taken over by the new group.

This report was officially denied in New York.

Means Lively Competition

The definite alignment of the Koplar-Goldman interests with Famous Players is expected to cause the Seurases Brothers to line up with Seivers and the First National group.

If this change comes about there will be two solidly entrenched factors in the St. Louis situation, which will create a condition of lively competition.

Petition For Ballot On Sunday Motion Pictures

ST. JOHNS, MICH.—Theatre men have circulated petitions asking commissioners to place the question of Sunday motion pictures up to the public at the spring election on April 5.

1,200 Persons at Opening

MARYSVILLE, KAN.—One thousand, two hundred persons were present at the opening of Marysville's new $65,000 Liberty theatre. Directors of the company who financed the project are W. W. Hutchinson, George T. Mohrbacker, H. A. Hohn, R. C. Guthrie and C. F. Woellner.

$75,000 Will Be Spent

PATERSON, N. J.—Apollo Theatre Company, Inc., has appropriated $75,000 for remodeling and enlarging the Lyceum theatre. The house will be devoted to motion pictures, dramatic productions and vaudeville.

What Exhibitors Are Saying About
EXHIBITORS HERALD

"We must have 'Exhibitors Herald.' It meets our views of what a trade journal should be—indeed, independent to the extent of giving everyone, both exhibitor and producer, a square deal and not catering to some particular organization for mercenary motives. Send 'Exhibitors Herald.'"—Mrs. F. E. Smith, Lyric Theatre, Marysville, Cal.

"We find 'Exhibitors Herald' a splendid medium, full of interest for those who wish to keep in touch with all the different branches pertaining to the motion picture industry."—Mrs. R. J. Slack, Majestic Theatre, Mazomanie, Wis.

"I consider 'Exhibitors Herald' the best trade paper on the market and really could not get along without its department 'What the Picture Did for Me.'"—Sidney M. Spiegel, Jr., Community House, Winnetka, Ill.

"I have been out of the picture game for over a year but I am back in it again, so I must have my 'Exhibitors Herald' again."—O. J. Chandler, Isis Theatre, Peru, Ind.
Tom Mix is Chosen by Exhibitors in California to Lead Fresno Round-Up

Fox Star and His Twenty-Five Cowboys to Compete In Steer Throwing, Roping and Broncho Busting Contests on April 30

Tom Mix, Fox star, has accepted an honor conferred upon him by the Motion Picture Exhibitors of California, and will lead the rodeo to be held by the Raisin Growers' Association at Fresno, Cal., on April 30.

George F. Sharp, manager of the Liberty theatre in Fresno, and chairman of the publicity committee, sending to the Fox star the invitation to attend the rodeo,

To Be Main Attraction

"We would feel honored it you would accept. I can promise you that Tom Mix will be the main attraction, and the whole celebration will be built around the early pioneer days of California with Tom Mix as the leading light. Bring your cowboys with you, and we will have the steer throwing, roping, bull dogging and broncho busting contests.

Mix's Fox studio team promises to win the honors from the cowpunchers on the ranges, who will come from as far east as Oklahoma. From Fresno, Mix and his company will move to Sonora in the Sierra Mountains, where the exteriors of his next picture, "The Untamed," from the story of Max Brand, will be made.

Get New Albany Office

ALBANY, N. Y.—John Fulton, superintendent of buildings, has given out the information that the Famous Players-Lasky Film Corp. will move their exchange to the property at 33 Orange street, owned by A. Page Smith, alterations to cost $8,000 having been contracted for.

Build in Akron

AKRON, O.—A permit has been granted to Peter Sandrene to erect a theatre and hotel building at 95 N. Case Ave., to cost $145,000.

To Build at Port Clinton

PORT CLINTON, O.—A new theatre seating 250 will be erected here by Port Clinton Amusement & Community Theatre Company.

A realistic presentation was given to "Go West, Young Woman," a Christie comedy, at the Iola theatre, 1235 Milwaukee avenue, Chicago, on Sunday night, March 21.

Patrons had become imbued with the spirit of the picture. They adored the heroine and thought the hero a gallant chap. The villain had aroused their ire and they were willing that he should suffer the cruel fate that is traditionally dealt out to the unscrupulous wretches in "reel life."

Interest was at its highest peak when a scene was projected on the screen showing a shooting affair. It was the cue for the realistic touch that was to be furnished by the management of the house. Two shots and a woman's screams from back of stage screen added flavor to the showing. It gave vividness to the western scenes, and the audience was delighted.

An announcement, however, brought the showing to an abrupt ending. Not until the patrons reached the lobby of the theatre did they learn that what they thought of the accompaniments to a "reel" drama was, in fact, the unraveling of a domestic plot in real life.

 Principals in the drama back stage were Theophil Piatrowski, manager of the house, his wife, Mary, and the third party to the triangle, Mrs. Julia Dombowski. Mrs. Piatrowski, seeking to avenge the alienation of her husband's affections by Mrs. Dombowski, shot the latter in the face. The husband, fearing more serious complications, seized the muzzle of the gun. But another shot was fired, the bullet passing through his hand and lodging in his wife's arm.

WEST UNION, IA.—H. G. Simpson of McGregor has purchased the Princess theatre from Louis Frana of Calmar.
Order Barring Shipment of Film on Sundays and Holidays Is Rescinded

Prompt Action in Texas by National Association Saves Thousands of Dollars Annually for All Picture Interests

Prompt action recently on the part of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry saved the exhibitors of Texas from a serious situation, and stopped a movement which, if it had been permitted to spread throughout the country, would have cost the industry many millions of dollars each year.

By an arbitrary order issued by a local express official at Dallas, Texas, all in and out express service on motion picture films for Sundays and holidays was to be eliminated on March 21. If this order had been enforced it would have meant that the thousands of theatres served by the Dallas exchanges would have been compelled to close their doors on the busiest days of the years.

Nation-Wide Movement Was Planned

The Dallas and Fort Worth papers in commenting on the order asserted that this was the first order in a movement which was to be country-wide. If the closing order applied to Texas alone it would be serious enough, but it it was to be made effective in the entire country the damage would be irreparable.

P. H. Stilson, chairman of the transportation committee of the national association, called a special meeting of the committee and action was taken to have the order abrogated. Frederick H. Elliott, executive secretary, took up the matter with the interstate commerce commission, as the order affected interstate as well as in intrastate business.

The Dallas chamber of commerce was asked to co-operate in an effort to have the order set aside, and to enlist the support of the other interests which would suffer if the order should stand. The national association also wired the leading exhibitors to co-operate with the exchange managers.

Order Is Rescinded

By this prompt action of the national association, the efforts of the parties affected by the closing order were coordinated and splendid results were accomplished. An order was issued rescinding the closing order, and film shipments in and out of the Dallas exchanges can be made as formerly. This action, taken as it was, means that it will stop the movement to close the other express offices throughout the country, and there will be no interference with film shipments on Sundays and holidays.

Members of the executive committee of the transportation committee who attended the meeting at the headquarters of the national association in the Times building, New York, when the plans were made for the campaign to have the order rescinded were P. H. Stilson, chairman, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, J. M. Veedern, Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Adolph Dumaht, Goldwyn Pictures Corporation; T. B. MacLeod, Muteo Pictures Corporation; C. C. Ryan, Select Pictures Corporation, and A. I. Siegel, Vitagraph, Inc.

Will Take Possession Of Palace On April 5

TRINIDAD, COL.—B. B. Hinman, L. L. Stonebraker, and C. G. Chamberlain will take possession of the Palace theatre on April 5. The three men recently acquired the playhouse from R. W. Davis, who will go to Los Angeles to make his home.

Club Women Recommend Censorship of Pictures

SPRINGFIELD, ILL.—The executive committee of the Springfield Woman’s club recently voted favorably on a recommendation for censorship of motion pictures.

Expect to Adjust Texas Situation

Assurance that, temporarily at least, the danger of a Sunday and holiday embargo on film in Texas has been passed and complete adjustment will probably be made in this week has been received by Exhibitors Herald in a telegram from Claude Ezell, manager of the Dallas office of Selecta Pictures Corporation. His telegram is as follows:

"Excess film embargo lifted. Order rescinded by General Manager Taft. Shipment will be handled on Sunday as in past. Local express companies to meet and co-operate with film managers.

Think the trouble has been permanently eliminated. Gorham campaign by film managers brought about rescinding order. The Film Board of Trade will meet with general agents of express company Tuesday for the purpose of getting together for harmony and cooperation."

Fire Loss Small

HAMITLON, O.—J. W. Crierm, manager of the Criterion theatre, which has been closed for several days following a fire in the projection booth, has finished repairing the damage and reopened the house. The loss, it is stated, was almost entirely confined to the projection room.

Destroyed by Blaze

NEWMAN, CAL.—The Gustine theatre was destroyed recently by fire which originated in the projection room.
Pathe Plans Further Expansion
Of Activities in Feature Field

Paul Brunet, States Announcement Will be Made Soon of New Popular Star and the Acquisition of Several Big Productions

(Particular to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, March 23.—The plans of Pathe Exchange, Inc., for features and big specials have been amplified so that within a short time an announcement will be made of the acquisition of some very pretentious productions and the listing of a popular beauty of the screen.

Pathe's feature business has grown to such an extent that ambitious plans are in the making to meet future development. Blanche Sweet, it is promised, will be seen in productions greater than her previous successes on the Pathe program.

Predict Success for "Sherry"
The coming production of "Sherry," the Edgar Lewis second special, is de-ciated to be every bit as strong a feature as "Other Men's Shoes."

J. Stuart Blackton characterizes his coming production, "The Blood Barrier," as a master melodramatic achievement.

Included also in the announcement are "Rio Grande," an Edwin Carewe production, adapted from Augustus Thomas; stage play; Frank Keenan in "Dollar for Dollar," and Max Linder in "The Little Cafe," an adaptation from the Klaw & Erlanger success of the same name.

Rumor Gives Brunet Laugh
Paul Brunet, vice-president and general manager of Pathe Exchange, Inc., laughed when his attention was brought to a rumor that his organization contemplated dispensing with features.

"The very idea of it is absurd," he said, "and especially at the time when the feature business with us has reached such unusual proportions and is still growing while thousands of exhibitors look to Pathe as the only really independent distributing organization."

"Our feature business has passed all expectations and our plans of expansion consider only the best possible productions with stars whose names are potent and directors whose names are a guaranty of skilled picture making upon what has already been achieved.
I think I am safe in predicting that the coming year will be marked by a succession of brilliant feature successes."

Producers Seek to Induce Frank Timney
To Play for Screen

Frank Timney, who won laurels as a black face comedian, is being persuaded into entering pictures so dropping the burnt cork makeup in "Sometimes," which is playing in Chicago.

Representatives of four producers have been in the Windy City endeavors-ing to persuade of Timney. When approached on the subject, he said:

"It is my first bid for the 'litteles.'
They used to laugh when I came on their doorsteps and say that 'black face' was a froth and for me to get away.
And they were right. The expressionless cast has not been lost under the burnt cork kills it for pictures.

The plot of 'Sometimes' forced me to come out in my natural color and I was afraid of it at first, but as it turns out both on the stage and from the film man it was the luckiest thing that ever happended to me, and besides I liked the work."

"I'm going to find out if these stories of Mary Pickford's salary are true. The producers talk like it now and it makes my heart go out to listen to them.

"My part will be quiet, homely, funny roles and there won't be horses or llor or bull farm, it won't be box office.
That's all I am sure of right now."

Signs of Spring at The Christie Studios

The lion which bit his trainer in the "Bringing Up Father" comedy has been given a dose of sulphur.

radishes to the studio to eat for lunch.

Johnny Ray has his wife drive down and take him home for lunch.

Col. Moore is getting up a Butterfield's Regent

Attracts Great Crowd
At Initial Performance

FLINT, MICH.—The latest addition to the W. S. Butterfield circuit of Michigan theatres, the Regent, opened on March 19, the evening recording record-breaking crowds. At times the lines in front of the box office extended almost two blocks.

Erected at a cost of more than $200,- 000, the beauty, comfort and appointments of the new picture playhouse elicted much favorable comment. The Regent seats 1,600 persons, and the main door and 200 in mezzanine boxes.

Beautiful Decorations

John Eberson, the architect, employed the Andilusian Spanish motif in the interior surroundings. The foyer re-resents the sunny walk of a Spanish building with the auditorium designed to resemble the shady outside walls of a typical Spanish patio. A long lobby finished in marble and walnut is lighted by twenty artistic candelabra of Spanish design and provides an entrance of exceptional attractiveness.

The theatre will play first-run Paramount Artcraft and First National attractions. The interior is made up of Wallace Reid in "Double Speed," Larry Semon in "The Grocery Store" and Martin Johnson's "Home of the Hula Hula" and "Topies of the Day." The Regent employs an orchestra of fifteen members under the direction of Pransonia Barbere. John Percott is the house manager.

Many Congratulatory Notes

Hundreds of congratulatory telegrams were received from men prominent in the film industry, a lot of them giving pages to Schenectady. Floral gifts lined the lobby and foyer. The invited guests present at the inaugural numbered more than 200, including Detroit exchange managers, film salesmen, and managers of Butterfield theatres throughout the state.

Butterfield gave an six clock dinner given at Dresden hotel in honor of out-of-town guests. Members of Mr. Butterfield's immediate staff took part in the banquet. Edward C.
Beatty, general manager; Arthur Frue-denberg, general press representative; D. S. Barnwell, general manager; and Shorty Deman, vaudeville booking manager.

The acquisition of the Regent theatre grants Mr. Butterfield five theatres in Flint, three devoted to pictures, one to vaudeville and one playing resident stock and an occasional road attraction.

W. E. Keefe will Supervise
Production for Lifeograph

W. E. Keefe, formerly manager of production for D. W. Griffith, has been appointed general manager of producing supervising screen plays to be made by American Lifeograph Company, Portland, Ore. W. H. McMonies is president of the company.

The first productions to be made at the companies studio will be two-reel comedies in which Keefe will be featured with Clara Morris, and Genevieve Knapp. The productions will be directed by Bob Gray, formerly with Keefe and later during the making of the Hamilton series. The stories are the joint productions of W. E. Keefe and Eva Sturtevant. According to Mr.
Keefe the comedies will be free from the slapstic variety.
Prizia Will Produce Long Subjects
In Color for Distribution by Select Lewis J. Selznick Will Supervise Adaptation of Famous Novels and Plays by Color Process—Inventor Perfects New Camera

Features of five reels or more in length are to be produced by the Prizia color process, according to an announcement made by Lewis J. Selznick. The statement also said that all Prizia subjects, heretofore handled by Republic, would be distributed by Select.

Mr. Selznick will have active supervision of the color picturization of famous novels and plays by Prizia Company, of which he is president. Subjects of one and two reel length also will be produced by Prizia as in the past.

Camera Is Perfected
In making his announcement, Mr. Selznick said that Prizia pictures can be projected through the regulation machines without special equipment. Mr. Selznick declared that William Van Doren Kelly, inventor of the color process, had perfected his camera so that the fringing of colors had been eliminated.

"I have watched with great interest the progress of the Prizia color pictures since their introduction on the market," said Mr. Selznick, "and the evolution of the new process has shown that I realized that it was color photography which would register the high water mark in the field of achievement of motion pictures."

Time Has Arrived
"When William Van Doren Kelly, the inventor of the Prizia color process, told me he had perfected his camera to that state of efficiency where the fringing of colors had been eliminated and besides the filtering through the lenses of the seven primary colors together with shade variation had been accomplished as evidenced by test pictures, I knew the day had arrived to secure this wonder of wonders as a fitting accompaniment to my studio productions."

"No man in the industry has been a greater scoff'er of color photography as applied to motion pictures than I. I have seen them come and go, but when the Prizia officials showed me a two-reel dramatic picture, "The Little Match Girl," with Madge Evans in the star role, every doubt and every one of my pet arguments against color motion pictures were swept into a cocked hat. Here was a picture that not alone had all the -strength of the black and white, but the highly added novelty of perfectly applied color through the optical process."

Meeker Is Shifted
Although no changes have been announced in the personnel of the Prizia organization, it is made known that George Meeker, who has been general sales manager of Republic Distributing Corporation, has been delegated by Mr. Selznick to the Prizia forces, where he will serve in an executive capacity.

In closing his announcement, Mr. Selznick said: "Prizia holds a unique and distinct place in the world, and we intend to make it still more valuable to exhibitors. There is an improvement of any kind possible, the industry can rest assured we will not neglect it, and I believe there is much that can be done and accomplished for the exhibitor and the public."

Charles Ray Completes
New Studio Personnel
With the addition of several well-known technical men to his studio staff, Charles Ray has completed the organization of his working personnel and begun work upon the introductory details incident to production at his new Los Angeles studio.

Director Jerome Storm, Chester Lyons, cameraman, Wesley Gilmour, studio manager, Isabel Johnston, continuity writer, George E. MacCormak, formerly of Famous Players, chief of electrical department, and Frank Ormston, head of the art department, are those who will aid in the making of his payoffs for the first national schedule.

Pandora Is Completing
"The Crucifix of Destiny"
T. J. Shirley, manager of the Pandora Productions, announces that the company is just finishing the final scenes of their first production, "The Crucifix of Destiny," at their Boyle Heights studio.

R. D. Armstrong is directing the story, which is a modern drama with some unusual settings. Wheeler Dryden, son of Leo Dryden, "The Forgotten Woman," and composer of "The Miner's Dream of Home," is being featured.

Associated with Mr. Armstrong, beside Mr. Shirley, are H. E. Wagner, C. I. Barber, cameraman, and Agnes Parsons, continuity and title writer. Miss Parsons also is handling the publicity for the company.

Miss Young to Star in Pinero's "Mid-Channel"
Joseph I. Schnitzer, general manager of Equity Pictures Corporation, which distributes the products of Clara Kimball Young and other Garson creations, announces the purchase from Sir Arthur Wing Pinero, of the world's screen -right of the play "Mid-Channel," in which Ethel Barrymore appeared on the stage.

"Mid-Channel" will constitute the final of the first series of Equity's Clara Kimball Young specialts, of which "For the Soul of Rafael" is to be the third."
Rothacker Will Make Greiver Educational Films Are Now Being Made For Publication Every Other Week

Watterson R. Rothacker has arranged to produce for Greiver Distributing Corporation a series of educational films, which will be published every other week under the name "Greiver Educational Weekly." Several of the films are being made and will be issued soon.

Scope of the pictures will be broad. They will deal with the high cost of living, relations between employer and workers and other problems of the day. Some of the pictures will be on scientific subjects and others will have a strong historical flavor.

Mr. Rothacker has set a high goal for his production department in the making of these pictures. First, the pictures must have high educational value, such as will add to the store of knowledge of the picture patrons who view them. At the same time they must be highly entertaining, despite the fact that they are instructive. The production experts must put artistry into the production of them, and in the laboratory they must receive the same skilled workmanship as is given longer subjects.

Simeon Greiver, president of the Greiver Distributing Corporation said: "I consider that the Greiver Distributing Corporation was very fortunate in securing Rothacker production of its educational films. It means that the pictures will be the best obtainable."

Cosmopolitan Scenario Writers Move to Studio

The entire scenario department of Cosmopolitan Productions, under the direction of William Le Baron and Julian Johnson, has moved from the general offices at 729 Seventh avenue, New York, to the studio at 127th street and Second avenue. This transfer was made in order to bring the scenario and production departments in closer working contact, and Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager, believes that it will serve to bring about a greater efficiency and a correlation of effort and energy.

The scenario department at present consists of William Le Baron and Julian Johnson with Miss Frances Marion, Adrian Johnson, J. W. McNab, Ruth Fellows, Faith Smith, Dorothy Farlow, Frank Beresford and M. M. Stearns as associate editors.

Suspend Publication of "Progress-Advance"

The Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has discontinued publication of Progress Advance, the house organ published by that organization for a number of years and popularly regarded as the most complete publication of its kind being distributed.

The publication is rather well known to exhibitors generally, owing to the unusual efforts put forth to make it a high class periodical. An unusually large staff was employed in its compiling and an unusually wide range of subjects were treated.
Eileen Percy Will Support Fox Stars
Placed Under Contract for Six Months—To Play With Tom Mix in “Untamed”

Eileen Percy has been placed under a six-months' contract by William Fox to play the leading feminine rolls opposite various Fox stars.

The first production in which Miss Percy will figure under her new contract is the screen adaptation of the Max Brand novel, “The Untamed,” in which Tom Mix will star.

There is a hint from the Fox studio that Miss Percy will climb still farther up the ladder of screen fame before the lapse of many months. Her latest picture was “Leave It To Me,” in which she played opposite William Russell.

She has appeared with almost a score of the popular male stars in roles which varied from the strongest drama to the lightest comedy and farce. In each line she has acquitted herself with equal suc-

“Literary Era” in Pictures
Is at Hand, Says DeMille

William DeMille, director of Paramount Arclight productions, says that the screen drama of today has reached the threshold of its third great stage of development—“the literary era.” By that phrase, he says, “I mean that the photoplay now is ready to develop a literature of its own.”

“No longer will it be necessary,” he declares, “to adapt novels and stage plays to the needs of the screen. Within the next few years, we will see many of the great writers of the world writing directly for the screen.”

Mr. DeMille has just returned to Los Angeles after spending some time in New York. He says that his mission to the East was to interest well-known playwrights and novelists in the present and future of the screen.

Sales Methods Discussed at First Of Series of Universal Gatherings

The first of a series of gatherings of Universal exchange managers was held in New York on March 22 at Hotel Astor. Those in attendance represented branch offices east of the Mississipi river and north of the Ohio.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, is calling these meetings to perfect the organization's sales machine. In New York, plans for the next season's sales campaign were discussed.

Given Exploitation Points

On March 21 the branch officials were given a showing of "The Virgin of Stamboul," Priscilla Dean's new production, at B. S. Moss' Broadway theatre. Means of handling this feature were discussed at the meeting, and publicity men present were given pointers for exploitation. Carl Laemmlle and other Universal officials addressed the managers. A dinner was one of the features of the convention.

Among the managers present were A. A. Schmidt, Cleveland; George Uffner and Charles Rosenzeg of New York; F. S. Hopkins, Buffalo; Herman Stern, Pittsburgh; E. J. Smith, Cleveland; Louis Baum, Cincinnati; W. D. Ward, Detroit; Ralph Abbett, Indianapolis; Edward Golden and W. H. Hill of Boston, and Vernon Carrick of Philadelphia.

To Meet in Chicago

Mr. Berman will call the second convention at the Blackstone hotel in Chicago. This conference will include all exchange managers under George Burke and W. A. Chase, the two district managers for the midwest.

Among those to assemble in Chicago will be I. L. Leserman, Chicago; George Levine, Milwaukee; Edgar B. Haines, Des Moines; H. F. Leiholtz, Omaha;

Joe Roderick, Minneapolis; Sam Benjamin, Oklahoma City; Barney Rosenthal, St. Louis, and J. H. Calvert, Kansas City, Mo.

Los Angeles Chosen

The third convention will be held in Los Angeles, in which center Mr. Berman will call the following managers: Eugene Gerhase, Denver; G. A. Hager, Salt Lake City; C. A. Nathan, San Franccisco; C. L. Theuerkant, Los Angeles, as well as representatives from the southern states.

The final convention will be held in Seattle, it is contemplated, and will include Herman Lersch of Butte, Montana; V. H. Schimbach, Seattle; C. W. Koerner, Portland, Ore., and Wallace Potter of Spokane.

Upon his return from the Pacific Coast after these conventions, Mr. Berman will announce the particulars of Universal's fall 1920 campaign.

Report Heavy Booking on Leonard's "The Evil Eye"

Frank G. Hall, president of Hallmark Pictures Corporation, announces that "I am pushing our laboratories to top speed, working them day and night, in an effort to have every branch supplied with enough prints of "The Evil Eye," starring Benny Leonard, bookings for which are reported to be of record proportions.

The serial by 'Roy L. McCord will be published in New York on March 22, and throughout the balance of the country on March 29. Mr. Hall expects to have 200 prints ready by the publica-

TOM MIX, in "Desert Love," hits the high and low spots hard in his greatest stunt picture ever produced by William Fox. Here is what he does, (a) Tom Mix, without a gun, starts to rescue the girl imprisoned in old mine mill; (b) Lassoes old tree and swings across chasm; (c) Pitches headlong down precipice; (d) Lands on trestle and races toward the mill; (e) Runs 15 feet through window frame, 50 feet above ground; (f) Lands in room and has fierce battle with villain who throws him through window, after Mix has tossed the other's gun away to the girl; (g) Mix lands on shed roof and rolls off to roof below, falling from there to ground unconscious; (h) Discovers the gun and with mighty effort shoots at villain in window; (i) Crawls to leader pipe and climbs up side of mill; (j) Reaches roof and moves to edge; (k) Swings over edge of roof down into room once more to find that his last shot had reached its mark and the girl is safe.

Select Puts Selznick Pictures in 1,500 Houses Within Eight Weeks

Selznick productions have been added to the programs in 1,500 additional theatres throughout the country in the last eight weeks, according to an announcement by Lewis J. Selznick, president, in revealing the accomplishments of Select's sales department. In the majority of exchange territories he says, there are no more than three theatres that do not now present Selznick stars.

Cash Bonuses Given

As an incentive to the Select branches and salesmen to surpass all records during the past eight weeks, cash bonuses were offered by Mr. Selznick. Although figures are not available, it is declared that each branch acquired itself nobly, and the managers and salesmen reaped individual honors.

Recent indication from the branches are that the Selznick News reel, which will flicker across the screen first on Easter Sunday, is marking up regular dates in all sections of the country. Among the representative theatres which will present the reel are the Strand, New York; Sid Grauman's picture palace in Los Angeles; the Clemmer in Seattle, and the Colonial in Indianapolis. The Regent, Buffalo; Temple, Toledo; Dome, Youngstown; Crystal, Indianapolis; Alamo, Louisville; Regent, Rochester, also have booked the reel. Additional gratifying reports are expected to be made at the annual convention which begins at Hotel Astor in New York on April 5 for a run of six days. Republic Distributing Corporation also will be represented.

What Record Proves

Speaking of the sales record made by the Select force, Charles Rogers, director of sales, said: "It proves conclusively that our sales organization is not only the best that can be assembled, but that we have the proper pictures for the exhibitor, whether his theatre is large or small, in New York or in a country hamlet. Our star production, our all-star production and our shorter subjects are the composite of art, skill, experience and showmanship, a combination which no exhibitor can afford to overlook if he is in business for not only this year but next year as well.

"That the Selznick organization is fast becoming foremost in the hearts and box offices of the entire country is but another tribute to the live-wire, get-up-and-go spirit which is so well represented by Mr. Selznick. His motto is well known: "I consider myself a failure unless the exhibitor is a success." And success, in the case of the eight weeks' record just marked up, means even greater success for the exhibitors concerned."

Irma Harrison Completes Exterior Scenes in South

Irma Harrison, who last was seen as leading woman for Gareth Hughes in "The Red Vipers" and opposite Johnny Dooley in the first of the series of Johnny Dooley comedies, has returned to New York from Georgia where she finished the exterior scenes in the Buffalo Film Company's third special independent production, "The Daughter of Devil Dan," a story of the Moonshine country.

Miss Harrison is supported by Kempston Greene in the leading role. The star is of the brumette ingenue type and is a dandy of note. She now is being considered for a forthcoming Selznick production.

Predict Record Attraction

The initial publication of National Picture Theatres, Inc. "Just a Wife," will be a record box office attraction, according to the manager of the Regent theatre, Rochester, N. Y., who presented the picture recently in his playhouse.

Censorship Fight in Bay State Continues

Defeat of Measure Advocated By Picture Committee Is Predicted

BOSTON, MASS.—Outcome of the censorship question in Massachusetts remains in doubt, with present developments pointing to the defeat of the measure sponsored by the so-called state committee on motion pictures.

A sub-committee of the joint committee on mercantile affairs has been named to consider the matter and, if advisable, to report an amended bill. Two hearings already have been held. Proponents of the state bill have been well financed, and they have made a systematic fight, working through the women's clubs. The most active supporter of censorship, it is said, is a candidate for a position as censor if the bill becomes a law, and that, according to the state incentive of the fight. Not all of the women have supported censorship, and there were several well-known organizations which appeared at the hearing against it.

Harry F. Campbell, Boston manager of the Fox Film Corporation, has been chairman of the committee which has been opposing the bill, and which has coordinated the activities of the exchange managers and exhibitors. William A. Brady, president of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, has given the situation his personal attention. The industry has been receiving splendid support from organized labor in this state. Jack S. Connelly, Washington representative of the National Association, whose home is in Boston, has been working with the committee.

New Role for Fox Star Suggested by "Hell Ship"

William Fox announces that Madlaine Traverse's portrayal in "The Hell Ship" has convinced him that the star's ability reaches beyond the confines of the drawing room, and that in the future she will be given a type of role different from those she has played in the past.

The first of the new parts selected for Mizz Traverse will be found in the production upon which she has just started work at the studios in Hollywood, Calif. The story is known by the working title, "The Spirit of Good," and offers the star the role of a music hall singer. The story deals with the upturn of the character of Mizz Traverse to draw on her versatility of character design and make-up.

Denison Clift is the author-director. The principals to Mizz Traverse include Frederick Stanton, Clo King, Dick LaReno and L. Hahn. The story is adapted from the original of Clifford Howard and Robert E. Sherwood, and the scenario is the work of Mr. Clift.

“Sex” Featuring Louise Glaum Will Show in Larger Theatres April 11

Hodkinson Launches! An Intensive Campaign to Advertise J. Parker Read, Jr.’s, Latest Picture-Prints on Hand

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that “Sex,” J. Parker Read, Jr.’s latest production starring Louise Glaum, will have its first run in the larger cities of the country on April 11. Prints already have been shipped to thirty-two branches. Trade showings were held in a number of the cities on March 25. “Sex” is from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan. Fred Niblo, through an arrangement with Thomas H. Ince, directed for Mr. Read.

Selective Distribution

Hodkinson has launched an intensive advertising campaign. The production will be distributed under the so-called selective system, whereby each picture receives the attention of specialists and is handled as though it were the only one being issued by the company.

Lithographs have been drawn by MaDan and Michelson under the supervision of Harry Lewis, head of the Pathe art department.

Can Advance Prices

The picture is protected against rush showings and imperfect exploitation, it is said, by being turned over only to such first run theatres as guarantee its exclusive and liberal showmanship of the highest grade of advertising of the most expansive character. Each pre-issue showman who gives it such treatment receives an ample period of protection, during which time no other exhibitor anywhere near him can offer the production. This enables an advance in prices.

“Sex” is described as a drama of the sorrow and suffering; a drama of experience. In color, in crowd and in costume, it at times has the touch and richness of pageantry, it is said, while other scenes portray two women fighting the battle of their lives for their happiness.

Miss Glaum’s supporting cast includes Myrtle Stedman, many times starred on the screen; Peggy Pearce, Irving Cummings and William Conklin.

Edgar Lewis Finishes

Latest Film “Sherry”

After four months of work in his Los Angeles studio, Edgar Lewis has completed his latest production, “Sherry.” Following the first showing of the picture, the Pathe officials were of the opinion that the picture will win recognition as one of the strongest and most human of the year.

Some beautiful effects have been achieved in photography, it is said, and the constructed sets are rich. Pat O’Malley is “Sherry,” a young Irish-American prodigal who inherits a great fortune and spends it. In his little town in the Central West, he is seen scattering his last few quarters to the children and buying a drink with his last dime. When absolutely broke, he hears the scorn of the town, but when he hears himself called the town drunkard, his pride is touched, and he starts out to show the world what he is made of.

Robertson-Cole Series

To Star Dustin Farnum

That Dustin Farnum, most recently seen in United Picture Theatres of America productions, “The Light of Western Stars,” “A Man In the Open” and “The Corsican Brothers,” will be starred in Robertson-Cole specials to be offered during the next thirty-two weeks is the gist of an announcement from that company.

Dustin Farnum’s productions, it is believed, will be similar in character to those in which he has been starred in the past, and although no announcement is made as to the title of his first play-work to be begun immediately.

Audience Sees Filming of “Man From Make Believe”

Pantages’ theatre, Los Angeles, was used by William J. Bowman, director, for the playhouse scenes required in the script of “The Man From Make Believe,” William Desmond’s latest starring vehicle under the Jesse D. Hampson banner.

Arrangements were made with Carl J. Walker, manager of the theatre, whereby the patrons for the last show remained in their seats and were taken by the Hampton camera. Those who remained were privileged to stay through the night and see the actual taking of a motion picture on the Pantages’ stage.

Next Neilan Picture

Is Promised for May

Title Not Yet Announced and Nothing Is Available Regarding Theme.

Marshall Neilan’s second independent production, about which very little is known publicly, will be published early in May by First National, according to a recent announcement. Mr. Neilan’s first independent endeavor, “The River’s End,” is breaking box office records throughout the country.

The title of his latest production has not been revealed and the theme has not been made available to the public. It was stated at the Neilan offices in New York that the picture offers a title and a series of situations that should place it in the front ranks as a box office attraction.

Matt Moore has the leading role in this film. In the principal feminine role is Marjorie Daw, whose work in “The River’s End” was highly commendable. The part she plays in her newest film is entirely different from that portrayed in the Curwood subject and is said to be even better fitted for her accomplishments as an actress.

The film is receiving its final treatment at the Rothacker laboratories in Chicago and a sample print is expected in New York soon.

Meantime the Neilan organization in Hollywood, Cal., is busily engaged on the production of the third independent production for First National.

“Flying A” Drama Is Booked By Clergyman

The Rev. J. A. Killian, Melrose, Minn., booked “The Valley of Tomorrow,” an American Film Company drama, for a showing in his church auditorium.
Selznick-Republic Meeting Program
Filled With Business and Pleasure

Partial plans for the second annual convention of Select and Republic branch managers, which will be held in New York during the week of April 5, have been announced by Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager of Select, who is in charge of convention arrangements.

The plans so far made indicate a bigger and more important convention than the one held last year. The present plans call for the undivided attention of the visiting managers during every hour of their New York sojourn. With daily business sessions, trips to the Selznick Bronx and Fort Lee studios, organization luncheons and dinners, theater parties and after-theater roof-frolics, the visiting delegates will carry back to their home towns the memories of a busy and interesting time in the world's metropolis.

Announcement to Follow

Although additional plans will be announced later, the present schedule of action for the first three days of the convention follows:

Monday, April 5 — The first session will convene in Hotel Astor at 11 o'clock in the morning with Mr. Morris presiding. An organization luncheon will be held at 2:30 in a private dining room, and following this a trip to the Fort Lee studio will be made. An organization theater party will be held in the evening.

Tuesday, April 6 — A business meeting will be held in Hotel Astor from 10 o'clock to 12:30. Luncheon recess following until 2:30. Business session from 2:30 until 5:30. In the evening a theater party will be followed by an after-theater supper at the Ziegfeld midnight frolic atop the Amsterdam roof.

Issue Paper Daily

Wednesday, April 7 — A business session will be held from 10 a.m. until 12:30 noon. The luncheon recess will end at 2 p.m., and the afternoon business session will last until 5:30. Following this at 7 in the evening, an organization dinner will be held. A daily convention issue of the Selznick "Brain Exchange" will be distributed immediately following the close of each morning’s business session.

"The Terror" for Tom Mix

William Fox has selected "The Terror" as the next starring vehicle for Tom Mix. "Cherub Divine," by Sewell Ford, has been purchased for adaptation by Mr. Fox. Shirley Mason, who scored a success in "Her Elephant Man," has started another story by the same author, Pearl Doles Bell. "Love's Harvest" is the title.

Announce Early Issuance

Alias Billy M. Leighton

We offer here a likeness of none other than the celebrated Billy M. Leighton, a prominent figure in vaudeville circles about the time the boys came back from the Cuban campaign. Having been requested to conduct an inquiry to reveal the present whereabouts of Billy Leighton we carefully combed over vaudeville records back over a period of several years, collecting meanwhile a lot of interesting information.

It appears that the hero of our sketch after several years of vaudeville tours of the country was waited upon by a committee representing mothers and other near relatives of an extensive group of debutantes and requested to cross their towns off the list in order that the debutantes might resume the tranquil existence which was theirs before the noted charmer of the variety stage appeared on the scene.

Kindly acceding to the request, the vaudeville stage lost the presence of this personage. We next pick up the trail in Boston, Mass., where our hero is directing the destinies of a group of theatres in New England. Next he takes a fling at grand opera and finally he gravitates to the well-known picture business.

Now and having discarded the habiliments of vaudeville and even the stage name, we find our hero at the present time none other than William H. Leahy, publicist for the Anita Stewart and Mildred Harris Chaplin productions.

Directors Plan Big Developments For United Picture Theatres, Inc.

Boards of Trade Will Be Established in Exchanges And “War Chest” Will Be Created to Buy in Open Market Independent Productions

An intensified program for operation of United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., was mapped out at the two-day quarterly meeting in Chicago on March 16 and 17 of officials and directors of the organization. Expansion in the field of distribution, as well as in membership, was planned with the creation of facilities for carrying out the proposals.

Outlining of a program of productions for the next six months was accomplished, and officials estimated that the monetary outlay for such would be in excess of $10,000,000. The first four publications of this year were announced by J. A. Berst, president, as: “The Cossican Brothers,” with Bise and Farnum; “Women Men Forget,” with Mollie King; “The Eternal Mother,” with Florence Reed, and “Face to Face,” with all-star cast.

Given Power to Act

After discussing the acquisition of another large distributing company, the directors placed in the hands of the officers and executive committee full powers to act should negotiations be successful before the next quarterly meeting in June.

Formation of a so-called “war chest” for the purchase of independent productions was sanctioned by the directors. This constitutes the purchase of every franchise holder of three pictures in advance.

Establish Trade Boards

Boards of trade in exchange centers will be established by the organization with the announced purpose of making a representation of 100 per cent of the various districts. That 3,000 theatres throughout the country now are franchise and stockholders in United was the statement of Mr. Berst. He prophesied that within a short time the 3,000 mark would be reached.

The president also informed the directors that billboard space in thirty of the larger cities had been contracted for so that the company might advertise nationally its productions for the coming year. The contracts, he declared, represent an expenditure of approximately $600,000.

Name Executive Committee

Additional directors elected were H. T. Treffer, Davenport, la.; Abe Goo die, Portland, Me.; W. H. Linton, Utica, N. Y., and S. M. Boas, Fall River, Mass.

On the second day of the meeting a luncheon attended by officials, directors, representatives of the trade press and Chicagoans interested in the industry, was held at Hotel Morrison, where the business sessions also were held. Directors were delighted with the private showing of “Women Men Forget.”

Luncheon Guests

At the luncheon were Mr. Berst; Mr. Goldsmith; C. C. Johnson, secretary; Neil M. Birk, auditor; Jack O’Toole, Chicago manager, and Mrs. O’Toole, Herman Hertz, assistant treasurer; W. H. Linton, Hippodrome, Utica, N. Y.; I. W. Rodgers, Criterion theatre. Popular Bluff, Mo.; A. C. Hettesheimer, Orpheum theatre, Cincinnati, O.; George W. American Legion Post

Presents Pin to Mix

Tom Mix, Fox star, with a long service record under the stars and stripes to his credit, was honored by Melvin Smyth Post of the American Legion while at Sonora in the Sierra mountains, where the exteriors of his latest picture, “No Limit Carson,” were made. At a reception given in his honor, Mix was presented with a nugget pin by Melvin Smyth Post. The pin was made from a nugget taken from the famous O’Hara Pocket mine, and is one of the largest taken from the pit in recent years.

G. P. Morgan, superintendent of schools, whose father was one of the original Forty-Niners, and who has lived in Sonora all his life, made the presentation speech.

Marshall Neilan Will Take Company Abroad to Produce Foreign Subjects

Young Director-Producer Will Adapt Stories in the Exact Locale of the Plot—Harry Ham Sails to Prepare for Activities

Marshall Neilan, one of the youngest of the independent director-producers in the industry, will go to Europe in the near future to produce several foreign subjects in the different locales in England, France, Belgium and Spain offered by the plots of the stories to be adapted.

In making these plans public, it is announced further that Mr. Neilan will take an entire producing unit abroad with him, including various well-known players, among whom will be Marjorie Daw, who has just achieved a great success in "The River's End."

First Abroad Since War

Mr. Neilan will be the first independent producer to take a company abroad since the war, it is said. In his absence from his Hollywood, Cal., studios, the various American productions on which he now is working will be completed according to arrangements made before he leaves.

To attend to advance preparations for Mr. Neilan's activities abroad, Harry Ham, his personal foreign representative, sailed on the Adriatic March 20. In speaking of Mr. Neilan's foreign plans, he said: "The American motion picture public will welcome foreign backgrounds in motion pictures. For years we have had practically nothing in the way of foreign-produced pictures. With pictures offering the totally different locations obtainable only abroad, we open a new class of film entertainment since the war started.

"We intend to do foreign stories, staged in the exact locales of the plots. An entire producing unit will accompany Mr. Neilan, including a number of very prominent players. I am leaving on the Adriatic and among my duties abroad will be the preparation of advance details affecting Mr. Neilan's activities there. The present plan is to have the entire company make the trip with Mr. Neilan's full knowledge of the many arrangements we have in mind can be perfected before then."

Mr. Ham stated that Mr. Neilan would in the near future announce further details concerning his foreign trip, including the names of the stories he is to produce, which he said will be of international prominence. "We feel that we will have some very interesting information for exhibitors shortly," said Mr. Ham, "and realize fully the great opportunity of the fertile territory afforded us."

A foreign representative to Mr. Neilan, Mr. Ham is particularly suited for his work abroad, having spent most of his life there. He has been connected with the motion picture industry for some eight years and during his sojourn in Europe as an officer in the R. F. C. had many opportunities to study motion picture conditions abroad since the war.

Joseph A. Shaffer and Co.
To Build Palais Royal

Joseph A. Shaffer, formerly associated with Ascher Bros., Chicago, has organized a corporation known as Joseph A. Shaffer & Co. and perfected preparations for the erection of a theatre to be known as the Palais Royal at Kedzie avenue and Ainslee street. Work is to be started at once and the opening is scheduled for early fall.

It is said that Mr. Shaffer also plans the erection of another big theatre in the vicinity of Sheridan road and Devon avenue, the seating capacity of this structure to be 4,300.

Sculptor Creates Two Statutes for Fox Film

G. H. Mulldorfer, artist and sculptor, with studios in Los Angeles, has been engaged by Fox Film Corporation to create several figures and groups for Gladys Brockwell's latest screen vehicle which is now in course of making.

"The Mother of His Children" is the name of the production. In it Barbara Stanwyck, Deely, the author, has woven a romance around two pieces of statutory. Mulldorfer's first piece is an heroic figure of "Eve" patterned after the sculptor's own daughter and the second will be a group entitled "The Mother of His Children."

Barrymores Will Aid
In Raising Legion Fund

Ethel, Lionel and John Barrymore will appear in the benefit performance for the Rankin Drew American Legion, at the New Amsterdam theatre on Sunday evening, April 11. The occasion is to raise funds for a gymnasium for the post.

The S. Rankin Drew Post, composed of theatrical and motion picture people, was named for a member of the famous Drew-Barrymore family, S. Rankin Drew, a son of the late Sidney Drew, who made the supreme sacrifice in France and was the first American actor killed in the world war.

Colvin W. Brown Resigns
To Join David P. Howells

Colvin W. Brown has resigned as assistant treasurer of Clark-Cornelius Corporation, and is now associated with David P. Howells, Inc. Mr. Brown formerly was assistant manager of advertising for the Mutual Film Corporation. He succeeded Terry Ramsaye as chief of the advertising department when the latter resigned to organize Kinograms. Mr. Brown continues in charge of all Mutual advertising and publicity during the time that concern functioned under its merged title of Exhibitor's Mutual Film Corporation.

"Young Giant" in Comedy

"Buddy" Post, a "young giant," will be featured in a new series of two-reel comedies by the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. He will be used in "The Deep Purple," now being filmed at the Paragon studio, Jersey City, N. J. The production will be distributed by Realart.

ISAAC WOLPER (sitting), president of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, and R. A. Walsh, director of the Consolidated, will be used in "The Deep Purple."
A GENUINE SERVICE

Usefulness is the final test of all things. It is a law of nature that the useful shall survive—and the useful only.

Fish in the Mammoth Cave, one of Kentucky's wonder spots, have eyes grown over with flesh—nature having ceased to nourish organs that are useless in darkness.

Man discarded the sword when gunpowder was discovered.

Exhibitors read this department because it is useful to them in the operation of their theatres. We know beyond the faintest doubt that it must be kept useful if it is to continue being read.

Absolute proof of this usefulness, proof such as no department of like nature has ever presented to its readers, is to be found in a simple service that was rendered recently.

Stanley Chambers, of the Palace Theatre, Wichita, Kans., contributed an advertisement consisting wholly of institutional copy. We reproduced it in the issue of February 21, to illustrate an article entitled "House Copy."

Two weeks after that issue went into the mail we received an exact adaptation of the advertisement from H. G. Ramsey, manager of the Royal Theatre, El Dorado, Kans., another steady contributor.

Usefulness is the final test of all things.

The advertisements used by Mr. Chambers and Mr. Ramsey are reproduced herewith. They have been reduced in the reproduction for illustrative purposes. But the copy is readable and we repeat the recommendation made in the previous article that exhibitors everywhere adapt it to their own purposes.

Mr. Chambers, from whom such a recommendation properly should come, writes as follows in a recent communication:

Involves Adaptation

"We wish to thank you kindly for the favorable comments you have made upon our advertisements from time to time and want you to understand that these compliments and criticisms are appreciated by us. We do not send our work from any standpoint of egotism, nor because we crave words of praise, but because we pick up splendid ideas from your department that help us make better ads and on this account we feel that if any of our advertising is worth while, other exhibitors should get the benefit of it as long as we are getting the benefit of theirs."

It is the spirit voiced by Mr. Chambers that makes the business of conducting a department of this nature worth while. It is the spirit of cooperation among exhibitors that has always been looked to for the bringing about of ideal business conditions for the theatre man.

Cooperation Will Win

The conventions that have been held in the hope of bringing this spirit to fruition in an exhibitorial organization are without number. Exhibitors have been gathered together from all parts of the country in the hope that their combined efforts in a given direction would effect such improvements as are considered desirable.

Varying success has marked such gatherings. Exhibitorial bodies have been formed and dissolved time and again—but not all of them have been failures.

Conditions have improved.

Conditions Are Better

Conditions are better today than they were one, two or ten years ago. They will continue to improve.

"For That Tired Feeling"

The original Chambers house copy, reproduced from issue of Feb. 21.

Howard G. Ramsey, of the Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan., adapted the copy used by Stanley Chambers, of the Palace, Wichita, and reproduced in this department.
This is a big story.

It is a story of a man with imagination who made something more than a name, a picture, and the story of "Pollyanna," Miss Pickford's United Artists production. It is a story of crowded houses and record business in spite of inclement weather that caused complete suspension of transportation, of an entire school system enthusiastic over the coming of "Pollyanna."

More than that, it is a story of the bringing of gladness into lives that had little of happiness in them, the cradled and the poor.

It is a story of showmanship at its best.

The man who is responsible for all of this is J. F. Clancy, Manager ofPoll's Palace Theatre at Hartford, Conn. Some weeks ago when Mr. Clancy learned of the date of the annual Spring vacation of the Hartford schools he wrote R. C. Miller, who presides over the motion picture department of the Poli interests, to book for him that particular week Miss Pickford in "Pollyanna."

The picture booked, Charles E. Moyer of United Artists Corporation was consulted. Three days later a personal letter from Mr. Clancy went to every teacher of drawing in the public schools of Hartford calling their attention to the coming engagement of Miss Pickford and asking for their cooperation in bringing to a successful conclusion a water color competition among the pupils of the elementary schools. In order to eliminate every possibility of outside assistance the teachers were informed that it was essential that each drawing be signed by the instructor and drawn for the school from which each contestant was registered.

Two days later a special story occupying fully a quarter of a page appeared in the Hartford Sunday Courant announcing the competition. Accompanying the story was a four-column reproduction of a personal letter from Miss Pickford to Mr. Clancy, in which the former donated fifty dollars in prizes for the contest. The following day an attractive four-page folder neatly printed on heavy coated stock was placed in the hands of the children. The folder contained on its front page a conventional picture of Miss Pickford coupled with an announcement of the coming of the famous star in "Pollyanna" and the drawing contest. On the second page was printed a set of rules governing the competition, while on the third was a beautifully drawn drawing of the star as "Pollyanna," attired in a short dress of red and white gingham with sun bonnet to match and in her hands a doll. This was the picture the children were asked to copy and underneath were a few printed suggestions to guide the young artist in the direction of drawing. On the back page was printed Miss Pickford's letter to Mr. Clancy which was used the day previous by the other newspapers.

In one day the "Pollyanna" contest became the talk of the town. Children from all sections of the city came to the Palace box office for a copy of the rules and those who were too young to make the distance sent their parents. Every teacher in all size colors with the fever and many took away with them to ten to fifty copies. The competition grew not only among the kids but the teachers themselves, each school striving to have a representation in the final award. Special classes were conducted in some of the schools after the regular hours, for the kids who had entered the competition. For three weeks the schools hummed with excitement and as one teacher put it, "I had Mary Pickford and 'Pollyanna' intertwined with arithmetic, grammar and domestic science and one class in literature was transformed into 'Midsummer Night'." Dream back in the book case and read them, 'Pollyanna,' and do you remember when the finally the day for the closing of the contest arrived. Three hundred juvenile

"Glad" Spirit Gains

Friends For Showman

The exploitation campaign conducted by J. F. Clancy, manager of Poll's Palace theatre, Hartford, Conn., could be said to be of "Pollyanna," Miss Pickford's United Artists production, aside from the remarkable attendance record it established, started prominently as a maker of friends for the institution he represents.

Is something more than an exploitation campaign. It is a story of showmanship at its best, stamping its sponsors gentlemen as well as women, men, human as well as progressive.

Exhibitors can engage in no better type of work than that detailed in the accompanying story. Every theatre manager in America should read it in its entirety and profit by the truths it makes clear.

her possession were very excellent representations of the young and old but most of them reminded one of the comic valentines which used to adorn the shop window in the Christmas past. This added a comedy touch to the whole affair and some of the teachers who had signed the drawings in a moment of personal enthusiasm in the theatre lobby armed with erasers, one for ink and the other for pencil obliterating their names from those responsible for the most of the drawings.

After reading the above you will doubtless conclude that this was a pretty fine piece of publicity, but this is not all. A week before the coming of "Pollyanna," Mr. Clancy induced the Hartford Times, an evening paper to give, albeit hastily, all of the unfortunate children in Hartford. Six front page stories, each carrying a two-column reproduction of the telling of how the paper hoped to brighten the lives of these little folks by introducing them to the "Glad Land." For they are too young to make the journey to the theatre, the paper called upon owners of automobiles to donate their cars and the came in so fast that there was a big surplus. The party was held on Tuesday morning. Two thousand children crowded into the theatre, many of them to look at a motion picture for the first time in their lives.

From out in Newington came about thirty youngsters from the Cripple Children, most of whom had to be carried into the theatre. There were 500 from the American School for the Deaf; from the Watkinson Farm School about 70; from the Hartford Orphan Asylum there were 500 children ages ranging from three to fifteen. The Village Street Mission sent 300 and the Union for Home Work about the same number. The Organization sent 100, as did the United Jewish Charities. There were other groups from of 10 to 25 which were rounded up by settlement workers making up what was probably the most unique gathering ever assembled in a Hartford theatre.

And all saw "Pollyanna" and Aunt Polly and Mr. Pendleton and Dr. Chilton and Jimmie Bean and all the other characters familiar to the readers of Mrs. Porter's stories, just as though the folks of that New England village where "Pollyanna" lived had stepped out of the book onto the screen. And they saw, too, how "Pollyanna" and her gospel of gladness made a difference in the lives of the other people. The Americans sympathized with Jimmie Bean in his quest for someone to adopt him and when the kindly Mr. Pendleton took him in.

The only thing that added a touch of sadness to the party was the accident to one of the children who had been going along swimmingly until the big automobile ran her down. This was a cruel blow to their childish fancy and as one gazed back over that sea of upturned faces tears glistened in many an eye. But when the specialist from the big city said that "Pollyanna" would never walk again they could restrain themselves no longer and a symphony (continued on page 50)

Success

The success of any exploitation campaign is attested by the actual theatre attendance it creates and can be measured by no other standard. It is to create this attendance that exploitation is employed. That which fails to bring increased patronage is useless. “Pollyanna” broke all previous records at Poli’s Palace theatre, Hartford, Conn.

Water color pictures of Mary Pickford were made by students of the Hartford schools, this display of them in the Palace lobby attracting wide attention.

Crippled children from several institutions were given an invitation showing of “Pollyanna,” the story of the play being especially suited to their interests. Automobiles brought the children to the theatre and returned them to their homes.
The Circle's "Palace of Diversion" Is Best of McCormick's Spectacles

If the fame of the versatile S. Barrett McCormick, managing director of the Circle Theater, Indianapolis, had not been firmly established long ago, his latest stage masterpiece, presented in connection with the photoplay program during the first week in March, would have placed him in the front rank of American showmen. By it he showed again why the Circle has come to be regarded as much an institution in the Hoosier capital as the historic Soldiers and Sailors Monument, which the theater faces, and at the same time gave his imitators something new to shoot at.

Mr. McCormick is progressive. Each time he tries to outdo his preceding efforts and he usually does. That he did this with his most recent achievement there is not the semblance of a doubt. It was one of those settings which uplift all critical valuations and leaves the beholder gasping for adjectives.

For want of something better to describe it, for it ceased to be either a spectacle or a pageant, it has been called "spectaclorama," and it is probable that dictionaries compiled in the future will contain that word. At any rate, the spectacularora is going to be a monthly event at the Circle in the future.

For his photoplay attraction Mr. McCormick had "The River's End," the first of the Marshall Neilan productions of the National Exhibitors Circuit, and with it he found ample opportunity to exercise his widely known ability as an advertiser.

His spectacularora, the specific title of which was "The Palace of Diversion," and so elaborate that it in itself might have been called an evening's entertainment, was the most colorful and pretentious setting that was ever conceived by the McCormick imagination. Not even the famous Mr. Ziegfeld of "Follies" fame, to whom one usually looks for preeminence in such matters, has revealed a stage production more senuously beautiful.

To the business at hand the spectacularora was an Arabian Nights festival of more than the usual McCormick type, which should be sufficiently descriptive for all practical purposes. There were unusual elaborateness and variety, the glare, blaze and glitter, the sophistication, the vaudeville acts, the capable dancers, the haunting melodies and bare limbs. Of color and scenic embellishments there was superficiality and excellence. In all, twenty-five people were involved in the show.

Bizarre and paga it surely was. Mr. McCormick's idea apparently was not so much to please as to shock the senses. Ancient Bagdad, with its sensuous colorfulness, its commingling of black and violet, and its merrie groups of oriental dancers and revelers with their dazzling costumes, offered ample material to startle the eyes.

The stage was set off with intricately designed curtains of irregular outline. They were heavy and dark and formed a frame for great light silk hangings painted with women's faces. A slight opening at the back of the stage also was draped with bright silks showing many pretty girls. On the floor on purple hussacks were two richly clothed and heavily turbaned figures, the guests of the Palace.

As the curtains parted, disclosing a long vista lying between sloping meadows, a corps of dancers appeared. Then the most charming one of all entered—the Violet Princess, who was to have been played by Robert White, a singer with a real voice, directed his melodious attention. In the ballet of color which followed came Mlle. Theo Hewes, magnetic and beautiful. Colors flashed and reflaunched. Then Mlle. Hewes, clothed in the symbolic costume of the white peacock, and assisted by a ballet of young girls and one young man, closed the entertainment with an effective solo dance.

The spectacularora was directed by Mr. McCormick and the scenic work and costumes were designed by Frank Zimmerman, director for the theater. Real money was spent and spent freely in staging the affair and in costuming the army of performers. And it was done with facility and taste. The recent at the close of the week showed that all previous attendance records had been broken. Not only was the weekly record shattered but a new record was hung up at the close of each of the seven days.

In the way of advertising for the photoplay attraction it is doubtful if any other motion picture has ever been so assiduously publicized. The most usual method was employed. The newspapers ran stories about the program, the radio stations were used for a substitute, and there was an advertising campaign throughout the city.

The newspaper advertisements, equal in size to those used for the current attraction, were carried on billboards, posters, window cards and a lobby display.

The newspaper advertising which presented the showings used as an incentive as that which was used after the run began. It proved to be the one great campaign in the history of the theater and one of the most gratifying to the readers. This was clearly demonstrated by the tremendous crowds which stood in line for tickets at each of the opening day's performances.

As illustrations for the advanced newspaper advertising, Mr. McCormick used stills of the principal characters in the story. One was introduced each day. The "introduction" carried with it the phrase "You'll meet him here in the Circle at the showing of "The River's End." These served as a flaming challenge to the curiosity of men and women alike.

Business may be built upon no firmer foundation than the gratification of patrons who are highly satisfied. But there are many of them content themselves with scant satisfaction, not gratification.

Gratification implies gratitude. And gratitude of patron for exhibitor is a source from which springs steady patronage. Mr. McCormick could doubtless have added: "The River's End" last being as pretentiously and satisfied his customers, they would have enjoyed the picture—and credited their enjoyment to the picture.

As he has done it, they have credited their enjoyment in large measure to the theatre, and it is but natural that they should return to the theatre because of the theatre, not because of the attraction which is upon exhibition.

Attractions vary. Occasionally there is one that pleases every patron, but this is not the general rule. More often there is a considerable percentage of the audience that does not enjoy the photoplay. Unless they are compensated for their disappointment they are likely to be certain to give the theatre their patronage the next time they wish an evening's screen entertainment.

These idle stages should be utilized. Not all prearrangements need be as elaborate as Mr. McCormick's. Where the audience has been unused to presentation activities of this sort, the program can be developed to the present stage without much difficulty. It may look difficult, almost impossible, to such exhibitors as have never made an effort of this sort. But sometimes it is a big undertaking. But just as undeniably is it worth the attempt.

And the proof of its advisability lies in the fact that no such an attempt has been recorded as a failure.
Artistic Presentation at the Circle

Scene from S. Barret McCormick's lavish Circle theatre spectacle, "The Palace of Diversion," an elaborate Arabian Nights episode with ballet, song, whirling Arabs, Bagdad fashion parade and other novelties. Twenty-five people were engaged in the performance.

Showmanship

In his sumptuous 'spectaclo-rama,' "The Palace of Diversion," S. Barret McCormick, managing director of the Circle theatre, Indianapolis, Ind., tightens his grasp upon the title his past endeavors have earned for him, "The Griffith of Advertising."

"The Master" is essentially a showman, his showmanship sense being chiefly responsible for the unvarying success of his productions.

McCormick is a showman also. His is the talent of presentation and exploitation. The sum of the two is showmanship, the quality that represents exhibitor success.
Sanctions Church Use Of Griffith Feature

Opposition from ecclesiastical sources has long concerned those who have at heart the best interests of the motion picture. The attempt made to bring church and theatre into accord have been as varied in nature as in measure of success. Such persons, and they make up the reading element of theatredom, will be interested in the following account.

"Broken Blossoms," D. W. Griffith's United Artists' production, was recently exhibited at the Universalist church, Bridgeport, Conn. on Young People's Day. The event in itself is worthy of record. It marks the adoption by the clergy of a powerful sermon in film story form that was and is primarily a theatre production.

Further interesting information has to do with the editorial comment made by the editor of the Waterbury Herald. The accompanying illustration shows the page upon which it appeared and the illustration used. The comment, in part, follows:

"If Christ would come to Bridgeport tonight and see the moving picture in the Universalist church it seems to me that He would say, 'How I wish I might have had such a means to assist me in preaching my sermon on the mount.' Do not worry or be shocked if modern churches are using moving pictures to drive home the teachings of Christ.

"Christ Himself would be happy to know that moving pictures are being used to teach men to love their neighbors, not to bear false witness, not to murder, not to commit adultery nor to steal."

There is little to be added, unless it be to say that the screen has gained by the editorial, as well as by the fact of the presentation.

New Publicity Stunts Used for Sister Stars

Publicity for screen stars is advertising for exhibitors. It is advertising of a nature which the individual exhibitor cannot obtain. And it is advertising which costs the exhibitor nothing in time or money. Those responsible for publicity of this sort should receive the commendation and co-operation of the exhibitor—the man in whose behalf the enterprise operates.

A number of big publicity deals out of the usual run of routine advertising have just been put over for Norma and Constance Talmadge by the publicity department of the Talmadge Studios. The newspapers and magazines have been used rather extensively in the past to advertise the Talmadge sisters, Jos. M. Schenck, president of both companies, is desirous of having his stars get a new kind of space—material out of the old hallowed tracks.

One of the stunts just put over is the reproduction of the beautiful painting of Norma Talmadge by the Japanese artist, Vargas, now on the cover of the February Theatre Magazine, as a one-sheet and a three-sheet on fifteen thousand stands erected along the most important railway routes by that publication, advertising their motion picture department. Hundreds of color reproductions of this cover are now being distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Exchanges for extremely attractive displays in individual theatres, and smaller eight-by-ten black and white photographs are free to any exhibitor who cares to write for one to Beulah Livingstone, Publicity Secretary, Talmadge Studios, 317 East Forty-eighth street, New York City.

A beautiful full-page in colors of Constance Talmadge, painted by the well-known artist, Haskell Coffin, will appear in the April issue of Pictorial Review, which will be on the stands March 26, and thousands of reproductions of this color plate will be distributed for lobby displays.

Two new songs have just made their appearance bearing Norma Talmadge covers, and dedicated to the star. One, "A Daughter of Two Worlds," is written by Paul Sarazen of First National, as a tribute to "the premier emotional star of the screen" in her recent picturization of Le Roy Scott's novel. The music is by M. K. Jerome and the song is now published by Waterston, Berlin & Snyder company. It will be used as part of the music cart sheet with "A Daughter of Two Worlds." The other song hearing a cover in colors of Norma is "Fairy Castles In the Sky," a waltz song, with both the lyrics and the music by Byron G. Whittier. It has just been published by the Metropolitan Music Publishing Corporation.

Another deal for Talmadge publicity has just been closed with a big silver frame manufacturer whereby a million Constance Talmadge autographed pictures and 500,000 Norma Talmadge pictures will be used in these frames as an advertising display in many big department stores from New York to the coast.

Use The Phone

Use of the telephone to inform steady patrons of a particularly noteworthy program has decreased in the last two or three years. The only legitimate reason for this is voiced by exhibitors in cities where the telephone company has forbidden the practice, and these are, of course, exempt.

But the exhibitor who is confronted with no such lack of co-operation is missing a decidedly worth while opportunity when he neglects to carry out the work upon the ground that "It's too much bother."

In every city department stores employ women to sit in their homes, call up selected numbers, and give information regarding current sales, bargains. Unlimited service phones are installed in these homes for this purpose and a suitable salary paid, the advertising value of the idea thoroughly justifying the expense.

It is unnecessary to point out the good points of the telephonic advertisement. A reminder should be sufficient.
A billboard stand in Kenosha, Wis., which stands on a $28,000 building site owned by the Charles Pacini Amusement Company.

Using a $28,000 building site, located on one of the busiest corners of the city as the place for the billboard advertising of his pictures is one of the things that Charles Pacini of the Charles Pacini Amusement Company of Kenosha, Wis., declares is responsible for his unusual success this season in showing big pictures in this city of 45,000. He hit upon the plan accidentally, but he declares that it has been a real moneymaking project.

Less than a year ago Mr. Pacini purchased this site, a large lot located at the corner of Main and South Sts. which had been made vacant by a fire in the business district. It was his intention to erect on the site a new theatre, but he found that it was a few feet short to fit his plans and he secured another site one block north of this. He was at this time the recipient of several offers for the sale of the lot but refused them and erected on it a large three-panelled billboard where for nine months the first announcement of his pictures has been displayed to the motion picture public of Kenosha.

"Does that billboard pay?" someone asked Mr. Pacini recently.

"Well, I should say it does," was his answer, and he produced a record of performances that showed that since the day he had started his high priced billboard project he had increased attendance at the shows which it advertised. He declares that the site is well worth what it is costing him in taxes and improvement as a location for a billboard that is a billboard. The lot is illuminated evenings and attracts all persons who come from the east and south side of the city to the business district in the evenings.

On this $28,000 billboard was placed the first announcement of all First National films that have thus far reached Kenosha. The spread given to Norma Talmadge in "A Daughter of Two Worlds" is illustrated here. This show played to capacity houses for two days at the Majestic theatre and one day at the Butterfly.

This is only one instance of the managerial ability of Mr. Pacini. Fifteen years ago he was the owner of a small 5-cent picture theatre here. He pioneered the way in advertising and is now the owner of the Majestic and Butterfly theatres, two of the most popular houses here, and has recently secured a lease on a downtown site for the erection of a large theatre in the near future.

He is a firm believer in the value of both newspaper and billboard advertising. He is, in short, an exhibitor of the type which keeps his calling in the front rank of American business men, up-to-the-minute and a little ahead. A leader in exhibitorial thought, and possessed of the courage necessary to put his ideas into action, he is the type of man upon whom the industry can with confidence depend.

There is no call for concern regarding the future of a calling which embraces a large number of these thinkers and doers. Decay will never affect such a profession. Its members will advance individually and as a body, from their present forward position to a stand even further in advance of the business men of the country.

The comparison is one that gives rise to speculation.

In what line of endeavor is the standard as high, is progressiveness so marked a characteristic of the men engaged?

In what line can the history of the past decade show such rapid and consistent growth? Where else can be found such unmistakable evidence of carefully laid plans brought, in almost every instance, to complete realization in fact?

The theatre has become an institution, partly because of the popular demand for amusement, but in much greater measure because of the energetic, fearless type of men engaged in the direction of theatres.

These men have made a place for themselves in the great scheme of things. And that place assumes increasing importance from day to day, almost from hour to hour.

Charles Pacini, of Kenosha, Wis., is a man of the type in question. The cash figure represented by his billboard would, a few years ago, have erected and equipped what was then considered a modern theatre.

Things have changed, and with it the men in the industry. Times and men will continue to change—for the better—so long as showmen of this type continue to engage in the presentation of motion pictures.

Albright An Adept In Catch-Line Art

Important: as is the catch-line in theatre advertising, or in any other advertising for that matter, it is strange that so few good catch-line writers are found engaged in the advertising business. There is a high place for men gifted with talent in this direction. And there is a man who can fill that place, if he would accept it.

H. A. Albright, the enterprising manager of the American theatre, Butte, Mont., is the man. His catch-lines for American advertisements are among the best appearing currently.

We have reproduced a recent American advertisement in which his talent in

JUST TONIGHT! THEN--DOUG WILL HAVE DUG!

DOUG FAIRBANKS—in—HIS MAJESTY THE AMERICAN

If you haven't been in yet to get cheered up, you'd better drop in this evening—Doug's leaving early in the morning, smile and all. Don't think that it's an ordinary picture—it isn't—it's Doug super-fied!

Prof. Mamie's Parks at the Orchestra.

The American

A typical Albright catch line points up this four column layout from the American theatre, Butte, Mont.
the writing of lines that draw attention and encourage reading is plainly in evidence.

"Just Tonight. Then—Doug Will Have, Doug!"

A simple play upon words, but it serves its purpose. The line is more than can be said of the nonsensities that are to be found in the press books of the day.

An even more striking creation, and one which had an unique experience, was recently used in conjunction with a certain Charles Ray feature published on the Paramount Arts schedule this week. "Who—Ray? Hoo-ray!" was the first installment of it. After which it was expanded to "Who—Ray? Hoo-ray! Hurrah!"

Set up in the type which Mr. Albright knows so well how to select, the force of the line was almost irresistible. It must have impressed a Famous Players-Lasky advertising man that way, too, for he used it as the feature of a later general advertisement for a Charles Ray picture.

LINES LIKE THIS HAVE A DISTINCT VALUE.

It may be possible to cultivate talent along this line. Every exhibitor should make the effort.

Half Page Spread for Serial Merits Praise

The man who begins his campaign for a coming serial attraction with a page advertisement, a half page, or even a series of well written advertisements of lesser size, is undeniably possessed of the showmanship sense. It is an occasion to be fitly announced. It is to encourage this sort of announcement that examples of this sort of work are frequently chronicled in this department.

Paul Gusdanovic, owner of a chain of theatres in Cleveland, Ohio, demonstrated recently that he appreciated fully the importance of the serial opening by using the striking half page spread which is printed above.

It is somewhat better than the average spread used for this purpose, the general tendency being, even when ample space is employed, to make up a layout using a few stock cuts and so much copy that the efficiency of any of it is open to question.

Mr. Gusdanovic's spread is pictorially strong. It is also pictorially eloquent. It tells a great deal about the nature of the serial advertised without telling that great deal in tiresome, difficult type.

The persons who are attracted to the serial form of entertainment are the people who are attracted by the sensational. In advertising this is no less true than in entertainment.

It follows that the serial advertisement that is to be wholly successful should be of sensational nature, and this is one of the characteristics of the present example.

Variety With Unity In Moore's Displays

A peculiar problem faces the chain theatre operator who does not group his advertisements. He desires, of course, to convey the impression that the various houses are under common management, yet it is also desirable that each express individuality. Variety with unity, in a word, is necessary. It is not always easy to obtain.

As an illustration of one of the practical methods by which this combination of qualities may be gained, we have reproduced two advertisements recently used by Tom Moore for his Washington, D. C., theatres, the Rialto and Garden.

Both were four columns in width and ran in the newspapers in the position of the reproduction.

The one that draws first attention, because of its position and because of the attractive illustration, is that of the Rialto. It is well that it has been placed above the other, for it does not hold as does the Garden composition.

It gives the important information, of course, in the picture and the drawn lettering which it carries. The picture, though it is not highly informative, aids also. But the bunched copy looks hard to read. It is doubtful if many read it to the end.

The Garden advertisement, on the other hand, presents its information in straight type. The simple box of rules which confines that portion of the copy that applies directly to the picture is the only other element in the composition.

The two, to get back to our starting point, are individual, yet bespeak their common affiliation. Variety with unity has been achieved.

Singing Ads

A vocal solo at a suitable point in an evening's program provides an enjoyable variation. It almost invariably calls for an encore.

The attempt to use such a solo for exploiting coming attractions, by singing the song named after pictures, has fallen somewhat short of expectations chiefly because that song, and that song only, was used.

Where a popular number is sung first, the exploitation song used as an encore, the enterprise should be found productive of excellent results.

Exhibitor Backs Comedies With Full Pages and Lobby Displays

When the Virginia theatre, Charleston, W. Va., uses full page advertisements and special lobby displays for Harold Lloyd comedies it adds interesting data to the great store of information having to do with the question of properly advertising comedy. It is a question to which a great deal of exhibitor thought is being given.

Frequently we have reproduced advertisements in which various exhibitors gave to the comedy upon their program the majority of the space in their newspaper advertisements. The measure has been tried out rather extensively during the past few weeks, leading exhibitors everywhere experimenting with advertising in this manner in an effort to learn the preferences of the public.

In a general falling off of this sort of advertising has been seen indication that the public did not respond as heartily as was expected. But the mere falling off of these advertisements is not sufficient proof to dismiss the question.

It is possible, and highly probable, that the measure was discarded before it had been given a thorough test. It is possible that it was not carried to the proper extreme when it was executed.

It is possible also, and as highly probable, that the comedies used for this purpose were not in every case the type of production that properly merited the special position given them. In several instances which have come to our attention we are positive that such was the case.

The Virginia theatre evidently has found the Harold Lloyd comedies published by Pathé worthy of special exploitation on a greater scale than other exhibitors have attempted. It is evident, from the illustrations which accompany this discussion, that they are regarded as worthy of full page advertisements and special lobby displays.

Exhibitors are discussing that the comedy business will be far better served by the herald, a small affair of cardboard in trick shape, that of a donkey if possible, or a silhouette of the star, and let the other distribute them widely.

But one idea, it may be added to indefinitely until a campaign as comprehensive as those conducted for feature length productions is developed.

Such a campaign should be used at least twice or three times by every exhibitor. Then his decision as to the advisability of specially featuring the comedy will be based upon sound premises.

In the face of the great arguments that are presented for this sort of advertising no other test can be accepted as proof.

No mother ever watched at a child's bedside with a greater yearning than these little ones during the convalescence of "Pollyanna." If Aunt Polly would only send for Dr. Chilton. "Pollyanna" had faith in him and anything "Pollyanna" believed in must be right.

Well, the doctor arrived and he got a wonderful reception from the audience, and then the day when Pollyanna was to try to walk again. The kiddies with eyes riveted on the screen watched her every move. They saw her throw away her crutches and stumble across the room and fall into Aunt Polly's arms and a lusty cheer rent the air that could be heard outside the building and far up the street.

It was a wonderful lesson in faith and they all took it away with them—the cripples, the deaf and the homeless.

When the show was over the crippled children remained behind. Later, one by one, they were carried by strong arms to the automobile which had brought them down from the home. Tenderly they were placed upon the upper rear seats—there was no Doctor Chilton would ever cure. And away they went, twelve cars of them, back to the homes, faces wreathed in smiles and all of them would be at least one day forgotten because they had seen "Pollyanna.

With all of this publicity it is only natural to record here that "Pollyanna" started out with a bang. For seven successive days the house was crowded to its utmost capacity and beginning on Tuesday and continuing for the remainder of the week, Mr. Clancy was compelled to give a second view of the picture in order to take care of the crowds. People came to the house who had never been there before. The bars which prohibit children under four were let down and they came—all ages from two to ninety. A heavy rain on Friday did not dampen their enthusiasm and neither did a blizzard on Saturday which tied up completely all of the trolley lines and other methods of transporta-des. They came—this steady stream of them all day long and in spite of weather that shot the thermometer down to zero they could stand something for an hour in line, held there perhaps by the knowledge that while the outside might be somber and gray, inside they could bask in the warmth and sunshine radiated by "Pollyanna."

Essay Contest Gains
Friends for Screen

Since the beginning of the marked activity in the field of exploitation contests recently discussed at length in this department, exhibitors have vied with each other in attempting to discover the most valuable angle to utilize. Numerous devices have been tried out, most of them with some success. One stands out from the mass as the most advisable method of all—the essay contest.

The choice of an angle to utilize is, after all, but a part in the campaign. The space occupied by the spread and the participation of the newspaper and merchants is the big point.

But the essay contest, such as has been utilized by the Southern theatre, Columbus, O., in connection with “Huckleberry Finn,” serves a double purpose.

In almost every instance where this angle has been used the teachers of the city, as well as the ministers and others as well, have been enlisted to aid. Remarkable as it may seem, almost every time this attempt has been made it has met with success and excellent co-operation has resulted.

The value of thus gaining the support of such bodies cannot be overestimated. A single success should be followed up with other efforts of like nature. The result will be the permanent support of two of the most powerful influences upon public opinion.

Exhibitors should take advantage of the opportunity to aid in bringing these forces into line.

Summons Idea Brings Business for Allen

Some exploitation ideas are good for one picture and one time and others are good for any picture, any time. Such is the case with the “Summons” idea used at the Allen theatre in Toronto during the run of an Olive Thomas production.

Although the legal lights of some districts do not approve of this method of exploitation, it is doubtful if it will be found objectionable in the United States. The “Summons” was a blue sheet so folded as to show but the word “Summons.” Unfolding it the reader saw in large type the words: “Auto drivers”—“arrested”—“big fine”—“leaving your car”—“court”—“speed”—and “thirty miles.” In other words, at first glance the reader might suppose an officer of the law had placed the folder in his car.

It was, however, a summons to see Olive Thomas for the first time in Toronto at the Allen theatre. Auto drivers” had their attention “arrested” while the management informed them of a “big fine” Olive Thomas production. After “leaving your car,” according to the summons, one would find good entertainment and would want to “court” the heroine. The picture, the folder said, is loaded with “speed” and you should be willing to motor “thirty miles” to see it.

The manager of the Allen theatre found this one of the best ideas he had put over and one of the most inexpensive.

An essay contest for the young folks was the feature of this double page spread used by the Southern theatre, Columbus, O., during the showing of “Huckleberry Finn.”

“River’s End” Given Strand’s Honor Place

Every advertiser has a favored means of exploitation that he does not devote to “any old” picture. He has some special stunt, or some unusually effective scheme, that he reserves for the production that he believes deserves it. And the production that wins this place wins at the same time a sincere commendation from the exhibitor.

“The River’s End,” Marshall Neilan’s First National production, received such announcement of the entire Strand program. It is said that it never has been devoted to a single production before.

With the added statement regarding the exhibitorial appraisal of the picture it undoubtedly worked great good for the attendance during the run.

You, like Mr. Hyman, doubtless reserve some such means of advertising for a big picture. You are right in doing so. For the big picture that merits such exceptional exploitation certainly should be represented to the public as such a production—which cannot be done if you have given the same exploitation to every picture played.

A Genuine Service

a commendation from the Strand theatre. Brooklyn, when Edward L. Hyman, the manager, gave his entire electric sign, the pride of the house, to a statement proclaiming the picture the greatest in the history of the theatre.

This sign, which is reproduced here-with, has long been reserved for big purposes. Usually it is used as an an-
Views From the Selznick Studios

It is an odd fact that in taking a closeup of a hand writing a letter a great deal of time is required. Many directors photograph these details after all the action in the entire picture is taken. Miss Elaine Hammerstein, here shown posing for a closeup, wants it to be authentic and poses for this and all other details herself.

A few stills which reflect the magnitude of the Selznick Enterprises, which have been built by Lewis J. Selznick. These now include Select Pictures Corporation, National Picture Theatres, Inc., Republic Distributing Corporation and Selznick Pictures.

The three scenes above are from "The Invisible Divorce," the third production to be offered by the National Picture Theatres, Inc., of which Lewis J. Selznick is president. The organization is an exhibitors co-operative company and has the backing of representative theatres throughout the United States.
THE patron within the theatre is not purposely displeased. Exhibitorial custom has been built upon study of his efforts and dislikes. As a consequence, his comfort and well being are properly cared for in the modern theatre.

Like consideration has not been shown for the patron standing in line awaiting entrance. In isolated instances lounging rooms have been provided, but few theatres can employ this device.

Obviously, the patron in line deserves attention. He is potentially a steady customer. He must be an enthusiast, or he would not be standing in line. Certainly he is worthy of the slight effort required to make him a permanent friend of your theatre.

At the Casino theatre, Chicago, a talking machine has been installed in the lobby and the latest records are played while patrons await their turn to enter the theatre. While not a fully satisfactory solution of the problem, it is a step toward the perfection of a plan that will inevitably be developed to a high point of efficiency.

Various theatres, because of their construction, location, etc., can easily improvise entertainment that will be found highly profitable.

"THE ADVENTURER" (Fox) reflects credit upon the star, the producer and the director. It is by far the most entertaining of William Farnum's recent productions. A romantic narrative told in terms of action, it holds attention from its animated opening scene to the highly dramatic conclusion. Its appeal is limited to no class.

"THE STOLEN KISS" (Realart) depends greatly upon Constance Binney, the star, for its appeal. It is she, all the way through, who enlists the sympathy in the early scenes and holds it until the picture closes with the long deferred happiness assured. Of the supporting cast George Backus deserves special mention for a characterization well taken.

"WATER, WATER EVERYWHERE" (Goldwyn) will please prohibitionists and their opponents equally, since it proves the arguments of both. A skillfully prepared mixture of comedy and drama, it serves Will Rogers excellently. His unique personality has won for him a place in fan favor, and the present production should add to his following.

"MARY ELLEN COMES TO TOWN" (Paramount Arctraft) surpasses by a considerable margin the recent Dorothy Gish vehicles. It is made of comedy and melodrama, these elements being combined in such manner as to make the time spent in watching the exhibition pleasant diversion. A toning down of personality and stressing of characterization has worked to the star's advantage.

"A MANHATTAN KNIGHT" (Fox) is a mystery that remains as such until the final scene when a twist is given to the story which resembles the sudden and interesting denouements so well handled by O. Henry. Interest is sustained and at no time is the outcome obvious. George Walsh performs well his strenuous activities and he has been given a good supporting cast.

"THE WOMAN AND THE PUPPET" (Goldwyn) presents Geraldine Farrar in a role similar to that portrayed in "Carmen." The adaptation has been handled proficiently from every angle. As a whole, the production is pleasant diversion with Miss Farrar as the "woman" and Lou Tellegen as the "puppet."

"WHAT WOULD YOU DO?" (Fox) offers the exhibitor the exploitation possibilities which always are apparent in subjects which carry interrogative titles. Many catch lines to urge on inquisitive patrons can be taken from the theme. The picture gives Madlaine Traverse an emotional role.

"THE WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD" (Robertson-Cole) lacks appeals on account of the weakness of its story structure. Miss Barriscale does well with the slight opportunity given her, but the fragile plot makes it impossible for even a player of her talent to maintain interest through five reels.

"LIFTING SHADOWS" (Pathé), starring Emmy Wehlen, is a pleasing love story with the Bolshevist movement in America as its setting. It is an exceptionally artistic production, reflecting the touch of its producer, Leonce Perret. The prologue is set in Russia, but the action shifts almost immediately to New York and environs.

"THE VEILED MARRIAGE" (Hallmark) presents Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard in a serious drama of considerable depth. A unit of the Famous Directors series, the work of Kenean Buel, it is upon a par with those that have gone before. The story is a type that has scored successfully in the past and is well told from beginning to end.
REVIEWS

William Farnum in

THE ADVENTURER

Five-part drama; Fox.
Directed by J. Gordon Edwards.
Published in March.

This IS THE William Farnum of "The Adventurer," a dashing, gallant, romantic, fighting gentleman of the king's court, is a better Farnum than has been revealed to followers of the star in many months. And the play is decidedly better, both as to technical and entertainment qualities, than the majority of his schedule offerings.

The decept superstitation that "People don't want costume plays" was dealt a death blow when "The Adventurer" was shown to a representative audience at the Alcazar theatre, Madison street, Chicago. Audience and the actors are away from the street, one of the busiest in the world, and includes patrons from all walks of life. The picture that brings audible appreciation from such a gathering, as did the production in question, then establishes its claim to general appeal.

It is not the costumes worn by the actors that hold attention in this swiftly moving tale of romance and adventure. It is the very substance of the play and the closely knit plot and story that keep the audience alive to the development of the narrative and enthusiastic.

Don Caesar de Bazan was one of the poplar stage plays of several years ago. It came to Chicago in time the art of many actors whose names are softly spoken by worshippers of the type.

Don Caesar de Bazan will thrill as did the characterizations of his stage predecessors. Showmanship sense will doubtless dictate, however, that the costume phase of the story be kept in the background. Exhibitors who follow out this line of reasoning and bring patrons to the theatre with whatever expectations will be safe in doing so, for the picture will amply compensate for the deception.

SYNOPSIS: Don Caesar de Bazan, gentlemaan adventurer of the Spanish court, meets and falls in love with Mari- tana, a dancing girl, who returns his love. When she dances before the queen she captivates the king, who determines to win her by fair means or foul. Don Jose, his prime minister, secretly in love with the queen, manipulates matters in such manner that Don Caesar is executed immediately following his marriage to Mari- tana, though the young lady believes he has been pardoned. She goes to what she believes is her husband's chateau, where she is followed by the king. Don Caesar, saved from death by a youth who has removed the bullets from the rifles, seeks his wife at the palace, follows the king to the chateau and arrives to find his wife struggling with her sovereign. In a dramatic scene which ensues the king is brought to realize Don Caesar's sterling worth and makes him prime minister.

Emmy Wehlen in

LIFTING SHADOWS

Six-part drama; Pathé.
Directed by Leonce Perret.
Published April 11.

OPINION: Drawing on the Bolshevist problem to give a dramatic and tragic background to the romance of an attorney and a woman whom he has successfully defended in a trial for the murder of her husband, Leonce Perret has produced a feature with many entertaining qualities.

It is of unusual artistic merit, as are most of Perret's productions. The sub- titling is especially interesting. For the most part it is briefly worded and flashed in the center of necessary but slow-moving scenes.

Emmy Wehlen is given the opportunity to display her beauty to particular advantage. The presence of Wyndham Standing is a decided asset to the picture. Other members of the cast respond to the needs of the story development.

The action opens with a prologue staged in Russia and then shifts to New York. Throughout the picture, settings are elaborate. Several spectacular incidents are introduced. The murder trial is especially well handled, it being brief yet carefully introduced.

SYNOPSIS: Vania Osbrowski is the daughter of a Russian revolutionary, who meets his death when the secret meeting place of his companions is raided by the Russian soldiers. Vania takes to America her father's records, which are of great value to the movement. In America she becomes the wife of Clifford Howard, a profligate author. When he attacks her in a drunken spell, she shoots him. The following morning he is found dead with a bullet in his head. Mrs. Howard is defended by Attorney High Mason and acquitted of the murder charge. Mason then falls in love with her but she refuses to marry him on account of her shooting her husband. The Bolsheviks attempt to obtain her father's papers from her, but she says their doctrines are not those of her father, and refuses to give them up. In attempting to steal them, a Bolshevik is shot by a watchman and before dying confesses that Mrs. Howard's bullet did not hit her husband, but that he murdered him. She then accepts Mason's proposal.

Will Rogers in

WATER, WATER EVERYWHERE

Five-part comedy-drama; Goldwyn.
Directed by Clarence G. Badger.
Published in March.

OPINION: It will be well for the exhibitor who plays Will Rogers' prohibition entertainment to especially invite members of both the pro- and anti- factions. Each will believe that the picture proves exactly the claims advanced, so well has the composition been wrought, and therefore immediately become animated advertisements for the engagement.

Will Rogers is equally at ease and equally entertaining in both the serious and the humorous stretches of the story. His occasional appeal to the tendered center he meets with as spontaneous response as does his playing upon the more ruged ruggishness. His time about evenly divided between the two in the current offering, he scores a success which should be long remembered.

Irene Rich, who has the most important feminine role, is a young woman of ability. It is upon ability rather than beauty that she depends for her effects, and in her satisfying performance of a role not rich in opportunity lies a lesson for screen stars of immensely greater renown.

The cast is composed of players who submerge personality in characterization. Production details represent Goldwyn enterprise at its best. Clarence G. Badger directed skillfully.

SYNOPSIS: Billy Fortune, westerner, has just arrived in a small mining town. His arrival is marked by a brawl in which he is injured. The doctor is ordered to treat him, but he refuses and returns to town. The doctor's daughter, Hope, is in love with him and does everything possible to win his heart. However, she is not successful, and her efforts are returned with scorn. The doctor decides to submit her to his own experiments to prove that love is not possible. Hope is taken to a sanitarium, and when she returns, she is in a coma. The doctor devises a plan to use her as a test subject for his experiments. He contacts a young man, John, who is a skilled surgeon, and they agree to perform an operation to bring Hope back to life. However, the operation is unsuccessful, and Hope dies. The doctor is left with guilt and remorse.

THE WOMAN AND THE PUPPET

Seven-part drama; Goldwyn.
Directed by Reginald Barker.
Published in March.

OPINION: Geraldine Farrar, the "woman," and Lou Tellegen, the "puppet," unite in making Reginald Barker's production one of interest. A role similar to that portrayed in "Carmen" falls to the lot of Miss Farrar. She gives a pleasing characterization of the Spanish cigarette girl with her dancing and flighty disposition. The foreign atmosphere of the piece is well carried out, both in touching up the scenes and in the sub-titles. Group exposures have been clearly photographed. Excessive care has been taken with all of the camera work, the night scenes presenting some beautiful views. The hair-pulling encounter between Miss Farrar and Mr. Tellegen affords an amusing angle. Though not a complicated plot, the action is kept moving by dashing, fights and the emotional work of Miss Farrar and Mr. Tellegen. In exploiting the production, it is well to keep in mind the principals, both Miss Farrar and Mr. Tellegen. To support Miss Farrar, Reginald Barker has chosen a good cast, including Dorothy Cummings, Bertram Grassby, Macy Bate, Christina Pereda, Am- parito Guillet, Milton Ross and Mme. Rose Dione.

SYNOPSIS: Conchita Perez, a low-born maiden of Seville, has been an admirer of Capt. Don Mateo Diaz since childhood. Her dancing attracts the attention of the aristocratic officer, and an estrangement results between him and his sweetheart. Another estrangement results between Conchita and Don Mateo when the latter is seen giving money to Conchita's mother. Thereafter she taunts him and, though in love with him, she refuses to admit it. Not until he punishes her finally do she come dolely and consents to marry him.

Anna Lehr and Ralph Kellard in THE VEILED MARRIAGE

Five-part drama; Hallmark.
Directed by Kenean Buel.
Published in March.

OPINION: Another of the Famous Directors' Series, distributed by Hallmark, "The Veiled Marriage" is worthy of laurels won. The interest is sustained through a series of mysterious happenings that are unusual and interesting.

The story portrays opposite walks of life, the rich and the poor, in such manner that both classes with equal force. Considerable skill has been exercised in avoiding that which might offend either element.

The story is marked by the love of a wealthy young man for his stenographer, poor and doubly appealing to him because of that fact, carrying a lot of romance that is pleasing. The girl's loyalty to her father, which leads her to believe that she cannot marry the man she loves, adds to the plot sub- stance.

Kenean Buel's direction is commendable, while the photography and lighting might have played a prominent part in improving the entire production.

Both of the stars do exceedingly well in their respective parts.

SYNOPSIS: The announcement of the engagement of John Browning to Lilian Temple arouses the evil instincts of Fred Peyton, friend of them both, who secretly loves Lilian. He conspires to get his way and marries her. This comes when, after he has attacked Margaret Fullon, a working girl, and is being forced to marry her, he succeeds in getting Browning intoxicated and leading both him and Margaret to believe that they have been married. The engagement is then broken off and Browning goes to the mountains, Margaret returning to her home. Later, Browning opens an office and employs Margaret, whom he does not recognize, as stenographer. The truth is finally brought out and all ends happily.

Constance Binney in THE STOLEN KISS

Six-part drama; Realart.
Directed by Kenneth Webb.
Published in March.

OPINION: Upon the winning personality of Constance Binney, scoring from the dub background of a character little love story, depends the success or failure of her second Realart production. Had all features as sturdy a staff to lean upon film history could record fewer failures.

It is Constance Binney who, in the opening scene, the final close-up, and throughout the intermediate action, holds the attention and pleases the senses. The cast, though capable, have roles of which little capital can be made individually.

The story is a simple one told in complex events. A very natural and impulsive little girl is kept from the world by a grandfather and servants whose efforts are intended to be kindly but are ill advised. Over the garden wall she meets, and kisses, a boy. They are separated, seek vainly to locate each other for several years, narrowly missing numerous meetings, their reunion providing the story's close.

There are many moments of sadness, during which the star displays marked ability as an emotional actress. There are about the same number of humorous situations, where she scores with equal effect. Well-prepared presentation will heighten the value of these. Great attention should be given the musical setting provided.

"Erewhile Susan" left many admirers in its wake. Few stars have had as favorable introductions to screen audiences. Exhibitors who played that feature will be assured of a goodly attendance when "The Stolen Kiss" is announced. The star's role in the latter publication should further endanger her admirers.

SYNOPSIS: Felicia Day, kept by a watchful governness and a vigilant grandfather within the walls that surround her home, makes the acquaintance of but one boy, Dudley Hamilt, who sings in the choir at the church next door. Years pass and he returns, a young man, again to meet Felicia over the garden wall, at which time they kiss impulsively, only to be separated by her grandfather. She is taken to the country, years pass. Her grandfather dies and she returns, an old-fashioned maiden, to the city. Forced to make her living by sewing, she encounters numerous adventures, always trying to locate her ideal, Dudley Hamilt. He, meantime, searches for her with equal ardor. With their meeting and the plight of their troth comes the conclusion.
George Walsh in A MANHATTAN KNIGHT
Five-part drama; Fox.
Directed by George A. Beranger.
Published in March.

OPINION: The unraveling of a well-told mystery without hesitancy in the development is accomplished by the cast and direction. A sudden twist in the story such as O. Henry used in making his tales of New York life, that gives the picture an unusual ending.

Gelett Burgess' novel, "Find the Woman," furnishes the theme adapted. Opportunity for swift action is afforded and advantage of this is taken to the extent that interest is sustained with the climax as a surprise.

Underworld scenes in the picture have been well chosen and lend a realistic background to the pictorial mystery. George Walsh's lively activities are appreciated and he has been given admirable support. The mystery element should be used in connection with the exploitation, as well as the name of Walsh.

SYNOPSIS: John Fenton, a young New York lawyer, is torn by a crystal gazer that the young woman he will marry is current in his life. The sitting is broken off by the arrival of police, and Fenton escapes by the fire escape into another apartment. Here he finds Belle Charmion, who is standing by the side of her brother, who has shot himself after stealing jewels from the home of their uncle. The police, searching for the jewels, enter the apartment. The curtains to the bedroom are drawn to cover up the shooting, and Fenton poses as the girl's brother. The curtains are drawn aside and the supposedly dead man is not there. The police depart, Fenton and the girl hurry the injured man to the uncle's home and decide upon a story to tell the police. In the meantime robbers get into the uncle's apartment and recover the jewels the plotter holds. The police again are after the robbers. They recover the jewels which are returned to the uncle's vault. It is revealed that the Jewett and Fenton were his own and that he was the long missing ward of the girl's uncle.

WOMAN WHO UNDERSTOOD
Five-part drama; Robertson-Cole.
Directed by William Parke.
Published in April.

OPINION: Despite the efforts of Bessie Barriscale and a half-dozen talented children, a weakness of story structure and the apparent absence of恒 (H-, or a man, who has been responsible for high spots in many Barriscale productions from the directorial supervision, places this production in the mediocre class.

It is no fault of Miss Barriscale. With the slight opportunity she has been given, she has done her best to develop the talent of her role, with the talent of the children. Cast in the role of the devoted wife of a man who has saved from suicide, she is compelled to silently endure snubs for fear of furthering the tragedy caused to her husband for the final kiss at the fade-out. It is not a pretty story, yet it is not bad enough to be a "good bad story." The best term for it perhaps is "wishy-washy." There is nothing spectacular, nothing novel, nothing dramatic.

Charles Murray in GEE WHIZ!
Two-part comedy; Paramount-Sennett.
Directed by Fred Jones.
Published in March.

OPINION: Mack Sennett, whose burlesques have won wide circulation, has seldom given out from his studios a composition so richly endowed with the qualities that make comedies of this persuasion laughable as in the present instance. Few feature length productions contain plots as well contrived as the skeleton upon which is draped the spirited action in which Charles Murray figures most prominently.

The Sennett players, who assist the star are experienced in the ways of slapstick. Their contributions to the general merriment are provocative of the sort of laughter that begins at the lips, extends to the larynx and eventually involves the diaphragm.

The comedy alone is sufficient to fill your theatre with laughter. Properly accompanied, with the liveliest jazz music, it should merit the classic appellation "a riot."

Madaline Traverse in WHAT WOULD YOU DO?
Five-part drama; Fox.
Published in March.

OPINION: "What would you do?" is the all-absorbing question that confronts Claudia Chilson, portrayed by Madaline Traverse, when the husband that she thought dead returns after her marriage to an unsuitable man. Exhibitors will see that the title and the subject-matter introduced by it—two suicides, a woman's sacrifice, business failures, etc.—offer ample occasion for program exploitation.

The story, which was written by Denison-Ferrer, has its entertaining qualities, although it taxes a person's credulity at times. The development, however, has been accomplished so that the denouement is not obvious.

Emotional work is required of the star throughout the piece. The cast, as a whole, fits well into the characters.

Showmen are aware of the significance given to a subject carrying an interrogative title. It is good exploitation because it forever arouses the inquisitive nature that dominates a majority of people. Without knowing it, people themselves are a means to the exploitation.

"What's Your Husband Doing?" "Should a Husband Forgive?" and "Who's Your Servant?" are publications that have gone on the market with added possibilities of advertising in the interrogative titles.

SYNOPSIS: Hugh Chilson, the innocent partner in an unscrupulous oil concern, is persuaded by his wife, Claudia, to flee the country when the company is accused of fraudulent deals. On shipboard, while going to South America, Chilson is arrested. Rather than re-turn to the States and face the charges against him, he jumps overboard. Claudia, thinking him dead, marries a friend of the family, Curtis Brainerd.
Cinema Press Association to Issue
A "Who's Who in Motion Pictures"

The Cinema Press Association, Inc., announces a new enterprise in the motion picture world in the publication of "Who's Who in Motion Pictures." The National Association of the Motion Picture Industry and the Motion Picture Directors' Association has endorsed the project.

The board of governors is made up of Adolph Zukor, president Famous Players-Lasky Corporation; J. D. Williams, manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit; Norma Talmadge; Anthony Paul Kelley, author and scenario writer; James Vincent, president Motion Picture Directors' Association; Benedict M. Greene, president International Press, Ltd. Counsel for the company is Henry O. Falk.

Branches Established

The offices of the new company are at 141 West Forty-third Street, New York, and branches have been established in Chicago, Los Angeles, London, Montreal, Toronto, Winnipeg and Vancouver.

The new publication will fill the place in the motion picture world already filled in the world of statesmanship, letters, art and industry by "Who's Who in America." The volumes will be illustrated and will be revised and brought up to date annually. It will be designed to furnish an authoritative reference book for all whose business brings them in contact with the industry.

The Cinema Press Association has at its disposal the services of a large editorial staff comprising a number of well-known dramatic and motion picture reviewers and critics. It will be the task of this staff to prepare special articles on the leading stars, noted directors, foremost producers, exhibitors and executives, and it is part of the function of the association to send out these articles, illustrated, to the trade papers, newspapers and periodicals.

The association proposes to extend the usefulness of the volume by supplementing the biographies in the book with printed pamphlets which will be sent broadcast to such publications as will insure their reaching the public.

Some Months Before Ready

This phase of the program has the endorsement of the motion picture publicity men who see in it an aid to their work. They, in turn, will aid the association by furnishing the latest news of their several enterprises to the press for distribution.

The association, practically, an entire census of the motion picture field and will be some months in coming to completion.

Dorothy Gish in
MARY ELLEN COMES TO TOWN
Five-part comedy-drama; Paramount Artcraft. Directed by Elmer Clifton. Published in March.

OPINION: A more believable, logical, human, and certainly more entertaining Dorothy Gish than has been seen for many months is the star of "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," a mixture of comedy and melodrama that keeps interest alive from title to trailer. Due to whatever sobering influence, the rollicking star whose "Nugget Nell" was pronounced un-acceptable by exhibitors generally has been submerged in the Mary Ellen which is her character in the present offering.

The change of policy will doubtless be welcomed by theatre men and public. The latter, certainly, will be pleased to find the Mary Ellen a portrait of and not merely a creator of character.

The personality which was made the point of "Nugget Nell" and its associated productions is not dulled by the present casting. It is, instead, made to score more sharply than before. It gives Mary Ellen life, Dorothy Gish receiving the credit.

The play begins as a small-town comedy, develops into a city melodrama that finally becomes a genuine and the satirical, moves rapidly along its course and ends happily. Excellent production and a typically well-balanced Paramount Artcraft cast add to the merit of the composition.

Exhibitors whose faith has been shaken by unfavorable comment following the exhibition of recent Dorothy Gish vehicles should not permit that feeling to influence their advertising. "Mary Ellen Comes to Town" is so much better than these that the popular comment will be favorable.

SYNOPSIS: Mary Ellen lives in a village and very unprogressive village, her entertainment being the watching of the New York train which goes through daily. A lucky chance gives her a card of introduction to a New York theatrical producer and she goes to the city, innocently engaging as entertainer in his troupe. She is the social headquarters of Willie the Weasel and his band. The Weasel seeks to obtain the fortune recently inherited by Bob Fairweather of Mary Ellen's village, though he does not know it, and forces Mary Ellen to aid him in his plans through a pincion of robbery against her. She carries through the plan to the critical moment, when she tells Bob the truth and they are saved by nigger who was hired the establishment. Bob and Mary Ellen return to their native village and happiness.

RUBENS’ VIEWS ON PERCENTAGE

Maurice Rubens of the Princess theatre, Joliet, Ill., is an energetic opponent of the percentage plan of booking. In the following article Mr. Rubens sets forth his ideas on the subject:

By MAURICE RUBENS

Definition—Webster—JELLY-FISH, n. A marine radula animal which looks like a mass of jelly. To which we may add: Without spin,—frequently gets into sets,—drifts around aimlessly with no sense of self-determination.

The same definition can be applied to the exhibitor who falls for percentage bookings. From the minute he signs his name to a percentage contract he loses all claim of being an exhibitor or showman and simply becomes a person who has turned over his theatre to a film company and has accepted the position as their agent to assist them in getting the highest amount of money possible for their product.

Is Sad and Amusing

It is both sad and amusing to hear one of this variety—formerly owner of a theatre proposition representing a $250,000 investment, carefully explaining that the picture he is playing on percentage represents an outlay of $250,000, so he is told by the film company. He feels that he has given his theatre to the film company in exchange for the privilege of running a picture of $250,000 value. He never stops to figure that if the entire territory, including foreign rights, from which the film company obtains revenue, were properly proportioned, the actual represented investment by the film company for his territory would not be in excess of between $25 and $150.

He therefore is not giving up his $250,000 investment against a $200,000 film proposition, but he is putting up his all against something that in his zone of operation does not represent a total outlay of over $150.00. The same will apply to a theatre investment of only a few hundred dollars and one of a million dollars because the zone of operation is larger or smaller as the case may be.

May Look Innocent

Many theatre men will agree with me when I say that I am convinced that there are many more theatre investments over $150,000 than there are film productions that actually represent that amount. The percentage evil may look innocent enough at first, but as sure as you are alive it will not take a long to develop into a 90-20 proposition like the road shows, and exhibitors who have watched their film service jump from $50 a week to over $100 per day know who will get the 80 per cent.

My estimate is made from a published film company’s report that reads approximately like this:

Invested capital

Exhibitors’ deposit money

$1,000,000.00

Profit at end of year

$1,000,000.00

Read this over. Figure it over. Think it over. Man or Jelly-Fish?

“House of Toys” To Be “Flying A” Production

Animated Jiggs to Appear Before Public Over the Country April 4

The premiere of the new series of “Bringing Up Father” comedies will be made on April 4. “Jiggs in Society” is the title and it is said that the comedy bubbles with the humor of Maggie, of Jiggs, of Dinty Moore, and of the crowd of old reprobates created in the famous cartoon strip by George McManus.

Ray Is Jiggs

In the character of Jiggs, Johnny Ray, in appearance, is said to be almost an exact prototype of the famous McManus character and the other actors are chosen along similar lines. As a vaudeville comedian, it is said, Mr. Ray has been recognized as the counterpart of Jiggs.

The story is full of action and novelty from the moment Jiggs is discovered smoking his pipe in the burglar-proof safe, the only safe place for him in his great palace. Dinty Moore and the gang join him in a game of cards while his wife is giving a reception, and the social affair is complicated by the breaking up of the card game and the appearance of Jiggs, Dinty & Co. among his wife’s fashionable friends.

Start Exploitation Campaign

A tremendous campaign of exploitation has been started to aid exhibitors who book the comedies, backed by all the power of the International for whom the comedies are being made by Christie, of Pathe Exchange, and with the cooperation of all of the 400 newspapers in which Jiggs appears as a feature. In many communities, it is said, special tie-ups have been arranged between the publications and theatres.

With a newspaper running the comic strip and a theatre running the motion picture many managers have found it advantageous to both the newspaper and the theatre to arrange for joint advertising. A slide in the theatre announcing the newspaper running the strip can be reciprocated by an announcement in the paper of the presence of Jiggs in the local theatre.

MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN
In a scene from "Polly of the Storm Country," a First National Exhibitors Circuit feature.

“Her Elephant Man,” with Shirley Mason—Book this by all means. Boost it to the skies. It pleases the whole family, and it is not padded. All action.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Wings of the Morning, with William Farnum.—William Farnum our best drawing card. Excellent picture. Big business.—J. C. Lannonetti, American theatre, Breckenridge, Tex.—General patronage.

Evangeline, with Miriam Cooper.—Didn't do as well as I expected. Mostly school children. Regular patrons did not care for that kind of story.—Ethel M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

What Would You Do?—with Madlaine Traverse.—Very sensational. Will please immensely if they like this kind. Acting good.—Douglas's photography is getting better.—E. Stellings, Grauman's theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Last Straw, with Buck Jones.—This is a new star and Buck will make good. To good business and a pleased audience.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

the important program element.

THE BEST music, stage talent, short subjects, etc., are poor substitutes for a good feature production. They may ornament the central attraction, but they cannot replace it.

FEATURES that deserve the name and merit supplementary entertainment are always available to the steady reader of these pages.

THE WINNING Stroke, with George Walsh.—Good college picture. Went over big.—Mrs. F. A. McInnis, Posey theatre, Poseyville, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Wilderness Trail, with Tom Mix.—Very good. Plenty of action. Good business.—J. L. Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Would You Do?—With Madaline Traverse.—Only fair program picture.—Jean Dagle, Hippodrome theatre, Murphy, Nc.—Neighborhood patronage.

La Belle Russe, with Theda Bara.—Good business and gave satisfaction.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Goldwyn

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—This fellow is going to be a big card. His work is original and different. Going big for me.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Road Called Straight, with Louis Bussinoson.—Seen before in my theatre, but the Bussinoson smile won them, and brings them back for the next one. Book the Bussinosons. You can’t go wrong, they have a picture of him.—J. W. Burd, Crystal theatre, Patonsburg, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Friend Husband, with Madge Kennedy.—Good program offering. Comedy-drama.—H. R. Jenkins, Opera House, Dighton, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Friend Husband, with Madge Kennedy.—Best since Baby Mine.—Peters & Johnson, Liberty theatre, Milligan, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Pinto, with Mable Normand.—Good. Everybody likes it. A girl who does not depend on a Pickford pout or a Clark smile. She has the pep that puts a punch in pictures. Biggest female star on my program.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

A PERFECT 36, with Mabel Normand.—Pleased about fifty per cent. Drew fair.—R. C. Wilson, Grand theatre, Staples, Minn.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—Didn’t go. Moore disappointed. Should be kept in light subjects.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Kingdom of Youth, with Madge Kennedy.—A very popular star for me in a very pleasing picture full of youthful romance. Peters & Johnson. We always satisfy any audience. Just the type of picture popular today.—Joseph F. Allman, Globe theatre, Monticello, Ill.—General patronage.

Hodkinson

The Lord Loves the Irish, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Big business on two day run. Well liked by all.—J. C. La monetin, American theatre, Breckenridge, Tex.—General patronage.

A White Man’s Chance, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Is all right to fill a hole on short notice, but will not please. Hodkinson’s promise of good photography is fulfilled, but that is the big thing in this picture.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Metro

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Can’t say too much for this. A regular knockout. By all means get it.—Will as good as Eye for Eye.—E. N. Brown, Stocking theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

L. M. Kuhs, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

A Favor to a Friend, with Emmy Wehlen.—Just a fair program picture.—E. N. Brown Stocking theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Toys of Fate, with Nazimova.—Good picture. Star does not draw here. Poor business.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—A good subject well produced. Did only fair on it because of zero weather. However, in large cities should prove a good drawing card.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Full of Pep, with Hale Hamilton.—Good. Lots of action and good story. Average business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—A good picture. Everyone pleased. Good business.—Conner Bros., Opera House, Milton, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Full of Pep, with Hale Hamilton.—Went over big, as all Hamilton's pictures do here. If you have not shown this one, get it, and put your audience full of pep.—F. Pope, Strand theatre, West Baden, Ind.—Transient patronage.

Hot off the Press, with Nazimova.—Picture was liked by most everyone. Showed to good crowd in a big snow storm. Better book it—Royal theatre, Sabine, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lombardi, Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Advance your prices on this the way I did, and you will soon go back to the army for life. Patrons still complain.—Chas. Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hitting the High Spots, with Bert Lytell.—A very good offering. Above the average program picture. Has some comedy mixed in.—C. H. Powers, Auditorium theatre, Dunsmuir, Cal.—General patronage.

The Brat, with Nazimova.—Nazimova picture that pleased immensely. Business satisfactory, but not record breaking by any means.—Stanley Chambers, Palace theatre, Wichita, Kans.—General patronage.

Paramount Aircraft

Male and Female, a DeMille production.—Played this subject at 55c top and it pleased all. A real honest to goodness special.—P. E. Morris, Regent theatre, Cleveland, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Invisible Bond, with Irene Castle.—Good story. Good acting by entire cast. Good business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Putting It Over, with Bryant Washburn.—Good comedy. Not quite as good as Why Smith Left Home. This star gaining in popularity. Good business.

The Market of Souls, with Dorothy Dalton.—Splendid role for this star in a very good picture. Good cast, good photography, excellent settings. With star and title should get the business.—W. G. Mitchell, Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, Mich.—General patronage.

More Deadly Than the Male, with Ethel Clayton.—Note all critics knocked this subject, but honestly we received more favorable comments than usual program subjects. Can't go there, and photography was excellent.—P. E. Morris, Regent theatre, Cleveland, Miss.—General patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.—A good picture, but we did not consider it a knockout. We advertised heavily but patronage fell way short of expectations.—A. B. Pettit, Iowa theatre, Winterset, la.

Behind the Door, with Hobart Bosworth.—A 100% picture from a production standpoint, but oh that ending. Watch out, it's too realistic.—P. E. Morris, Regent theatre, Cleveland, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.—Words cannot express the wonderful picture. But business was poor. It poured rain both days. Just broke even.—J. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Elite patronage.

It Pays to Advertise, with Bryant Washburn.—Good. Right. We must have these stage plays it seems. Glad to play them and glad when they're gone.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Marriage Price, with Elsie Ferguson.—This is a good picture. Played it with a Joe Martin comedy.—Clinton E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Modern Musketeer, with Douglas Fairbanks.—A dandy comedy. They sure like Fairbanks' stunts. Always a crowd with him.—J. W. Baird, Crystal theatre, Parsonsburg, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Adventures in Hearts, with Robert Warwick.—Good picture. Warwick has excellent support in this. Good business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast.—Another miracle. How a big company can have the nerve to force this kind of picture on the public is more than I can understand.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Make Believe Wife, with Billie Burke.—A comedy-drama that goes over great.—Gem theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.—Transient patronage.

The Man from Funeral Range, with Wallace Reid.—Very good and pleased, as do all pictures in which Reid appears. People were satisfied.—R. W. Ralston, Colonial theatre, Tracy, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast.—Poor business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Vamp, with Enid Bennett.—Picture good, but different from the subject. Not overdrawn.—G. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lyndon, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Johnny Get Your Gun, with Fred Stone.—My patrons all liked this.—Clif ford Nils, Grand theatre, Anamosa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Told in the Hills, with Robert Warwick.—Good story. Good picture. Role suits Warwick. Big business.—W. G.

"BILL'S" GOT 'EM ROPED AND HOG-TIED.

William Russell in the American Film Company's feature "Slam-Bang Jim" a Western Comedy-drama soon to be issued by that company.
PERCENTAGE checking may or may not appeal to you as an exhibitor, but one fact must be recognized. BOX OFFICE VALUE is no less an essential because engagement expense and profit is to be shared. RELIABLE statistics upon box office value are to be found in this department, compiled by exhibitors who have played the pictures.

Our Better Selves, with Fannie Ward. I used this picture and did not make expenses. Some of my patrons left, saying they could not stay to see the finish. If I get any more of these war pictures, I may close on Mondays. Mrs. S. L. Smith, town theatre, Chico, Ind.

Realart

Erstwhile Susan, with Constance Binnie. Constance Binnie is one of the very few real actresses in pictures. This picture is truly artistic in every respect. Realart is making good its name if it keeps up the present standard. Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Judgy of Rouge’s Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter. Some pictures have wide reviews. My patrons all pleased and told me so. Fair business. Weather bad. J. Paulick, Vaudeville theatre, Muscoda, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

The Devil’s Trail, with a special cast. Very good picture. As good as the so-called specials. Should make good anywhere.让我 see it. S. M. Spiegel, Corner theatre, Winnemucca, I1.—Neighborhood patronage.

Home Wanted, with Madge Evans. Played this for special child’s picture and put it up big. S. M. Spiegel, Community theatre, Winnebago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bringing Up Betty, with Evelyn Greely. Good business, but the check for $700,000 as a winning on the stock exchange was too strong to swallow. Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil’s Trail, with Betty Compson. Good acting, but not the kind of a story everybody likes. Especially the ladies. Paul & Overton, Lyric theatre, Winchester, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Open Door, with a special cast. This is a dandy mystery play. Did good business. Robertson-Cole pictures always please patrons. A. H. Schurr, Grand theatre, St. Marys, O.—Transplant patronage.

Beckoning Roads, with Besie Barri scale. This not as good as other Bar riscale pictures. It is a fair picture though. A. C. Klug, Empress theatre, Eureka, Minn.—General patronage.

Better Times, with a special cast. Very good photoplay. Please small audience. Should go over big. Dr. C. L. Graf, Prince theatre, Stuart, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Select

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge. Didn’t get to see this personally. It must have been excellent, as all patrons still do. I think on all accounts I would advise an extended run. J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Nelson, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Break the News to Mother, with a special cast. One of the best pictures we have run for a long time. Book it. E. D. Luna, Hubert theatre, Hubert, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Veiled Adventure, with Constance Talmadge. Great picture. One of the best comedy-dramas I have ever played. She is always good. Fair business on very cold night. T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

Getting Mary Married, with Marion Davies. The only worthwhile picture that Davies made for Select. Always at the top of the list. A late Loos scenario I have great confidence in. It is a good picture. Patrons like this. C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, 11.—Small town patronage.

Merry Never Wears One with Norma Talmadge. My patrons went wild over this one. Had them all leaning forward in their seats until Norma woke up. Eugene O’Brien, my business was as good as picture just right. Give us more like it. Jno. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Savage Woman, with Sela Kimball Young. Sidestep this one. Not much to it. J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Nelson, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.
Upstairs and Down, with Olive Thomas.—Not much of a picture for a small town. Would be good for city.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, Hubbert, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Lady’s Name, with Constance Talmadge.—Good picture. Everyone had something to say about it. Con- stance sure is getting popular here.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Village Adventure, with Constance Talmadge.—Average for this star.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Country Cousin, with Elaine Hammerstein.—A dandy picture with a dandy star.—Harry Holbroth, Maxine theatre, Imlay City, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Way of a Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—This was not as good as some of her other pictures. Business good.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—Fair program picture. Owen Moore is not much of a drawing card here. Business fair.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Sealed Hearts, with Eugene O’Brien.—This man O’Brien better get a leading woman to help put him over.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The New Moon, with Norma Talmadge.—Not as good as some of her other Select pictures. Business fair.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The Probation Wife, with Norma Talmadge.—Was well received.—Bert Nort on, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Heart of Wetona, with Norma Talmadge.—Star fine, but they don’t like Indian plays here because we see too many Indians.—Raymond Piper, Piper’s Opera House, Virginia, Nebr.

The Spitfire Bride, with Olive Thomas.—This is good. Something different in this.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Safety Curtain, with Norma Talmadge.—Of the usual type portrayed by this star. If your patrons like this type book it. It’s very good.—S. J. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

The Perfect Lover, with Eugene O’Brien.—Did not like the title of this one, but picture went over all right.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Deni son, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lamb and the Lion, with Billie Rhodes.—Billie puts this one over and made a good picture. Average business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

When the Clouds Roll By, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Great. Best Fairbanks picture ever. Packed house for nine hours against strong opposition. Play it as soon as possible and save a place for a return.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

When the Clouds Roll By, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Our patrons did not consider it as good as his first United Artists picture. Action too slow in third, fourth and fifth reels. Business good.—Teufel & Fletcher, Isis theatre, Rose ville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Greatest Performance, with Ellen Terry.—Did only fair business on this. Star not known. Fair picture. Few comments.—A. H. Schurt, Grand theatre, St. Marys, O.—Transient patronage.

Female of the Species, with Dorothy Dalton.—As this is a vamp play was just a little afraid it would not suit the small town, but it is fine, and nothing objectionable in it. Patrons liked it fine.—A. K. Moore, Play-O-Dame theatre, Eustis, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Peggy, with Billie Burke.—Good picture. An old one, but it beats her new ones in my opinion. Book it, you can’t go wrong.—J. E. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Weaker Sex, with special cast.— Ran this when first out, and ran again as reissue. Business far above average. People wanted to get in even after the box office closed. Picture very good. Photography good.—Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—General patronage.

Follies Girl, with Olive Thomas.—The third Thomas reissue we have played. Good story. Clean picture and pleased patrons.—Fred W. Wells, Star theatre, Milford, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Silent Rider, with Roy Stewart —Roy Stewart is a good drawing card here, and his pictures always please and draw the people.—Mrs. R. W. Gracy, Gem theatre, Crystal, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Criminal, with Clara Williams.—This is a reissue, but is very good, and at the price charged for this series the small town exhibitor makes a big mistake if he does not book them.—A. E. Moore, Play-O-Dame theatre, Eustis, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

The Ace of the Saddle, with Harry Carey.—A good Western. Drew a good house and pleased.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Trap, with Olive Tell.—Good. Patrons liked it much. Good business.

JANE NOVAK AND LEWIS STONE

A closeup of two leading players in Marshall Neilan’s sensational success, “The River’s End,” adapted from James Oliver Curwood’s story.
A Little Brother of the Rich, with Frank Mayo—Very good. Please everybody and do well.—M. L. Levine, Ideal theatre, Corsicana, Tex.—General patronage.

The Sundown Trail, with Monroe Salisbury.—Picture way below the average of other Salisbury productions. Will hardly satisfy an ordinary audience.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Right to Happiness, with Dorothy Phillips.—A very timely subject concerning the H. C. L. and social unrest presented in a big way. Our patrons see this every day and it did not please as it should. Business good, due to heavy advertising.—Teufel & Pichter, Isis theatre, Roseville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ace of the Saddle, with Harry Carey.—Fine, if your eye likes Westerns. Good business.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye Gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Petal on the Current, with Mary MacLaren.—First part is as good a comedy as I have ever seen, and ended in real dramatic action. If you want something different, try this one.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Bonnie Bonnie Lassie, with Mary MacLaren.—Good entertainment, but title is a poor business getter. This star needs a good vehicle to win back her former popularity.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Brute Breaker, with Frank Mayo.—Best Universal program picture in three months. Will please any audience.

Title backgrounds best ever.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Riders of Vengeance, with Harry Carey.—He is getting to be a favorite here. We rest easy when it’s a Carey. It’s a good Western as usual.—Raymond Piper, Piper’s Opera House, Virginia, N. Y.

Paid in Advance, with Dorothy Phillips.—A very good Western. A good fight with plenty of thrills. Did not get a chance to advertise this. Took this as an emergency.—Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.

Under Suspicion, with Ora Carew.—Good picture and pleased all. But did not have any drawing power. Star not known here.—Joseph Adocek, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Silk Lined Burglar, with Priscilla Dean.—Very good. I very seldom get comments on good pictures here, but we sure got them on this one.—Kenneth Snyder, Pastime theatre, Mapleton, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Am I Bid, with Mae Murray.—Fair picture. Did not see anything to rave over. Fair crowd.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye Gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Destiny, with Dorothy Phillips.—Fair picture with a good surprise ending. Pleased generally. It is not up to the Dorothy Phillips standard.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bonnie Bonnie Lassie, with Mary MacLaren.—A dandy comedy-drama. Can’t help but please. Star and support good. Please a large crowd.—Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—General patronage.

The Woman Under Cover, with Fritzzi Brunette.—A very nice hour’s entertainment. It has mystery, pathos, some comedy and present day business great throughout the plot. Had fair attendance.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Common Property, with Robert Anderson.—Everybody thought this a white slave story and shunned it. Title menacing but plot worse. Played to twenty-two people. Picture is worthy of better editing by Universal.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Man in the Moonlight, with Monroe Salisbury.—Didn’t think much of this one. Story poor. Business only fair on it. Second run.—Wm. Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

Forbidden, with Mildred Harris.—Best Mildred Harris play. Settings gorgeous. Bad weather. Small attendance. Everyone satisfied.—William Francis, South Side theatre, Greensburg, Ind.—Mixed patronage.

The Day She Paid, with Francella Billington.—Excellent picture of its kind. Has good moral and ends well.—I. W. Rust, Crystal theatre, Crosby, Tex.—General patronage.

The Amazing Wife, with Mary MacLaren.—The best one I have run with that star. Good house.—Kenneth Snyder, Pastime theatre, Mapleton, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Outcasts of Poker Flat, with Harry Carey.—Carey packed the house, and they were not disappointed.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Borrowed Clothes, with Mildred Harris.—Losing, picture not good. Plot good.—William Francis, South Side theatre, Greensburg, Ind.—Mixed patronage.

Ace of the Saddle, with Harry Carey.—Pleased all. Give us more of these good ones.—E. L. Stubbe, Ideal theatre, Ithaca, Mich.

Fight for Love, with Harry Carey.—Good. Harry certainly has made a hit with my patrons. They asked for more. Good business.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye Gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Right to Happiness, with Dorothy Phillips.—Without any exceptions this is the greatest picture Universal ever made. Everybody pleased. You can go the limit on this one, and will make good.—Roland B. Riggs, Liberty theatre, Cheboygan, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Loot, with Ora Carew.—A good picture. Out of the ordinary, Good business.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

The Fortune Hunter, with Earle Williams.—There are as many laughs in this as a Sennett comedy. Good clean picture. Had a good run in era days. Earle Williams fits the role he portrays very well. It is in seven reels.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, 3841 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.

The Wolf, with Earle Williams.—Not as good a picture as average Williams pictures. Do not like star in Western parts. Very funny. Ethel M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Little Miss No Account, with Gladys Leslie.—Nothing to it.—A. C. Klug, Empire theatre, Zumbrota, Minn.—General patronage.

Peggy, with Bessie Love.—This picture positively the worst I ever had. Nothing to it. People walked out on it telling me I never ought to pay for such a picture.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man Who Won, with Harry Moe.—A good picture. Moe is always good.—W. W. Wolitz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

When a Man Loves, with Earle Williams.—Pretty good program. Had a poor night on it, but the ones who saw it were pleased. Williams does pretty fair in this one. It will go over where he is liked.—E. R. McMullen, A-Museum theatre, Las Cruces, N. M.—General patronage.

Specials

Eyes of Youth (Equity), with Clara Kimball Young.—Think this a most wonderful production, perfectly acted. Star at her best. The screen version even greater than the great Marjorie Rambeau in her greatest success of the season.—C. G. Windsor, Rex theatre, Ely, Nev.—General patronage.

Mickey (Western Import), with Marcel Normand.—Good production. Too

Sky Eye (Lesser), with Lieut. Hunt.—Drew well in the rain. Photography poor, but a great stunt picture. People pleased.—P. Th. Svickard, University theatre, Los Angeles, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Unpardonable Sin (Harry Garson), with Blanche Sweet.—The picture is exceptionally good. It surely holds the people breathless. Had a good house in spite of bad weather.—Frank E. Griffin, Alamo theatre, Pella, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Five Nights (Standard), with a special cast.—Here’s a good one. Follow my instructions and you will clean up. Don’t advertise Victoria Cross (the author) but word all your paper “Five Nights in Chinatown, San Francisco’s Underworld,” and you will clean up. Ran eight days to capacity. Picture fair, but will get the money.—G. C. Christman, Gayoso theatre, Kansas City, Mo.—Downtown patronage.

Burlesque on Carmen (Kremer), with Charlie Chaplin.—Broke all house records for Sunday. Everybody well pleased.—J. Lamm, Shakespeare theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts of Men, with George Beban.—One of the best I ever had in my house. It certainly touches the hearts of men.—J. J. Gromn, Chicken theatre, Wilber, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Girl from Hell’s Agony, (Frohman), with Texas Guinan.—Story very good. Plenty of new action. Photography good.—L. W. Haferkamp, Hedwig theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

The Million Dollar Reward, (Grossman), with Lillian Walker.—Has increased my Saturday business 50 per cent. The kids are wild about it. Playing 7th episode and holding up great.—J. Lamm, Shakespeare theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce, (Arrow), with Ann Little.—Opened to biggest day’s business house ever had. Still holding up.—K. H. Hulquist, Chicago theatre, Chicago, Ill.—General patronage.

Lightning Bryce, (Arrow) with Ann Little.—Best serial I ever ran. House packed all shows. On third episode, getting stronger. If you want a money maker book this.—John Allen, Lyric theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce (Arrow), with Ann Little.—This is a very good serial with excellent photography. Plenty of action, and the interest is well sustained. Both stars are capable. Expect business to grow in each episode.—H. A. Jones, Garden theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce (Arrow), with Ann Little.—This is a very good serial with excellent photography. Plenty of action, and the interest is well sustained. Both stars are capable. Expect business to grow in each episode.—H. A. Jones, Garden theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Volplaning Around N‘Yawk

With J. B.

On Tuesday, March 23, at 10 o’clock in the morning, the American Cinema Corporation gave a special showing at the Strand Theatre, New York, of their first E. F. Hutton production, "This Fighting Voice." Mr. Lincoln is surrounded by a cast of notable persons, such as Agnes Ayres, Riley Hatch, Fuller Mellish, Walter Keppeler, and others. This picture was directed by R. William Neill who has just completed two pictures for Norma Talmadge.

MARION DAVIES, Cosmopolitan star, wears a costume at the "Ball of the Gods" in "The Restless Sex," declared by all holders to be literally dazzling. It is described by the costumers who purveyed it as a "solid mass of diamonds and silver buckles, the caps being made of rows and rows of diamonds, giving the impression of a shower of brilliants," and its sparkling mesh is said to be so cunningly woven that it is puzzling to say where the star’s real jewels begin and the costumer’s spurious ones leave off. "What would that costume cost, the real thing" was asked of Signor Carlos Burgas, the diamond expert now in New York, who, as the guest of Joseph Urban, designer of the ball set, watched a rehearsal at International Studios when upwards of one thousand people were employed. "In the real thing," probably replied the authority on stones, "That gown would cost a quarter of a billion dollars—in your currency."

CHARLES A. MILLER, one of Mayflower’s foremost directors returned from Port Henry on Friday. Mr. Miller has been on location for over four months and during that time he has completed two pictures.

ESTELLE TAYLOR, the Fox Star, left last night for Lake Saranac, New York, where she is to start work on the superlative "Milady’s Dress" in which she is to play the leading part under the direction of Charles Brabin.

Suspension of all Rochester building in which "Beer Money" is interested, including $1,000,000 School of Music, a $500,000 addition to the Chamber of Commerce Building and additions to his kodak park plant, was announced today. Labor demands and other high costs of building, Mr. Eastman said, forced his decision.

WILLIAM S. BUTTERFIELD, of Detroit, has been in town for the past week. Mr. Butterfield controls a chain of show palaces in Michigan.

FRANK Q. DANTZEN, of Omaha, is in New York on a business visit, quartered at the Knickerbocker.

WILLIAM GOLDMAN, of Koplar and Goldman in the city. Rumor has it that this is "Billee’s" maiden trip to Manhattan but since he is in the film business there is little chance of his buying a gold brick (outside that little wick in our midst).

J. A. STILES has opened offices for the Stanton Theatre Company at 109 West 42nd Street. The company expects soon to produce five reel features. J. A. is an old hand at the game and knows every angle of it. He should be able to make things hum.

Some surprisingly new ideas in the way of sets are promised in the forthcoming production of the American Cinema Corporation. JAMES VINCENT, president of the Motion Picture Directors’ Association, who recently signed a contract with American Cinema to produce this picture—not yet titled—at a figure said to be one of the largest ever named in a contract for an independent production, has already drawn up designs for some sets for this picture in which will be introduced some novelties in technical direction which will be startling in their effectiveness. The exact nature of these innovations is being kept a secret at present, but Mr. Vincent admits that his ideas have been thoroughly tested and are practicable. Shining of scenes began this week.

In line with his recently announced plan to launch an extensive advertising and publicity campaign in the interests of Mayflower productions, ISAAC WOLFER, president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation has engaged ALBERT W. SOBER, formerly identified with the publicity department of Vitagraph, Capeliani Productions and Goldwyn. Mr. Sober joins the Mayflower organization after serving as head of the Goldwyn exploitation and service department for almost a year. In this capacity, he was responsible for the production of the company’s exhibitor-accessories including the press books and lithographs, and in addition was editor of the firm’s house organ, the Goldwyner. As a member of the Mayflower publicity staff, Sober will devote himself to the preparation of trade paper advertising and publicity as well as handling the press books under the supervision of Mark Larkin, director of publicity for Mayflower.

FRENCH ISN’T EASY

MARY MILES MINTER

the Newhart star improves each fleeting moment when “off set” during the taking of “Jenny Be Good” by studying French.

George G. Shew, the “old reliable” is doing splendid work for the Rivoli and Rialto. They don’t count his “put overs” by line any more but by the mile.

Despite the fact that there is no Secretary of State on the job to sign passports, the European exodus of film folks continues and most every executive who was formerly accustomed to transcontinental jaunts a few times a year now books passage for Europe with a single pen stroke, "change of climate" plus the opportunity as they say "to look over the field." Some may be eager to see the shell holes and trenches, but by far the bulk in the bank roll will be on a war basis. What?

JIM ANDERSON of the F. N. E. C. will soon bring Mina Clary down to New York to "Brighten up the Corner" over Brooklyn way.

Pathé Preparing to Publish “Río Grande”

Pathé Exchange, Inc., shortly will publish another great stage play made into a motion picture. "Río Grande," from the pen of Augustus Thomas, is the latest production of this character, and Pathé officials say that inquiries already received indicate that it will be in great demand from the moment of its issuance.

The widespread interest in the picture is said to be due to the extraordinary success of the many road companies which were started in the production. The cast is headed by Rosemaryethey, as the senorita, and Allan Sears, in the role of the Irish cowboy.

Ryan’s Recovery Permits

Resumption of Production

Joe Ryan has recovered from the injuries received while "bull-doging" a steer for one of the scenes in "Hidden Dangers," the Vitagraph serial in which he is co-starred with Jean Paige, and production of the serial has been resumed. One of Ryan’s next tasks will be to kill a shark with a knife in an under-water scene. His implements are instruments and the forces working for and against him will be largely those of electricity. Ryan plays the role of Dr. Brutell, a young scientist possessed of two distinct personalities. He works with electricity to such an extent that his discoveries become marvellous, and his employment of this power works in terrible ways. The picture delves deep into science and is said to be very unusual from the viewpoint. Albert E. Smith and Cleveland Moffett wrote the story.

Neilan Prepares to Film "Penrod," By Tarkington

Preparations are under way at Hollywood, Cal., by Marshall Neilan to begin production very soon on Tarkington’s famous "Penrod" stories, according to the director-producer’s New York office.

Reed Heustis, newspaper humorist, has been assigned to write the continuity. Wesley Barry, whose work in "Daddy Long Legs," "The Unpardoned Sin" and other Neilan-directed productions, will play the title role of Penrod.
With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

CECEL PEROIVAL has been added to the Thomas H. Ince staff, and has been put in charge of the department. Cecile Percival is the widow of the late G. Harold Percival, formerly technical director at the Ince studio.

Not to be outdone by Luther B. Reed or Thompson Buchannon, author of "Civillian Clothes" and scenario editor at the Goldwyn studio, John H. Blackwood, scenario editor at the Thomas H. Ince studio, will enter the ranks of the play-writing profession. He has organized the Ince studio in Los Angeles in a few weeks, when his play, "A Dollar Down," will be presented. "A Dollar Down" was played at the Alcazar theatre. In San Francisco, some time ago and smashed existing box office records. After its Los Angeles run, the Blackwood play will be taken to New York.

The scenario writers are fighting the starlette in their next work for "stunts." The latest example of this craving for novelty was the voluntary incarneration of Agnes Johnson in the well known San Quentin state penitentiary. Miss Johnson is writing a continuity that calls for a scene in jail and she went after the real thing in "It was a wonderful experience," avers Miss Johnson, whereupon Clark Thomas mentioned something to the effect that "that's what they all say—after they get out."

The Pat Palmer who is to celebrate her initial screen appearance as a star at a local Broadway theatre is said to be none other than MARGARET GIBSON, who formerly was a noted personage in local studio life and who dropped out of sight a year or so ago.

CLARK THOMAS, manager of the Thomas H. Ince studios, John H. Blackwood, scenario editor of the studio, and LUTHER REED, author of "Dear Me," one of the reigning successes of the current Chicago theatrical season, have formed a lunch club that seems to be a novel idea in studio life. With the initiation of each member, the newcomer is required to invite the organizers of the club to luncheon. The only fault in the scheme, so Thomas avers, is that there are times when it is utterly impossible to induce new members to observe the original rule of the club—that is, dig for lunch money.

EBBY POLO, BENNY LEONARD and LEACH CROSS entertained JAMES J. CORBETT at a luncheon at Universal City a few days ago. Several Los Angeles sporting writers were present. One of the scribes asked Corbett to tell him the difference between earning one's living in the ring and in the picture business. "When you box you use your fists and in acting you use your wits," replied the former champion.

MILDRED HARRIS CHAPLIN'S next feature will be "Old Dads," a picturization of the popular book. Anticipation of the outcome is not confined to the popularity of the star, but largely to her new association with LLOYD INGRAHAM, who had charge of the making of most of the Douglas MacLean and Doris May comedy-dramas.

HARRY EDWARDS has been named production manager of the Christie Film Company by Al Christie, its president and supervising director. Edwards has served two years as assistant to Al Christie, hav-
NANCY DEAVER who has the leading role in the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation’s production “The Law of the Yukon,” the first of a series produced by Charles Miller. Miss Deaver is from Australia where she appeared upon the stage before entering upon a screen career.

Hope Loring, editor of serial and western scenarios at Universal City, was thinking of a new kick for the next episode in a current thriller as she emerged from a restaurant in Hollywood, and in her pre-occupation stepped into the wrong car and drove away. Miss Loring owns a dark blue coupe and her car was standing next to its twin sister. She had gone several blocks before she realized the mistake, and then she broke all records getting back. The next day Priscilla Dean paid the writer a visit in her office and incidentally told her that her car had been stolen the day before, but when she returned with the police the car had been returned. Priscilla is now wondering why she received a large bouquet of flowers the next day with Hope Loring’s card attached.

Somehow the report got started that Frank E. Woods, supervising director of Lasky studios, has started a school for photoplayers. Aspiring scenarists would be fortunate if that were the fact, for Woods is recognized as an authority on story preparation. But that official is too busy to devote any time to outside work, deep in his interest in budding writers may be.

A duel with ropes was fought on the Goldwyn lot recently by Will Rogers, the cowboy comedian, and “Big Boy,” a Texas cowboy who is one of his pals. “Big Boy” roped Rogers first but Rogers, who was riding a horse came back quick and caught “Big Boy,” pulled him off his feet and dragged him along back of the horse.

ORA DEVEREAUX, a former member of the Belasco stock company, appears in the latest Universal publication to reach Los Angeles’ Broadway, “The Peddler of Lies,” at the Superba, with Frank Mayo in the chief role. Miss Devereaux is a striking beauty of the Maxine Elliott type of a score of years ago. Her stage career at the Belasco was marked by a number of brilliant successes.

Hobart Bosworth and the members of the company supporting him in his latest picture, “The Parker Read, Jr., photoplay which is as yet unannounced, trekked to Truckee, Cal., in the northern part of the state for some necessary snow shots. Bosworth’s regular director, Irwin Willett, has been confined to a Los Angeles hospital for the past three weeks with the flu, and during his absence Bosworth has been directing his own company.

John Elliott, of the Wilkes stock company, at the local Majestic theatre, has resigned to go into pictures here. Elliott is a fine character actor.

Priscilla Dean engaged a new p. a. the other day and one of his initial efforts to grab space from the Los Angeles papers was a frost-bitten whereabout his star having been robbed of some of her stage jewelry. Old stuff, but it landed with the city eds.

Charles West, whose splendid portrayal of the dope fiend in Marshall Neilan’s “River’s End,” was the cause for much favorable comment, has been re-engaged by the young producer for an important part of the latest Neilan picture.

Robert Brunton has purchased a beautiful nickel trimmed, maroon finished limousine to gad around in these warm spring days. In order to accommodate his fast increasing string of motor cars he is having a new cement garage erected at his residence on the Brunt lot.

Priscilla Dean and her mother, May Preston Dean, invited a score of friends the other evening to tend a surprise party to Wheeler Oakman on the occasion of his birthday. Mr. Oakman was Priscilla’s leading man in her current Universal special feature, “The Virgin of Stamboul,” and rumor has it that the two are either engaged or married—or both.

Maurice Maeterlinck, the Belgian poet, now in Santa Monica to write a motion picture story for Goldwyn, has gone into seclusion to work on his story, declining all social engagements owing to his pressing literary work.

Lawrence Weber, after seeing Edith Hallor and her company well on their way to the end of her first picture, has returned to his own Broadway.

C. J. Marley will take charge of the southern branches of the Vitagraph and United Picture Productions corporations. He will fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of H. H. Hicks from the post. Mr. Marley has gone to San Francisco to become manager of the branch of the American Photoplay Company. The local Triangle distributing agency was absorbed some weeks ago by the United.

E. H. McQuesten, who has been long in the theatrical business, has taken up the managerial reigns of Clune’s Broadway. He succeeds Clinton Pedrick. McQuesten has been identified with the motion picture industry since the old Biograph days. He has just returned from government service. He was with the naval forces in France and England.

First National Executives in Kentucky and Tennessee Visit Exhibitors

LOUISVILLE, KY.—Fred Levy, president of First National Exhibitors' exchange in Kentucky and Tennessee, and Lee L. Goldberg, secretary, have just returned from a two-state convention of clothiers while en route. Mixing pictures and clothing, according to Mr. Levy, was productive of much good for the picture industry in this section than can be estimated.

Meet Picture Men

The two men journeyed first to Cincinnati, Ohio, to attend the state convention of clothiers. There they met many picture men from Northern Kentucky and L. Libson of Cincinnati, who brought them to meet Mr. Levy and through him met the Tennessee clothiers. The picture men and the clothing representatives became well acquainted and struck up a mutual interest that is certain to be productive of good.

Go to Chattanooga

From Knoxville Mr. Levy and Mr. Goldberg went to Chattanooga. There they met Milton B. Ochs, editor and publisher of the Chattanooga Times and brother of Adolph Ochs, publisher of the New York Times. It happened that Milton Ochs had been appointed state chairman by Governor Roberts of the campaign to raise Tennessee's share of the fund for America's memorial in France to her soldiers dead. Mr. Ochs was anxious to get the campaign presented on slides in the picture houses. At Mr. Levy's suggestion he appointed Frank H. Dowler, Jr., of the Signal Amusement Company in Chattanooga and Knoxville, chairman for these cities; Tony Sudekum, president of the Crescent Amusement Company in Nashville, and Charles L. McElravy of the Majestic in Memphis, chairman for their cities.

Meet Leading Men

In Chattanooga they attended a Rotary Club Luncheon which brought them in contact with the leading men of the city.

In Nashville, the two met Tony and Harry Sudekum and the other leading picture men of that section. The visit to Memphis was equally pleasant. From Memphis they returned to Louisville.

Many incidental benefits were secured, it is announced. In one city an important newspaper had failed to recognize the picture houses at their full value. Mr. Levy and Mr. Goldberg were able to bring the paper to a full appreciation of the motion picture and henceforth the paper will hold to this policy.

Exploiting for Vitagraph

G. W. Atkinson has joined Vitagraph, Inc., and will do special exploitation work in the field. His headquarters are at Denver.

HOW NOT TO EXHIBIT COMEDY

Al Christie Decides Managers of the Larger Theatres Because of Their Apathetic Attitude Toward Subjects Produced in a Lighter Vein

"We have heard a lot the last few years about short subjects being necessary entertainment for theatre programs, but evidently the managers of some of the finest moving picture temples in America still believe that short stuff is a necessary evil, to be gotten rid of as quickly as possible," says Al Christie, well-known motion picture director and producer.

The managers of some of these so-called temples of the silent drama evidently believe that they have to run a comedy because they know a few of their patrons like them and, therefore, the comedy is a thing to be sluffed over as quickly as possible while people are changing their seats and then forgotten. They give the patrons a beautiful organ recital before the comedy goes on and get everybody into a Sunday-go-to-meeting frame of mind and then wonder why nobody laughs.

Films Run Too Fast

"A lot of people are afraid to laugh because the main title was run on a curtain, or run so fast that the audience doesn't know whether it is a comedy or a picture of a foot race at Poughkeepsie. It is a well-known fact that when all main titles are cut off the film, or run while the beautiful and expensive silk curtains are being manipulated or while the audience is changing seats, the persons who want to see a comedy don't know what they are looking at and perhaps by the middle of the first reel of the comedy attraction they gradually begin to learn what it is all about.

A glaring example of a typical showing of a comedy in one of these 'Cinema Palaces' occurred recently at the California theatre in Los Angeles, where the first 200 feet of the comedy was shown on the curtains while the orchestra was tuning up and then blaring forth like the big band does at a circus while the crowd is going out.

How a Circus Does It

"Nobody ever saw a successful circus in which the after show or concert was started before the big fellow in the silk hat and well-announced it and the people who paid 10 cents extra had gotten into their seats. That wouldn't be show business. Yet the trade paper interviews with the big fellows who run the cinema temples maintain that they are showmen, and I suppose they are. If they still want comedies to drive people out of their theatres quickly, I suppose that kind of comedies are still being made. I don't want to make them myself.

"The fellows who run small neighborhood theatres which please their regular customers regularly can teach the big fellows a good deal about satisfying their patrons. They figure that people come to see pictures and they give them pictures complete, and the audience does appreciate knowing what the pictures are all about.

"Laughs in a comedy pile up, starting with a small bubble of merriment. If one person laughs, it may start a whole house rocking. But let a big-priced orchestra in a cinema temple tear its lungs and arms out playing as loud as it can during a comedy, as it frequently does, and it defies anybody to laugh. Such theatres are not cinema temples—they are Main street mausoleums."

A SUSPICIOUS LOOKING "VAMP"

However, it's a scene from "Irma Vamp," a Comedyart production. Made by Special Pictures Corporation and is said to be a travesty on the film industry.
Mary Pickford showing her astride the back of a somewhat unwilling donkey.

Title Played Up

In general, Mr. Burley aimed to play up the fact that the "Heart o' the Hills" was a picture of the same series as her two past successes, "Daddy Long Legs" and "The Hoodlum," both of which were published by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. The title of the picture was played up conspicuously in order that every bit of available advantage might be gained from its association with John Ford's book and local popularity of Mary Pickford was enhanced by follow-up press matter, which brought out clearly that her new film played the part of the girl she never before had attempted to portray.

In particular, Mr. Burley spared no efforts to bring out the dramatic elements in "Heart o' the Hills," and in so doing used with good effect many striking quotations. Many of these he originated and many others he culled from the book.

The sum and substance of the entire campaign as recorded by exhibitors in larger cities lying outside of Kendallville, is that Mr. Burley has proven beyond the shadow of a doubt that regardless of the size of the town in which he operates, he can conscientiously apply himself to the most advanced theories in exploitation and presentation, with every assurance in the world that the theatregoers of his city will enthusiastically greet any of his efforts that show a tendency for the advancement of their pleasure in screen entertainment.

Office Changes Made

By Selznick-Republic

Transfer Made To Establish Closer Relationship and Greater Efficiency.

In order to establish a closer relationship between Select and Republic executives and to insure a greater efficiency in various departments, Lewis J. Selznick announces department transfers in the home offices of both concerns.

The Republic executives have moved their offices to the Select home office building at 729 Seventh avenue, and a number of the depart-ments formerly were in the home office building now are occupying the offices given up by the Republic officials, which are located at 130 West Forty-sixth street.

Plan of Morris

The transfer of these departments is the result of a plan which Sam E. Morris, general manager, has contemplated for some time.

Brinton N. Busch, president of Republic, and George Meeker, Republic sales manager, now have offices at 729 Seventh avenue. The Select auditing department, under M. C. Howard, comptroller, and the purchasing department, under E. C. Ryan, have been moved to the Forty-sixth street building. This transfer resulted in more space for the contract- ing department, the office headquarters and gave additional room for executive offices.

Law Offices Assigned

The suite of rooms formerly occupied by the law offices of Fonta, Kirchway, France & Michael will be used for executive offices. The law staff has been assigned the suite of rooms on the sixth floor of the Seventh avenue building.

The advertising, art and staff departments have been moved to the Forty-sixth street address.
Urges Exporters Not to Quit Field While the Conditions Are Unsettled

Howells Says Those Who Desert Market Will Make It Exceedingly Difficult for Those Who Stick to Find Business Normal

Terming his subject "the equivalent of desertion by fire," David P. Howells, in a statement, points out the grave danger in the future from what appears to be a concerted action by several film exporters to abandon their foreign affiliations and turn to other and less difficult phases of activity in the domestic film industry, as a result of the discouraging aspects given the export situation by the rates of exchange and rumors of increased production and reduced consumption.

Constitution and surprise mark the thoughts of foreign renters and distributors as they watch the fast changing tenure of enthusiasm in American film export circles, according to letters and cables received by Mr. Howells recently.

"Present conditions may reduce our profits as an export house, and they may add greatly to the expense of operation, but we feel what should be a common responsibility among all American exporters who have solicited the confidence, the good will and the business of buyers abroad, that so long as the situation does not force us into bankruptcy, and so long as it enables us to continue without sacrificing everything we own or have, that we have a great duty and responsibility to discharge in aiding our foreign customers to fight the turbulence through to success."

Adjust Contracts

"Wherever the facts have merited, we have readjusted our contracts with buyers in Europe so that they can continue as handlers of American pictures. We are trying in every way we can to lighten the pressure and to develop a more friendly and confident feeling, not toward ourselves especially, but toward all American exporters. If the men who regularly send film abroad expect to get out of the export business the moment they run any rough, and offering promise for the future instead of big profits on the instant, they are speedily to find it will be exceedingly difficult for the exporters who stick and fight through to find anything like a normal market.

European exporters are pressed almost to the breaking point now. The absence of theatre development has kept down the consumption of American films, while production here has increased in volume. Still the foreign renters have continued to buy, not for love, certainly, but as a business proposition, and as the most important party to the success of the exporters in this country.

Will Encourage European Film

"Add to all the worries generating from these facts a complete rearrangement of the American export situation, and you have the proverbial last straw, which will decide the big foreign buyers to bend every energy to the encouragement of European made pictures as a substitute, at far less cost with far less worry and strain, for the American pictures they now import.

"All this is happening now, and it is going to have a dangerous retroactive effect on the American market. Exactly what the ultimate result in American film circumscribe is impossible to predict, but it is certain, as a broad, national outcome, that American producers and American exhibitors will have to divide the cost between them.

"Now, if ever, is the time when every American exporter should stick tight to his guns, refusing to be frightened into desertion, and exerting himself to the utmost to help his foreign customers to tide over the crisis and bring about an earlier remedy by giving the same consideration he expects."

Advertising Indicates Interest in Industry

J. R. Quirk Says Magazine for Film Devotees No Longer "Class" Publication

James R. Quirk, publisher and editor of Photoplay Magazine, in a statement, calls attention to the great growth of the motion picture industry within the last few years, and points out that no longer are the magazines devoted to the industry looked upon as "class" publications.

"The history of the motion picture industry, and of its rise in power and prestige in the world of business and in the eyes of business men, may be traced in the history of the magazine," he says. "One of the surest signs of interest is the desire to read about the objects of interest."

Twelve Selznick Companies Active
At Studios in East and on Coast

Majority of Studio, Technical and Acting Staff Is Now in West Under Management of Harry Rapf—Bronx and Fort Lee Plants Busy

A review of the motion picture activities of Selznick Pictures, just submitted by officials of the organization indicate that Myron Selznick has in full sway one of the largest production forces in the industry. The Selznick producing activities, under which come also the National Picture Theatres subjects, cover a wide area that links up the East with the West. Two large studios are used in the East, one in the Bronx and the other at Fort Lee, N. J., and about an equal amount of space is utilized in California. At the present time a large proportion of the studio, technical and acting staff, is on the West Coast, where the studios are under the management of Harry Rapf.

Miss Thomas in "The Flapper"

Olive Thomas, one of the Selznick popular stars, is now in the midst of production of "The Flapper," written for her by Frances Marion. This feature, which is Miss Thomas' seventh for Selznick, is being directed by Alan Crosland. Miss Thomas is at the Bronx plant.

On the coast, Eugene O'Brien is being filmed in John Lynch's story, "The Fugurehead," the sixth which this star has made for Selznick. Robert Ellis is directing, and upon its completion will return to New York accompanied by Mr. O'Brien.

Miss Hammerstein Makes Fifth

Elaine Hammerstein, whose most recent production following "The Woman Game," is "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," is busy at Fort Lee in the production of a feature called "Things That Hurt." This is Miss Hammerstein's fifth picture for Selznick. William P. S. Earle is directing.

Owen Moore is being filmed in California in his third Selznick picture, "The Desperate Hero." This production, which is announced as rapidly nearing completion, is from Edgar Franklin's story, "His Word of Honor," and is being directed by Wesley Ruggles.

Film Nears Completion

The Ralph Ince Selznick production, "Out of the Snows," is announced as nearing completion. In the cast of this production are Mr. Ince and Zena Keefe. Selznick's 1920 star, Mr. Ince also directed the production, which is from the story of the great Northwest by G. B. Lancaster.

Still another production nearing completion in the Selznick Eastern studio is Willard Mack's "The Timber Wolf," directed by Burton George.

Four companies are working on the Herbert Kaufman Weekly editorial subjects, which are being made in the East. These short features are being given the same care in filming, it is said, as is given the five-reel subjects. Among these are "Little Red Riding Hood," "The Faded Butterfly" and "Puppy Love." It is the intention to have eight productions completed before the first is published.

Miss Hallor On West Coast

"Just Outside the Door," a Lawrence Weber production in which Edith Hallor appears, and which is to be distributed by Republic, is being made on the West Coast under the direction of George Irvin. This is the third Weber production made for Selmick-Republic issuance.

The third picture for National Picture Theatres, Inc., Lewis J. Selznick's co-operative organization, is "The Invisible Divorce," following "Just a Wife" and "Blind Youth." This is being made on the West Coast under the direction of Edward Sloman.

Just a Wife has been published throughout the country. Reports indicate, according to National officials, that the picture is off to a good start and that the future of National is promising. Thus far one company has been occupied in the filming of National Picture Theatres subjects. An announcement states that in the near future two will be producing this brand.

Scenarists Are Busy

The Selznick scenario department is said to be in excellent shape and includes, besides John Lynch, editor, and his assistant, Melville Hammett, R. Cecil Smith, Ella Stuart Carmon, Lewis Allen Breuer, Charles Bellmont Davis and others. Myron Selznick has purchased a large amount of material within the past several months and the scenario department is engaged in putting the stories into shape for the screen.

The art departments of both the East and West studios are under the management of Harry Rapf, as announced by Selznick at the height of perfection. In the production department with Myron Selznick, as his lieutenants, are Frank J. Hampton, James Dunn, William Steiner and others.

Every Second Week Fixed

For Keystone Publication

Re-issued Keystone comedies now are being published every second week instead of every week, according to J. A. Beert, president of United Picture Productions Corporation.

The first publication under the new arrangement was made on March 11. United's publication schedule from March 11 to April 25 follows:

March 14—"The Vampire," adapted from "The Phantom of the Roses," and supervised by Thomas H. Ince and starring Dorothy Dalton, with the comedy "The Two O'Clock Train."

March 21—"When Men Forget," starring Mollie King.

March 28—"The Pinch Hitter," with Charles Ray and John Collier in "Better Late Than Never."

April 18—Florence Reed in "The Eternal Mother."

Famous Pictures Issues

Tyrod Subjects in East

The arrangement whereby Tyrod Pictures, Inc., assigns all of its product to Famous Pictures Sales Company for distribution in the New York, Buffalo and Albany territories, has become effective. Mr. Radin will hold the balance of the company on the state right basis on all pictures bought by his company.

"It Happened In Paris," the feature in which Mme. Sarah Bernhardt portrays her protege, Mme. Yoraska, and W. Lawrence has presented to the press and public, according to reports following the premier showing in New York. Charles P. Saunders, district manager of Famous Pictures, announces that heavy bookings are the rule throughout the territory.

Pathe In Chicago Books Total of 480 Days On "Other Men's Shoes"

Home Office Reports That Edgar Lewis Picture Has Broken, Several Records Established On Its Other Productions

Edgar Lewis' "Other Men's Shoes" has been responsible for the breaking of several records hung up by Pathe Exchange, Inc., on its specials, according to its officials, but none has been more noteworthy than the feat just accomplished with this attraction by the Chicago branch.

One month after publication date, and following the showing of the production in the leading Chicago first run theatres, the Windy City office on March 4 reported to the home office the booking of another 150 days in first and second run theatres in its territory. The total number of days received thus far by Chicago on the Lewis production is 490.

Booked During Drive

Outside of Chicago proper, "Other Men's Shoes" was booked during the drive conducted by former Manager E. A. Eschmann, and which will continue throughout March, to the following theatres:

Hartley, East Chicago; Orpheum, Ottawa, Ill.; Empress, Peoria; Empire, Auburn, Ind.; Lyceum, Columbia City, Ind.; Palace, Muncatine, IA.; Grand Opera House, Dubuque, IA.; Colonial, Delavan, Ill.; Wigwam, Geneva, Ill.; Lincoln, Lincoln, Ill.; Temple, Mishawaka, Ind.; DeLuxe, Lake Forest, Ill.; LaSalle, South Bend, Ind.; Orpheum, Elkhart, Ind.; Garden, Michigan City, Ind.; Princess, Monticello, IL; Riviera, Peru, Ill.

Booked at Local Houses

In all other territories "Other Men's Shoes" is surpassing the records established by any previous Pathe special, it is announced, not excpeting "The Thirteenth Chair," "Common Clay," or any other of Pathe's biggest money makers.

Will Pass High Mark

Among the theatres booking the production during the past week were: The William Penn, Chester, Pa.; Palace, Ardmore; Grand, Pullman, Washington, D. C.; Paramount, Lewiston, Ida.; Empress, Spokane, Pialto, Leaven, Col.; Strand, Selbyville, Ind.; Luna-Lite, Marion, Ind.; Majestic, Florence, Ala.; Rex, Bismarck, N. D.; Opera House, Wadsworth, O.; Valentine, Defiance, O.; Royal, Upper Sandusky; Playhouse, Dover, N. J.; Empire, Rahway, N. J.; Arline, Elizabeth, N. J.; Detroit; Miami, Detroit; Wuerth, Ana, Arbor; Crystal, Detroit; Lakewood, Detroit; Majestic, Charleson, Pa.; Family, St. Mary, Pa.; Palace, Franklin, Pa.; Palace, Hamilton, O.; Auditorium, Dayton; Rex, Middleton, O.; Linthinon, Little Falls, N. Y.; Martin, Globe, Az.; Forepaugh's, Chicago; Playhouse, Delphi; Opera House, South Bethel, and a host of other theatres.

Already slightly more than 500 shows have been engaged. "Other Men's Shoes" has been surpassed by virtually every exchange and the indications are that within a fortnight each branch will have the special high mark set for it in booking expectancy.

Metro Buys "Clothes" For an All-Star Cast

Metro announces the purchase of the screen rights to "Clothes," from Channing Pollock, who collaborated with Avery Hopwood in writing this society drama. Mr. Pollock previously had disposed of the rights to "Clothes" to another producing organization, but he recently bought back the play.

"Clothes" was produced by William A. Brady at the old Manhattan theatre. The original stage cast included Frank Worth, Grace George, Ferdinand Gottschalk, A. H. Stewart, Robert T. Haines and Jennie Eustace. The play, according to intimations, will not be made into a vehicle for any one star but will be done on the screen with an all-star cast. Maxwell Karger, Metro director general, probably will supervise production.

Louis K. Sidney Joins Fox Theatre in Detroit

Louis K. Sidney, manager of the Kings, Pershing, Juanita, Shenandoah, Grand-Florissant and Lindell theatres, St. Louis, Mo., has severed his St. Louis connections and joined the William Fox theatre staff as manager of the Washington theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Before beginning his work in St. Louis, Sidney had been with the William Fox theatre organization for five and one-half years. His work in St. Louis has attracted favorable attention throughout the country and those who have watched the development of the above-named theatres with interest are optimistic regarding his future in the new location.

"Scarlet Dragon" Is Announced As Next Park and Whiteside Offering

"The Scarlet Dragon" is the title of the production to follow "Empty Arms," according to Lester Park and Edward Whiteside, 505 Fifth Avenue, New York. In every department—author, director, star, featured players, art director and cameraman—the artistic personnel is the same that made "Empty Arms." The story, written by Willard King Bradley, deals in a sociological manner with the subject of commercialized vice. The theme has been handled by Frank Reicher, who has produced, it is said, a number of unique scenic and lighting effects.

Gail Kane Stars

The star is Gail Kane, who is said to have a highly emotional role as Gloria Travers, a New England girl who combats the sinister efforts of a powerful crime kingpin to find her younger sister who has become caught in a dangerous whirlpool of gilded vice. The featured players are Thurston Hall and J. Herbert Frank.

Most prominent in the supporting cast are William Bechtel, Norbert Wicki, Nellie Burt, Paul Lane and Rene Genard.

Cabaret in Chinatown

The production's outstanding feature, it is said, is an opulent cabaret in the heart of Chinatown. For this scene the producers are said not to have spared any expense, both from the standpoint of scenic beauty and high-priced artistic talent. Appearing in this scene are Ted Lewis, who is accompanied by his famous jazz band; Millie Dazio, the dancer of "Aphrodite," a genuine Nubian dancer, who is said to have once been a favorite of the late Abdul Hamid, and a number of beauties who were recruited from the leading Broadway cabarets to lend color.

Interiors by Flower

The interiors are by A. Bela Viragh-Flower. The camera was handled by George Benoit.

Photoplay Libraries, Inc., exclusive selling agent of the entire Park-Whiteside output, which is handling "Empty Arms," also distributing "The Scarlet Dragon." No announcement as to the distribution plans of "The Scarlet Dragon" has been received from either Lester Park or Edward Whiteside, but it is thought that as soon as Byron Park, general manager of Photoplay Libraries, returns from his cross-country tour in behalf of "Empty Arms," a definite statement will be issued to the trade.

HERBERT HEBES

Europe Eager for Educational and Feature Pictures, Says Mrs. Bray

Declares That English Managers Devote More of Their Attention to Artistic Appearance Than Do Managers in America

Mrs. J. R. Bray, wife of the president of Bray Pictures Corp., who recently returned to this country after an extended tour of England, France and Germany on an investigation of educational film conditions abroad, reports that American feature photoplays and educational films are in greater demand now than at any former period in the history of the motion picture.

"We have shown the world what America can do with the photoplay," said Mrs. Bray, "and Europe realizes the technical proficiency we have attained."

Travels To Berlin Alone

Mrs. Bray was one of the first women to leave occupied German territory for the interior unaccompanied. She traveled to Berlin alone, and from there to Vienna. But the sight of the stricken, starving people there decided her to return at once to Berlin.

Demand Increases

"The English people are wildly enthusiastic about photoplays these days. They have been starved for entertainment and now you will find crowds a block long in front of almost every motion picture theatre every evening. There are not nearly enough theatres in England to supply the demand. There are perhaps 4,000 cinemas in England, and builders are trying to obtain materials to erect more. In the meantime, shows are being held in converted stores, in halls and in any place available."

Know How to Decorate

"On the whole, the English theatre managers devote more care to the artistic appearance of their theatres than do the small theatre managers in America. Of course, England has nothing to compare with our Strand, Capitol, Rivoli, or Rialto; but all the smaller theatres show care in the appearance of the lobbies, interiors and in the method of showing the pictures. For example, the English know how to decorate a theatre with plants and so lend an artistic and intimate atmosphere to the interior of the theatre.

"More care seems to be taken with such important details as ventilation, and there is a general desire to see their audiences comfortably entertained."

U. S. Ahead Mechanically

"America seems to be ahead of England on the mechanical side of the industry. I believe the projection machines are not quite as good as we use over here. But this will soon be remedied as the manufacturers are experimenting with various new types of machines.

"You have no idea how enthusiastic they are in England over the Bray pictures. I gave a private showing to the London local board of education and the members wanted to use our pictures in their schools immediately. The animated technical drawings fascinated them. They had never seen entire courses of instruction so clearly and entertainingly presented, they told me.

"The schools in England are anxious waiting for us to complete our library before they use our entire output.

WHO'S AFRAID OF A LIGHTWEIGHT?

Al St. John, the Paramount comedian, isn't afraid of anything after being hit with squishy pies for years, hence the air of confidence as he poses with Benny Leonard, now making pictures for Warner Brothers.

"Of course, there has been a great improvement in the English motion picture since the war. They are using American feature pictures as models, and the development is going on at a tremendous rate.

"Another development of the English film is the propaganda film and the interests of reconstruction. Various facts concerning the national life are flashed on the screen.

"I stood outside a motion picture theatre in London and observed the people coming in. And would you believe it, several people didn't know what educational picture was being shown. They came, it seems, for the educational film and accepted the feature picture as well."

From England, Mrs. Bray went to France. In Paris, she found that only the larger distributors were willing to be fair with their exhibitors.

Distributors Not Protected

"It seems that the rights of distributors are not sufficiently protected, and the authorities make few and futile attempts to guard stolen pictures from being sold to irresponsible, if not, dishonest, exhibitors. During my stay in Paris I traced a large number of Pickford pictures, but the authorities did nothing to establish the rights of the real owners of the pictures. The larger distributors are now organizing closely for their own protection.

"The motion picture theatres in Paris are not nearly so well kept as those in England, or in America. I noted a presentation, Paris is far behind us. France needs more motion picture theatres than any country in Europe, with the possible exception of Russia. And in France, the propaganda value of the motion picture has scarcely been appreciated."

Goes To Cologne

After a short sojourn in Paris, Mrs. Bray went to Cologne, where she found the officers and men of the English army of occupation very helpful to the population of the occupied territory. She said that the English with whom she came in contact did everything in their power to facilitate her trip into the interior of Germany.

"The drama," she said, "has always been the mirror of a nation's thoughts. In Berlin, the theatre is quite pessimistic. All plays are joyless, hopeless, tragic. Comedy is rarely played because the people are not in the mood to enjoy it. Nevertheless, the theatrical performances in Germany today are the most finished and artistic that I have ever witnessed anywhere."

Educational Films Wanted

"Everywhere in Germany, educational films—American educational films—are in great demand. I gave a private showing of some of the Bray educational films to several professors of the University of Berlin, and they immediately wanted to take our entire product for the local schools and for the university. They offered to cooperate with the Goldwyn-Bray production staff in the making of scientific subjects, as they were convinced that a method had been found whereby the technical intricacies of scientific studies might be presented on the screen in a far clearer manner than is possible either through the lips of a lecturer or by the pages of a text book."

"But motion picture production in Germany is about ten years behind that in America. The Germans want our pictures badly."

In conclusion, Mrs. Bray said that the foreign field for American photoplays was never so fertile as at present.
EXHIBITORIAL FIELD IS MENACED

First National Official Makes Charge That Producer-Distributors are Monopolizing the Industry and Says Concerted Action Needed

By J. D. WILLIAMS
Manager First National Exhibitors' Circuit, Inc.

The present is the "great divide" for exhibitors and producers!

Neither can be neutral. You are either an independent as an exhibitor or producer or you are a passive victim scheduled for annihilation with a weapon tried and proven in other industries and now being sharpened to razor edge by master grinders secretly at work in the motion picture business.

There is no middle road for exhibitors and producers in deciding between the two issues or factions into which the industry is resolving itself. If you want to be independent, with your success, your future and your business life in your own keeping, you have got to declare for independence. If you prefer to remain passive in an "it doesn't affect me" attitude, you no longer amount to anything as an industrial force. Your business life is doomed. You will be allowed to write your own death notice, but its text and terms will be dictated by others.

Prophecy Is Given

Present conditions prompt this statement of prophecy, and its accuracy and certainty of fulfillment can be proven. View for a moment the trend of events and activities in the theatre field, and study the trap that is being laid for the unwary exhibitors and the stars and producers who lack foresight and vision. Here we have the proposition of profits derived by producer-distributor concerns from hundreds of thousands of dollars in rentals from independent exhibitors being invested in theatres to be controlled by the producer-distributors and for the sole purpose of, giving a life-and-death battle to the men from whom they are obtaining an existence in their originally chosen branch of the industry.

How much longer are you, as an exhibitor, going to tolerate a plan which has for its goal the determination to drive you from the business if it can? How much longer are you going to patronize a system that is making you its tool only when the competitive machine is completed and ready to be put in motion across the street or next door to your theatre?

Questions Exhusted

Are you going to sit back and wait until you are notified suddenly that your film service will be discontinued because the producer-distributor faction has just bought a neighboring theatre and wants the service for its own screen? Or are you going to throw your strength into a demand for absolute theatre independence, using the greatest weapon you have to drive the invaders from a branch of the business which has been, and should always remain, exclusively your field?

The time has come for a real showdown, not only from exhibitors but from independent producers and those who want to be independent. The situation is as menacing and disastrous for one as the other, with the major danger, if it can be apportioned, leading to the stars and producers. Figure it out in simple terms. You want a theatre market. Your work has no value and no chance to repay your costs or return a profit unless there is an immediate showdown that compels producer-distributors to get out and stay out of exhibiting, the result and its complete domination of your talent and business.

Will Invest in Theatres

These producer-distributors will continue to invest the profits they are making from independent exhibitors and buy, lease or build movie theatres. Every time they open a theatre controlled by them they take their own film service away from a competing independent exhibitor. In four or two, such a combination would have a national chain of houses, and be in excellent position to dictate terms to actors and could not do as stars and as producers.

You would be limited in the amount of money you could spend for a production. You and your producers could make only certain stories. Your income would be fixed for you! Your talent would have no value beyond what the directors of such a combine saw fit to give it. And if you don't like the terms you can get out of the business.

Conditions Bring Action

Certain star-studded pictures have foreseen this condition, and they have become independent, determined to market their pictures only through channels that do not seek to exploit them to acquire a monopoly in the two most important branches of the business. They are helping wonderfully in the fight to keep the theatre independent and free from producer-distributor dictation. As producers they are trying to usurp the exhibitor's place. They are devoting all their energies to making the best productions of which they are capable. With the knowledge that the independent exhibitor channels through which their pictures reach the public are pledged to the new introducing field, they are shrewdly content to preserve and intensify the "great divide" between the two.
IDEAS FROM PUBLIC WELCOMED

Abraham Lehr Declares That Producers Now Are More Receptive With the Result That Artistic Accomplishment Has Received a New Impetus

For the first time since November, 1918, Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, is in the East. Accompanied by Samuel Goldwyn, he reached New York recently after months of application to the task of building up the producing organization at the Culver City studios.

When asked to express his views on production tendencies, Mr. Lehr, who speaks from experience acquired during his association with authors, directors, actors and, in fact, the technical experts concerned in the making of photographic production, admitted that pictures today are not perfect.

Cites One Mistake

Before explaining what may be termed his philosophy of the screen, Mr. Lehr expressed it as his belief that one of the big mistakes of the past had been the failure of the producer to take the public into his confidence. In other words, to invite and be guided by public opinion in the selection of subjects and in their treatment.

Producers have worked too much under cover, behind locked doors, as it were, he said, and in sound-proof rooms, where the voice of the public could not be heard. Too frequently they had been so concerned with the technique of picture taking that they had been imperious to fresh, live ideas, without which mere technique was a dead thing.

Business More Receptive

"One of the really hopeful indications of the day," said Mr. Lehr, "is the opening up of the studio doors and windows to let in the sunlight and fresh air of inspiration. If the change can be expressed in a single word, I would say that the motion picture business has become 'receptive.' Forward looking producers are ready to forget precedent and welcome ideas from any source. It is their task, and the task of those who surround them, to assimilate these ideas and give them concrete expression."

The opening of the new era in production finds all the creative forces in the industry keyed up to high artistic effort, and ready to regard technique as a means to an end and not an end in itself. The public, each year becoming more critical and exacting, is largely responsible for the new impetus to artistic accomplishment, and much credit also should go to exhibitors who have learned to reflect the views of their audiences and communicate them to the producer.

Value Underestimated

"The value of the author has been sadly underestimated, particularly when it is considered that the heart of a picture is the idea on which it is founded."

Here Mr. Lehr came to his "philosophy of the screen." It is the animation of an idea. He holds that everyone who contributes to that animation is a co-author, even to the assistant carpenter who may construct a set that happens to catch just the atmosphere needed to give life and reality to a certain situation.

"Too much importance cannot be credited to the author and the brain group surrounding him," continued Mr. Lehr. "The director, continuity writer, art director, actors, cameramen, scenic artists, even the electricians and carpenters, are part authors of a picture, and everyone of them should be familiar with the idea the picture aims to express."

DeMille Returns West to Picturize Merrick Novel

William DeMille, producer of Paramount Arctraft productions, is back at the Lasky studio, Hollywood, Cal., after a brief trip to New York for conferences with the officials of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, and to gather material for his forthcoming picture based upon "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," Leonard Merrick's popular novel.

Mr. DeMille recently completed "The Prince Chap," with Thomas Meighan in the title role, and a supporting cast, including Lila Lee.
CONDITIONS that affect all lines of industry necessarily have their influence upon the manufacture of Motion Picture Projectors. Delays utterly beyond the control of any manufacturer are bound to occur. In a spirit of sincerity and frankness we earnestly advise exhibitors to anticipate their wants by ordering equipment as far in advance as possible.

Do the Vaudeville Theaters Know Their business

It is our earnest belief that the average audience of a motion-picture theatre would appreciate once a week at least, a change from the regular feature proposition.

For the past four or five years you have shown features of all kinds—some good—some bad—a big number indifferent.

Your patrons, during this time, have seen every conceivable kind of a feature. Isn't there a possibility you may be over-featureing your patrons?

The very foundation on which the Vaudeville Circuit is built is an entertainment made up of a series of short acts.

And Vaudeville is the best paying of all the legitimate end of the theatrical business.

If it is a good theory in Vaudeville to give seven or eight numbers an evening, we contend it must be equally as good a proposition for the Motion Picture Theatres to institute a similar program at least once a week.

Is our reasoning faulty?—We believe not!

The main theory of motion picture is entertainment and we argue with a diversified program your chances to please all of your patrons is greater than with a feature every single day.

We don't eat the same food every day—we don't visit the same people every day—why then see a feature every day?

If the Vaudeville Managers know their business, and we believe you will agree with us they do, the suggestions herein for a program one night a week will appeal to you.

Nix on that stuff about Harry Weiss being the other one. We know 'cause ye scribe just received a wee note all about it. The stationery carrying the message was all rolled up with a spiffy imprint of a million dollar bungalow somewhere on the prairie of the Northside with a youthful but studly Oak tree keeping it company. More details will be published in an early episode with full details. All right Harry, when all set—fire away!

The Realert exchange was given quite a stir the other afternoon. Moans from the auditing department were gently wafted to the sanctum of Manager Harry Willam's quarters. Harry being quite mystified with the melody gathered a few of the salesmen together and stealthily crept toward the auditing quarters to find the 'Rev.' W. H. Griffin, cashier for the Realert exchange, rehearsing a 'hymn' for some future prayer meeting. N. B.—Any mail that is to reach W. H. G. on the sabbath should be addressed 'Rev' or somewhat thusly, ahem!

Our sleuth was on the trail of a couple of well known film magnates the other eve, having been tipped they were looking for a 'location' for a movie theatre. While South Division Street is somewhat DIFFERENT than Boul Mich, we know a dandy piece of property in the former locale that can be highly recommended to W. S. Miltavski and Tom Mitrevich, although the PRICE is rather HIGH.

If Paul 'G' Smith of Garseton-Smith continues to make that 'Wake of the News' of Chicago Trib fame with the regularity he's been getting away with the past couple of weeks we feel some cooler Ford motor car salesmen should be handed this lead for the Trib pay cash to successful contributors.

At last the bowling experts of local film-don't have to act upon action. Lansing, captain of the Vitagraph team has the chip on his shoulder and challenges all comers, preferably those 'lightning catchers' of the Unity Photo plays team. Come on boys, let's make it snappy and get the dates arranged.

According to late returns, Maury 'Kerigan' Ritens of Joliet has it all over Hermie 'Romeo' Applebaum of the Northside if the register and the Select exchange murmurs correctly. Would enjoy muchly the added entry of Chicago's handsome bachelor exhibitor, Max Hyman in this interesting contest for the smiles of approval from 'THOSE BLONDE'S'! Take it from us, her is some cute.

Tom Greenwood, sales representative for the local Hodkinson exchange, resigned March 20 to assume affiliation with the local Republic Distributing exchange covering the southside territory of Chicago.

Ed Morrisey surely gave the ol' 'Cabbage Six' a real taste of speed last week in his futile attempt to connect with Frank B. Rogers, who departed for New York by the Century a few seconds prior to the arrival of the big Green motor at the La Salle depot. Tough luck, Ed, old timer, we agree with you. 'If that train crew but know what thou hadst for J. Stuar Blackton's new gen. mgr., they might have stalled until it was delivered.'

W. H. Carey, of Unity Photoplays Company, has been called off the 'lamp and wire circuit' and for the future will call on the Chicago trade for his company.

L. Goldman, a newcomer to the film business will make his debut to the trade calling on the cinematic clients of the Republic Distributing Corporation in the Indiana territory.

J. Frackman, covering Illinois for the Unity Photoplays, was laid up for a few days at Taylorville, but the contracts came along just the same. Must have the exhibitors well trained when they inquire for you at the hotel and leave a signed contract with wishes for your speedy recovery.

James Salter is carrying a regular flock of those won't come off smiles these days and blames the phenomenal success of Vitagraph's newest serial "Silent Avenger" featuring William Duncan. Jim admits they have turned up another money getter.

Frank J. Flaherty while dining at the Illinois A. C. the other day was noticed making his getaway after the club's dining room was well crowded and arrived at the Unity Photoplays' office plus a brand new English Jamieson "darby." Why worry about HCL, eh fellows?

A rather well founded rumor informs us that Manager Ben Bradell's sales department has landed the opening date of the new Barbee's Loop theatre for Seattle, opening on or about April 15, with the Norma Talmadge feature, "She Loves and Lies." When 'ts considered the affable and suave Al Gallas covers this territory, why trifile with the rumor stuff. Let's call it a SUE BET.

Jack O'Toole, of the U. P. T. of A., and ex-officio of the Hebrew Social club gave an interesting talk and luncheon to several sons of Erin on St. Patrick's Day. Many of filmdom's Irish patriots were in attendance. Among the most prominent attending were: Ire Van Ronkel of Goldwyn, I. L. Lesserman of Universal, Joe Friedman of the Celebrated Players, Max Levy of Robertson-Cole, Abe Gumbiner and Ad Powell of the exhibitors' fraternity.

F. F. Ishmael, assistant to manager Paul Busch of the local Republic exchange comes to the surface with a poetic value. Here goes—blame "Ish." MR. EXHIBITOR—If I love you As you love me, You can't put over— "GIRL of the SEA."

Red Meyer, formerly associated with the De Luxe theatre of Wilson Avenue, has just bought a brand new salesman grip and will carry it around the city trade filled with the W. W. Hodkinson features.

Any of the boys troubled with sudden spells of illness might get in touch with F. B. Wathner of the Pathe exchange who was just recently appointed prescription sergeant. All permits must be duly signed by the commanding officer before reporting to the Sergt.

NEW SCHOENSTADT THEATRE FOR CHICAGO

The Brighton theatre, being erected by Herman Schoenstadt and Sons at 42nd street and Archer avenue, is rapidly nearing completion and will be opened in April. It cost $850,000 and is the fifth theatre in the Schoenstadt group.
Visiting the Chicago Exhibitors

—With H. E. N.—

Jack F. Hostetter has joined the staff of Jack F. Hostetter and Co., of the Plaza and Forreston theatres. Jack will be assistant manager and auditor. No! he is not ‘Bitter.’

Harry Singer has come back to his first love, the State and Lake theatre. Frank Paskow, who transferred the Grand to St. Louis, Harry was in Martin Beck’s office in New York, but could not stay away from the Windy City. Cliff Work will continue as Mr. Singer’s assistant.

Blair McElroy of Fitzpatrick & McElroy, is in New York on business. Mr. Fitzpatrick is on an inspection trip of the North Michigan theatres and will visit Detroit before he returns.

P. M. Raskow, who lately owned the home theatre on the West Side can be seen any day on Film row, from force of habit we suppose, and P. M. is going to be back in the very near future, it is rumored, as he was seen looking over a theatre on the South Side.

P. S. McLain, the prosperous owner of the Cumberland theatre of Forreston, Ill., was a caller at the Unity Film Co. last week. After talking with Manager Fishery, Exhibitor McLain will play ‘Lightning Bryce.’ We understood that Brother McLain is raising some fine spring frogs and thank you for the invitation, P. S.

George Grace, who owns the Triangle theatre on Wentworth Avenue, has a house which is a credit to the industry. This is not a small place, but its appointments, decorations and the way it is conducted, makes it a theatre that manager Grace can well be proud of. The refreshment parlor that joins the theatre, is owned by Mr. Grace and is being enlarged.

W. C. McMichael, formerly of Otumwa, Iowa, is now in Lawrenville, Ill., completing plans to build a new theatre there, with a seating capacity of 600.

L. A. Burnett, owner of the Capitol theatre of Springfield, gave Chicago the once over last week, and departed with a bunch of choice contracts. It was quite a Springfield week.

H. L. Nutman, manager of the Drexel theatre on the South Side, is busy these days getting things in the annual spring cleaning. The entire floor has been repainted. H. L. reports business great and one of the many big coming attractions, for the Drexel, is Tom Mix in “The Haredevil.”

H. T. Loper, of Springfield, is visiting his son, manager of the Kimball, on Kimball Avenue. Mr. Loper stated that his new house in Springfield, Ill., would open on about July 1. This theatre will be named the Lyric and will have a seating capacity of 600. This theatre when completely remodeled, will cost $30,000.

Miss Ruth Harris and V. DeLorenzo, not a vaudeville team, but two of the most efficient bookers on Walsh Avenue, are now at the Celebrated Film Corporation arranging bookings for the “Lost City.”

John Koletsis, manager of the American theatre at Rock Island, was a visitor in the Windy City last week. John carried home some choice purchases of the way of features. John just missed his old side kick from Springfield by one day, meaning Gus Kirasolos of the Royal.

Ward & La Rose have purchased the Dearborn theatre on the North Side and the policy of this house will be, to play only high grade pictures. Ward and La Rose have been in other lines of business in this neighborhood for a number of years and enjoy the full confidence of the Dearborn’s patrons. A. H. Oertmann, formerly manager of the Avon theatre, will have complete charge of the Dearborn.

J. Kempton, manager of the E. A. R. and the Dearborn on the South Side, is fast making the E. A. R. one of the most successful theatres on Wentworth Avenue. Only first class attractions are booked, and this house is playing to capacity business.

Universal Manager Declares Pictures to be Ready For Colleges Before Summer

Harry Levey, general manager of Universal’s educational department, states that four complete series of Appleton-Universal text books will be ready for schools and colleges before summer. Don Carlos Ellis, director of educational films, who is chief of the department of agriculture, according to Mr. Levey, has been concentrating on zoology, commercial geography, history and Indian missions.

Picturize Text Books

These films will be versions of books published by D. Appleton & Co., and will be edited by the authors. Dr. David Starr Jordan, president of Leland Stanford university, and Dr. Harold Heath of the same institution, will edit the film on zoology; Cyrus C. Adams, the noted geographer, edit the commercial geography film, and Dr. William O. Krohn of Yale will sponsor the film based on the geography lessons in physiology and hygiene.

The history film will consist of two reels on “Our Presidents” and two or all of the minor branches of the Constitution of the United States, the history of its development and its significance.

Production of the first two series is already under way and two reels on each recently were shown at the National Educational Association convention at Cleveland, O., where they received warm commendation of school superintendents and principals from all parts of the country.

Show Animal Life

Other reels will picturize all kinds of animals and their life histories and habits, from the animal world, and industries of the world, from the diamond mining of South Africa to the gold mining of Alaska, and from the cattle industry of South America to the making of choice silks in China.

Cinematographs of living animals and of actual scenes from foreign countries will be supplemented by animated technical drawings which will make dead tables and statistics live and reveal animal structures and their functions in a way which cannot be accomplished otherwise.

“Skinner’s Dress Suit” Offered State Right Men

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., at present distributing five Essanay Chaplin comedies on the state rights market, have obtained the rights to “Skinner’s Dress Suit,” made popular by the early Bryant Washburn features made by Essanay, for United States and Canada. With new titles throughout the feature will be offered to state right buyers.

A comprehensive array of advertising material is now being prepared which includes an assortment of lithographs, slides and lobby display, three styles of slides, heralds printed in two colors, and an elaborate press sheet, and a distinct novelty in the form of a cut-out. This cut-out consists of a dress suit carrying on the shirt front the title together with a description of the play.

Mack Sennett Pleased Over “Big Four” Deal

Immediately upon learning of the consummation of plans whereby “Down On the Farm,” his five-part comedy, would be distributed by United Artists, Mack Sennett wired his personal representative, E. M. Asher, as follows:

“I feel confident the exhibitors will agree with us that this is a great combination. Lined Artists, Hiram Abrams and ‘Down On the Farm.’ Best wishes.”

Reports from United Artists is to the effect that in the four days following the announcement of distribution plans more applications for first runs were received from exhibitors than were received for any previous United Artists production.

Acquaintance Is Renewed

George B. Huntley, the eminent English stage comedian, who arrived in Los Angeles recently from London, renewed his acquaintance with H. B. Warner, Jesse D. Hampton screen star, when he visited the new Mayfair and the new Hampton studio, and saw Mr. Warner starring in “Behind Red Curtains.” Mr. Huntley and Mr. Warner played at the new theatre before the London footlights.

Another Theatre Owner Tells How This Machine Pays:

"I have operated two of your Butter-Kist Machines for two years and will say that they are the best money-makers I have. Have averaged over $90.00 a week. I recommend the Butter-Kist machine to anyone operating a picture house or vaudeville show." (11 years) G. S. Kaufman, theatre manager in West Virginia. Name gladly sent on request.

$600 to $3,120 From a Little Waste Space
The Butter-Kist Pop Corn and Peanut Machine brings new profits and new trade to stores and theatres.

Pays Four Ways
1—Motion makes people stop and look.
2—Coaxing fragrance makes them buy.
3—Toasty flavor brings trade for blocks.
4—Stimulates all store sales or theatre attendance.

We have the actual figures to prove that the Butter-Kist Machine pays from $600 to $3,120 a year net profits. This means an extra $600 to $3,120 in cash profits from the use of a little waste space, 26 in. by 32 in.

But this is not all you can count on making with the Butter-Kist Machine. It draws trade. It multiplies all your other sales. It will amaze you to see the full possibilities. Let us tell you all that this wonderful machine means to you. We'll send you proof of profits, photos of stores with the machine, etc.—all free and post paid.

Facing Death He Turned To The Girl He Scorned

THE scion of an aristocratic family, he wastes the family fortune in drinking and gambling. Impoverished, he refuses honest work, and starts a gambling table. He spurns a girl, who is stung with shame, her romance shattered.
Comes a night, when a man is murdered in the gambling den.
Hunted by the 'aw, facing the gallows, he turns for protection to this girl—And her love and influence brings a wonderful ending. A picture the whole family will love.

By Mae Tines.

If you've becomingrestive to see a good picture, suppose you try "The Fortune Hunter." You and I, unlike the little birds in their nests, do not always agree. Just the same, I don't believe we'll get into much of an argument over this photoplay.

It has been made from the popular play by Winchell Smith, and has been so exceedingly well made that its sponsors must undoubtedly be proud of it. It has not a situation that is not perfectly logical. There is not a character in the cast who is not as real as life. And if you've ever lived in a little country town, or visited in a little country town, why, the little town featured in "The Fortune Hunter" will appear to you as an old, old friend.

No screen actor from the beginning of cinema events has so well held his own as Earle Williams. He is a pioneer—just as popular today as he was six years ago. As the engaging n'er do well, who at a friend's suggestion goes to a small town to marry a rich girl and there meets LIFE—in capital letters—he is at his best. A good looking, likable fellow, with bandy eyes and a reckless smile, clothes that fit and—plenty of guile.

Van Dyke Brooks is a delight as the old druggist; Charles Trowbridge as friend to the n'er do well—who turns out to be a regular fellow after all—who make many a feminine heart beat at little faster, and the people who do the "small town stuff" all are to be commended.

But the one I want you to notice particularly is Jean Paice as Betty Graham. She's such a gallant little creature with her sensitive face and big gray—or maybe they're blue—black fringed eyes. Finely strung and softly born, I'll be bound. A most unusual type. See if you don't think so.

Between you and me, I think I shall go to see "The Fortune Hunter" again some day.

An essential fact in determining which trade paper is the indispensable link between producer and exhibitor

EXHIBITORS HERALD, published in Chicago, brings the news of the industry to exhibitors located from Ohio to California several days in advance of publications circulated from New York City.

This operation repeated week by week inevitably fixes and holds the undivided attention and interest of readers to the exclusion of every contemporary publication.

Publication in Chicago, the focal center of America, permits a swift and direct distribution of current information—which is as important in this industry as the speed of the stock ticker to the brokerage business.

70 Days Bookings on Loew's Metropolitan Circuit

Human appeal is the inspiration of these mirth masterpieces.
The cleverest baby the screen has ever known is the star.
"Hubert", an amazing monkey, is the "lead" in action that keeps your patrons on the edge of their seats and howling with glee.
A horse, unguided, dives 100 feet and rescues the child.
A collie sets a new mark for canine cleverness.
A pig is the clown.
You'll book it when you see it.

This is the first of a series of thirteen-a-year two reel comedies to be produced by C. L. Chester for Educational.
They will be released solely through our own exchanges, which will handle only short subjects of known quality.
Dates will be announced later.
Exhibitors are invited to ask for our plans, now being completed.
These will be sent only on request to those writing on their theatre's letterhead.
The new plans are revolutionary.

Church Competition

This matter of motion pictures shown under church auspices has progressed to a point where it may be regarded as a commercial menace by those who look to the business of exhibiting pictures for a livelihood.

For some reason which may have appeared at the moment as a good and sufficient one certain groups in the industry have patronized this pictures-in-the-churches movement and even have gone so far as to appear at a church meeting held several months ago in Columbus, Ohio, with assurances that the industry was very much in favor of the movement.

The industry wants the good will of all church people. But it does not want to purchase this good will at the price of encouraging the church people in their ambition to exhibit pictures. This refers entirely to pictures of the type that are customarily exhibited in theatres and not to subjects of a special, religious or educational nature. Concerning these the exhibitors of the country have no apprehension, whether they be exhibited in churches, schools or any place else.

It may or may not be generally known, but it is a fact that churches are showing straight entertainment pictures to an alarming extent. It may be argued that these are old pictures previously exhibited in local theatres and that their showing does not constitute competition for exhibitors. This is not correct. Regardless of how old the pictures may be, the fact that they are being shown at a figure from fifty to seventy-five per cent lower than theatre admission prices creates a serious condition of competition.

The abolition of this growing menace is clearly up to distributors who are supplying the film. The comparatively small income to be derived from this class of business is not compensated for by the inevitable curtailment in theatre attendance and hurt to the exhibitors’ business.

Unofficial statistics at hand indicate that there are nearly eight thousand churches throughout America which exhibit pictures periodically. While the type of entertainment is greatly inferior to that dispensed at regular theatres, the fact that these entertainments are operated on a presumably non-commercial basis allows for an admission price that would mean starvation for an exhibitor. This condition, together with the obvious aids within the reach of churches to induce attendance, creates a deadly competition that should be speedily arrested.

Entertainment certainly is no part of the proper business of churches. They are entitled to fullest co-operation in functions that come within the sphere of their legitimate work—and fullest opposition in this foreign endeavor.

Table Cloth Figures

There’s a lot of loose talk going about on the subject of gross rentals that only caters to the pride of certain individuals and creates a condition of genuine apprehension among exhibitors. We refer to the talk of pictures grossing in the neighborhood of a million dollars in the American market.

As a matter of fact, with the exception of a very few most conspicuous exceptions the million dollar picture has not yet been made. And it may be further noted that the number of pictures that have collected from the exhibitors of America even a half million dollars is also extremely limited.

The idea of any group of pictures being rented on a basis of a million dollars in collections from the exhibitors of the United States and Canada is simply preposterous. When a distributor allows such an aim to be disclosed to the exhibitors of the country he is simply inviting the sustained wrath of the men upon whom he must depend for fair treatment if he is to continue in the picture business.

There have been pictures made and doubtless others will appear which, on the basis of present rentals, would yield this amount of money. But any attempt to make such a figure apply to groups of mediocre successes must be regarded as sheer lunacy.

Well, "the greatest town on earth" hadn't changed much in the last couple of years.

Same old faces—Strike-breakers in shabby clothes pacing in front of well-dressed clothing store dummies.

Man with ten children at home, selling the "Birth Control Review" in front of Astor hotel.

Same old Chinatown "capers" sitting in same old seats—waiting for suckers.

OUTA RESPECT TO A DEAD THIRST—

A certain W. K. film man was seen drinking what looked like real wine in the Hunt room of the Astor one evening last week and everyone who passed his table took off his hat.

DUBB'S NEW INVENTION—

And Percy Dubb our intrepid exploler of films, has not been idle. He has just invented a patent collapsible lobby display, which is going to revolutionize the industry. The idea is unique and like most great inventions, such as the beanless bean soup or the shirless shirtfront, is very simple. It consists of an attachment geared to the lobby display frames of a theatre and by the turning of a crank in the box office these frames reverse and display the following day's attractions thus giving a "2 in 1" service. On hot nights, too, when your lobby is packed with patrons waiting for the second show, the crank can be turned rapidly and the lobby frames will furnish a nice cool breeze thus obviating any kicks from an overheated public. (Patent applied for.)

To make the RITCHEY poster the finest medium wherewith to advertise a photoplay, not a single point is overlooked. The power of its conception, the beauty of its design and color, and the care taken in its execution, can only result in a poster product that is approximately perfect. Which is high praise for the RITCHEY poster, but every word of it is true.

Federated Film Exchanges Formed
By State Right Buyers of Country
Eighteen Independent Exchange Owners Combine to Assure Themselves Reliable Product—Elect J. L.
Friedman President at Chicago Convention
Fourteen Producers Appear for Conference

Eighteen independent exchangemen, representatives of their respective territories throughout the United States and Canada, met in Chicago at the Congress hotel on March 24, 25 and 26, and perfected a formal organization for the purpose of collective bargaining.

Under the title of Federated Film Exchanges of America, Inc., these distributors have banded together into what is the most powerful organization of independent exchangemen yet affected.

Confer With Producers April 1

Continuing further in their effort to protect independent interests in the trade, a tentative partnership was entered into with a group of fourteen independent producers with all indications pointing to an agreement being reached at a meeting which was scheduled for the Knickerbocker hotel in New York on Thursday, April 1.

While in Chicago the producers made partial arrangements for formning the Independent Producers Association with Joe Brandt, eastern representative of National Film Corporation of America, acting as temporary chairman. Formal organization is expected to take place at the New York meeting.

During the three days of strenuous labor at the Chicago convention, the exchangemen drew up a constitution and by-laws, which were adopted before adjournment. A charter for the organization will be taken out in Delaware within a short time.

Will Capitalize at $100,000

To place the organization on a sound financial basis from the beginning, each franchise holder made a cash deposit, with the total reaching the $100,000 mark. While this will be the amount of the capitalization, it is pointed out by members that the money is held more as a guarantee of good faith than for any other purpose.

In completing the organization, the following officers were elected:
PRESIDENT—J. L. FRIEDMAN, Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago.
SECRETARY—D. J. CHATKIN, Consolidated Film Exchange, San Francisco.
TREASURER—SAMUEL V. GRAND, Federal Feature Film Corporation, Boston.

The officers, with the following three exchangemen, make up the board of directors:

HARRY CHARNAS, Standard Film Service Company, Cleveland, O.
A. G. WHYTE, Empire State Film Corporation, New York.
B. AMSTERDAM, Masterpiece Film Attractions, Philadelphia.

Creation of the Federated Film Exchanges was achieved as a result of the tireless efforts of Mr. Friedman, whose invitation brought both the distributors and the producers to Chicago. The task facing the Chicago man was a difficult one. Eighteen different minds had to be shaped into one before ne-egotiations could be entered into amicably, and before a mutual proposition that would be wholly effective could be adopted.

Great Credit to Friedman

As a result of Mr. Friedman’s endeavors, an organization that is expected to wield a powerful influence in the motion picture industry will be in actual operation within thirty days. Two offices will be retained by the organization, one in Chicago and the other in New York. A general manager will be chosen from outside the organization, and he will be given a staff of competent helpers.
All productions will be purchased as a unit and exploitation will be handled on the same basis. A review board of four members will be appointed, and every independent production will be submitted to these men, who will report favorably or not to the executive officers.

No member can acquire a subject until it has been passed upon first by the review board. Should the review board refuse to pass out the picture, the individual members are at liberty to purchase it for their respective districts.

As a collective proposition, Federated Film Exchanges are 100 per cent representative in the United States and Canada. This will enable independent exhibitors who are members to compete in the open market for big productions that heretofore have not been within their reach.

Will Benefit Producers

If a formal organization is affected between the distributors' organization and the producers on Thursday, the same beneficial results will be obtained for the producers. The definite financial terms of the agreement that is being sought between exhibemogners and producers have not been detailed, but they follow the general outline of the plan sponsored by Harry Sherman of Los Angeles and published in a recent issue of The Exhibitor-Herald.

The Sherman plan proposes the supplying of productions to the exchange organization at the exact cost of the negatives and prints. The producer then would receive 20 per cent of the gross rentals received by the distributors.

Friedman Names Committee

The committee named by Mr. Friedman to negotiate with the producers in New York includes: B. Amsterdam, Samuel V. Grand, Harry Charnas and A. G. Whyte. Should these men and the producers agree to a co-operative plan, and there is every reason to believe that they will, a full announcement of the financial terms will be made.

The board of directors of Federated Film Exchanges will meet again within thirty days to further the working principles of the organization.

As a clear idea of the substantiality of the organization, it is cited that the combined exchange power of the members, total $5,500,000 a year. In purchasing, each member will be assessed his quota as it relates to the percentage of franchise he holds. It was made clear by officials that franchise holders will not subscribe money to any idie in the organization's accounts.

Returning to the exploitation phase of the unit, it is planned to obtain the services of expert men in that branch of the industry. This system also will be applied to the exchange. Each member, however, will have the opportunity to use his own exploitation and advertising methods.

Many Seek Franchises

It was announced that twenty-five producers from the East and the West submitted propositions at the convention. None was acted upon. Six exchanges from practically every territory were present, it was said, to make efforts to purchase franchises.

An example of the spirit of aggressiveness of the members is shown in the fact that before the quotas were assigned each member was asked to state the least amount that he should be assessed, and after these had been totaled it was found that the amount was within one-fourth of 1 per cent of the subscribed $100,000.

Fourteen Companies Interested

The plan of the producers' organization is to handle the productions through a central board of trade, with headquarters either in Chicago or New York.

The adjournment at 12:30 a.m. on Saturday morning, it was the general opinion of all in attendance, resulted in the greatest achievement of its kind in the industry. Officials declared that the mistakes of other similar organizations had caused the new unit to be organized on a sound basis.

Friedman Host To Film Men

Joseph L. Friedman, president of Celebrated Players Film Corporation, Chicago, and sponsor of the newly created Federated Film Exchange of America, Inc., was guest to producers, distributors, exhibitors and representatives of the trade press at a dinner given at the Congress Hotel on the night of Thursday, May 22.

The principal address of the evening was given by Joe Brandt, eastern representative of National Film Corporation. Mr. Brandt outlined the co-operative proposition which was considered by the exchanges and which probably will be adopted at the meeting in New York on Thursday, April 1.

Brandt Explains Producers’ Plan

A direct pledge that the independent producers would provide features and short subjects of high standard to the state right buyers if they succeeded in completing their organization was made by Joe Brandt, temporary chairman of the producers, early in the convention.

Brandt explained the necessity of the producers having an assured market for their product, if they were to continue to make pictures for the independent field. He discussed in detail the waste and needless expense of the old system of state righting features; admitted the exchange men had many well-founded complaints, and told the producers’ side of the story.

Offer Long List of Product

Eleven producers, he stated, had already listed the product they would guarantee a co-operative buying organization if they were given a fair contract. Others, he added, were anxious to participate.

The eleven producers and the product they offer follows:

CE. BURSTON FILMS, INC.—Six to eight features of at least five reels each; twelve two-reel drawing room comedies; one serial.

C. L. CHESTER PRODUCTIONS, INC.—One travel picture or scenic; one-reel comedy.

Murray W. Garson and Charles Schriever—Eight features.

CAPITAL FILM COMPANY—Two-reel railroad drama; two-reel slapstick comedy; two-reel Western; eight five-reel Westerns.

Jack Cox—Twelve educational one-reel pictures; twenty-six two-reel comedies; twenty-six two-reel slapsticks.

Harry Sherman—Eight to ten features, five to seven reels each.

Marion Kohr Productions—Two-reel comedy drama Western; one-reel novelty digest; two-reel slapstick comedy; one-reel straight comedy.

National Film Corporation—One two-reel society comedy; one two-reel slapstick comedy; six five-reel features; three serials.

A. H. Sawyer—Six features, five to seven reels.

Sidney L. Cohen Film Corporation—Ten features, five to seven reels.

Lester B. Mayer—Six feature productions.

“The independent producers have for some time past endeavored to formulate a plan whereby the independent exchanges could secure negatives immediately upon their having been finished at the studios, and for that reason they welcome an opportunity of meeting this organization and expressing their views at a time when this discussion is probably the one topic that will be most important in your deliberations,” declared Mr. Brandt.

Several Attempts Fail

“Several attempts have been made hitherto for the formation of an organization that could contract for the output of several independent producers, and unfortunately these organizations have not been able to properly organize and secure sufficient financial backing in order to insure their stability.

The independent producers are more than anxious to produce pictures especially for the independent field if they can feel that there is an organization that can buy pictures regularly and at a fair price. At the outset the producers want to go on record in saying that they do not favor nor have they ever contended any movement that would tend to make the independent exchanges bear the burden of an excessive negative cost. Every producer who has sold his goods in the independent field has made an honest attempt to schedule his price per territory fairly, but unfortunately the number of territories that remained open made it necessary for the producer to charge an additional amount in some of the territories that were particularly anxious to secure his product.

The producers believe that if this organization of exchange men can be perfected, a stipulated cost for pictures can be established and a fair rate of profit guaranteed to the producers based upon the acceptance and the sale of his product in all of the territories in the United States to the producers. They are sure that a proportionate charge can be made which will be fairly distributed through a cooperative exchange organization the amounts required for the unsold territories can be satisfactorily distributed or the territory disposed of so that the members collectively will bear a proportionate share of the negative cost.

“With this idea in mind and anticipating that your organization will become perfected and that you will underwrite a sufficient amount of money which will guarantee the financial stability of your organization, the producers have decided to perfect an organization which for the time being shall be known as The Film Clearing House. The sole purpose of this organization shall be to act as a clearing house for all negatives you may desire, these negatives to be acquired for you at a price which will enable you to make a reasonable profit and which guarantees the necessary profit for him to remain in business. You will find attached the product that has been offered by the various producers, and it is for you to decide exactly how many of these subjects you want and how often you will want them. The Film Clearing House will have sufficient financial backing to guarantee every contract that is made with it by your organization, and under this contract which will be executed by each producer your organization will be assured of a standard product of the necessary quality for a period of at least three years.”

Will Curb Star Evil

“Heretofore, you have been forced to seek your product in any field that you could find. (Very often you exploited a star during a period of six months, only to lose the star to your opposition exchange because he paid a higher price or because the producers offered a higher price than you would.)

Investigation of Saenger Company Completed by Federal Trade Board

New Orleans Awaits Ruling by Government Commission on Charges of Restraint of Trade—Many Surprising Angles Develop at Hearing

NEW ORLEANS, La., March 25.—Decision of the federal trade commission on the complaint that the Saenger Amusement Company is operating in restraint of trade is eagerly awaited by the local film colony. The investigation into the charges ended several days ago, and the testimony has been forwarded to Washington for decision.

Many startling angles developed during the hearing. Much stress was placed upon the fact that the newspapers, which had not received a very heavy assignment of Saenger advertising, went to the story aggressively and in their zeal made many statements bordering on the ridiculous.

United Artists Deny Unfriendly Relations

One of the bombshells exploded by the Saengers at the closing of the hearing was the testimony of Carlyle B. Robinson, director of publicity for Douglas Fairbanks, who emphatically denied that the late pictures of the "Big Four" were not shown in New Orleans and that there was any unfriendly feeling between the United Artists and the Saengers.

Philip Bohrer, 2307 Canal street, who runs a theatre at Broad and Center avenues, was one of the principal witnesses against the Saenger company. He charged that he was refused pictures from the Saengers because he refused to charge 17 cents admission instead of 11 cents.

For more than an hour, he was quizzed by attorneys but his story remained unshaken.

Mrs. J. A. Buisson, 1319 Gentilly avenue, who runs the Esplanade theatre at Esplanade avenue and Broad street, said she had been refused pictures by the Goldwyn, Metro, First National and Paramount when a new theatre, which she alleged was run by the Saengers or interests friendly to them, was opened, although she has been using these pictures for three years.

Independent Exchange Complainant

J. Eugene Pearce, 608 Canal street, who runs an independent exchange, said that the Saengers had greatly interfered with his business of distributing films to exhibitors throughout Arkansas, Louisiana, Mississippi, Texas; Alabama and western Tennessee and that if they did not resort to pernicious practices and sold films in the open market that he, as well as other distributors, could make from $600 to $7000 more per week selling films.

E. V. Richards, Jr., general manager of the Saenger company, in commenting upon the hearing, declared that the testimony and the "attendant effort of certain newspapers to sensationalize it" spoke for themselves.

"We have no political favors to ask, seek to buy no paid write-ups, obey the laws, and attend to our business," declared Richards. "We recognize the rights of any public journal to print anything that is truthful. However, if it indulges in misrepresentation because of our failures to buy advertising from it which we do not need, we are prepared to take care of ourselves—in the courts if necessary."

"After the recent exhibition, I anticipate considerable effort to discredit our company, either through censorship or otherwise. We will appreciate the publicity's investigating purported facts in obviously prejudiced publications."

More Territory Sold For "Hawk's Trail" Burston Makes Announcement While in Attendance at Chicago Meeting

While attending the film convention at the Congress hotel in Chicago, Louis Burston reported additional sales for "The Hawk's Trail," which features King Baggot. Ohio and Kentucky territory was disposed of to the David Warner Film Company of Cleveland; Michigan to the Strand Features of Detroit, and Kansas, Missouri and Illinois to the Standard Film Corporation of Kansas City, Mo.

"I am elated by reports coming in from all quarters where audiences have had a chance to see this serial," declared Mr. Burston, "for the reason that the public seems everywhere to specially applaud and praise what I might term the dignity of its story as well as its acting and general presentation."

"I have been long convinced that the day of the knock-down-and-drag-out serial is gone, and that audiences now demand something like consistency in plot, incidents and episodes and sincerity in interpretation."

"During the several years I've been handling serials, I've never seen a new production command so many runs in sections where serials are not, as a rule, in favor. It certainly is very gratifying to find one's own judgment confirmed so emphatically by the general public as well as by serial buyers."

EXHIBITORS HERALD

Skouras Brothers Obtain Sievers Group of Playhouses at St. Louis First National Film Exchange Passes Into Hands of Well Known Exhibitors Through Deal Said to Involve More Than $350,000

ST. LOUIS, MO., March 30.—The Grand Central (First National) Film Company, the New Grand Central Theatre and the Central Theatre, all of St. Louis, have been purchased by the Skouras Brothers of this city. The properties, after lengthy negotiations, were bought from the Grand Central Theatre Company and the Grand Central Film Company, the principal stockholders of which were William Sievers, Edmund Koehn, Theodore Rassieur and Harry Troll.

Consideration Estimated at $350,000

Spyros, Charles and George Skouras, together with E. H. Brieni, Leo Rassieur, Jr., and others, swung the deal. The consideration was $350,000.

It was agreed that the New Grand Central will be continued as the St. Louis “first run” house for First National productions. The Skouras Brothers have assumed charge.

The purchase considerably limits the field of competition in St. Louis. The Skouras Brothers, and the Koplar-Cornwall interests, now own virtually every desirable theatre in St. Louis.

Included in the holdings of the Skouras Brothers are the following theatres:

- THE NEW GRAND CENTRAL
- THE WEST END LYRIC
- THE DOWNTOWN LYRIC
- THE CENTRAL
- THE PAGEANT
- THE SHAVER
- THE ARSENAL
- THE CRYSTAL AIRDOME
- THE LYRIC SKYDOME

The Koplar-Cornwell interests own the following:

- THE PERSHING
- THE KING
- THE GRAND-FLORENTAIN
- THE LINDELL
- THE ACADIA
- THE MAFFETT
- THE JUNIETTA
- THE QUEEN
- THE MONTGOMERY

Of the independent theatres remaining, virtually the only large houses are Loew’s, the Columbia, Fox Liberty, King Bee, Delmar, Mikado, Cinderella, O’Fallon, Moglar, Bremen, Excello and Webster.

The Skouras Brothers plan to spend $50,000 in redecorating the New Grand Central, enlarging lobby and preparing a more elaborate exterior. The Pageant also is to be redecorated.

Spyros Skouras will have active charge of the West End Lyric; Charles Skouras will manage the New Grand Central, and George Skouras will have charge of the Lyric and Central. Brieni will be the managing director of all Skouras theatres.

Clyde Cook has Quit Stage for Fox Studio

Clyde Cook, formerly comedian and dancer at the New York Hippodrome, has quit the stage for the remainder of the season to make pictures for Fox Film Corporation. On April 1 he became a member of the Fox Sunshine comedy forces at Hollywood, Cal.

Hampton Del Ruth, supervising director of the comedies, has prepared the outline of the first picture. Mr. Cook will make, and it is thought that Del Ruth will personally direct the picture.

Given Chicago Premiere

Special Pictures Corporation’s “Comedy art” reel was given its premiere in Chicago during the week commencing on Sunday, March 29, at the Playhouse and the Casino.

Lloyd Ingraham Directs Mildred Harris Chaplin For Mayer In “Old Dad”

Lloyd Ingraham, who directed “Mary’s Ankle” and “What’s Your Husband Doing?” now is directing Mildred Harris Chaplin in “Old Dad,” a Louis B. Mayer production, which will be published through First National exchange.

During his screen career Ingraham has directed such stars as Douglas Fairbanks, Mary Miles Minter, Lillian Gish, De Wolf Hopper and Mae Marsh. Some of his best known creations are: “Let’s Be Fashionable,” “The Fox Woman,” “John Luther Long,” “Rosemary Climbs the Heights,” “The Children Pay,” “Stranded” and “American Aristocracy.”

“Old Dad” was written by Eleanor Hallowell Abbott and had its first publication in serial form in the Woman’s Home Companion. It later was issued in book form.

Jester Comedies Are Acquired by Lee Herz

Lee Herz, president of Siese Film Exchange, Chicago, announces that he has obtained distribution rights for his territory for the Jester comedies from Territorial Sales Corporation. There will be seventeen of these two-part comedies, the initial publication to be on April 12, and every week thereafter. The first will be “Chicken in Turkey.”

Mr. Herz announces that he is prepared to give exploitation aid on the pictures. He also has contracted with Foundation Film Corporation of New York for a single reel educational weekly. Arrangements are being made to publish it on May 1.

Showmen Give $20,000 To Help Boost Chicago

Chicago exhibitors responded heartily to the appeal of the theatre committee of the Chicago Boosters’ Publicity club at a recent meeting, and the total of the funds raised to aid the “boost Chicago plan” was $20,000.

The meeting was held at the Colonial theatre. Aaron Jones, Nathan Ascher and Ludwig Schendler explained the benefits to be derived. Mayor William Hale Thompson also spoke.

ANOTHER FEATHER IN SHIRLEY MASON’S CAP

April 10, 1920

Molly and I,” the new William Fox production, is said to be an even better picture than “Her Elephant Man.” The production was directed by Howard M. Mitchell.
Goldwyn to Issue Beach, Moore and Geraldine Farrar Pictures in April

Four Goldwyn pictures are scheduled for April publication. They are Rex Beach's "The Silver Horde," Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," Gertrude Atherton's "The Tower of Ivory" and Tom Moore in "The Great Accident." All of these productions have been completed at Goldwyn's Culver City studios.

In "The Silver Horde," Rex Beach, whose "Girl From Outside" still is meeting with success, is said to have written his screen masterpiece. The action of the story is laid in Alaska, the Alaska of the salmon fisheries in the Kalgvik district, where a Wall Street syndicate fights to reap the profit on a silver horde of salmon when the claim rightfully belongs to Cherry Malotte, the heroine of the drama, played by Myrtle Stedman.

Humor and Pathos

"The Silver Horde" is said to combine the dramatic vitality of "The Brand" and "The Spoilers" with the irresistible humor and pathos of "The Girl From Outside." The cast also includes Robert McKim, Curtis Cooksey, Betty Blythe, M. B. Clynn and Hector Sarno.

Geraldine Farrar in "The Woman and the Puppet," a Reginald Barker production from the play by Pierre Louys and Pierre Frondaie, has the type of colorful character that she knows so well how to portray with striking effect. Lavish sets constructed at the Goldwyn studios supply a picturesque background for the tale of love, hate and jealousy.

"The Tower of Ivory," an Eminent Authors' production, made under the direction of William Parke, is an adaptation of Gertrude Atherton's popular novel.

Plays Four Characters

It is a romance of America and England, in which Barbara Castleton appears in four distinct characters. In the early part of the story she is seen as a half-starved, ragged-looking factory girl without employment and contemplating suicide. She next plays a dance-hall singer in a rough cote on the Barbary Coast in San Francisco, where her voice attracts the attention of a wealthy visitor. From these roles she passes into that of the pet of her wealthy admirer, who pays for the cultivation of her voice that she may become a famous singer and the wife of an English nobleman.

"The Great Accident," Tom Moore's latest starring vehicle, is one of Ben Ames Williams' widely circulated tales. It appeared first as a serial in the Saturday Evening Post, where it attracted much attention, and later in book form. Harry Beaumont directed the picture, with a cast including Jane Novak, Ann Forrest, Andrew Robson, Willard Louis and Lillian Langdon.

First National May Get Selig Pictures, According to Report

LOS ANGELES.—It is reported here that First National Exhibitors' Circuit may get Col. W. N. Selig's productions for distribution in America.

Col. Selig has completed "The Mask," first of the new Selig specials, and has two of James Oliver Curwood's stories under way, "Isobel" and "Kazan," the latter featuring, to great extent, the famous dog of that name.

The Selig company will make at least five of these big productions annually, in addition to the animal films for which the concern is well known. It is understood that Col. Selig also will put on a five-reel animal comedy, bringing to the fore bengals, lions, pumas, leopards and chimpanzees.

"Vampire Trials," the mystery serial, is approaching its finishing episode. This production features Franklyn Farnum and Mary Anderson.

J. V. Ritchey Attends Chicago Convention

J. V. Ritchey, head of the Ritchey Lithographing Corporation, the best known lithographer in the motion picture industry, was among the celebrities attracted to Chicago by the convention of independent exchange men at the Congress Hotel March 24, 25 and 26.

Mr. Ritchey was a guest of J. L. Friedman at the dinner given the visiting exchange men and producers, and other functions.

Vitagraph Will Use Plane That Will Weather Storm

An airplane possessing a stabilizer, which enables it to weather storms, will be used in one of the big scenes in Vitagraph's forthcoming feature, "The Girl From the Sky," upon which preliminary work has started. Tom Terriss, the director, has arrived recently at Vitagraph's Hollywood, Cal. studio, to prepare for the production.

"The Girl From the Sky" is adapted from the novel by Gouverneur Morris, entitled "Trumpet Island." The adaptation was done by Rudolph De Cordova.

Wilson’s Genial Smile
Is Again on the Screen

For the first time since he fell ill on Sept. 26 at Wichita, Kansas, President Wilson has posed for the motion picture camera. For months cameramen maintained “watchful waiting” at the White House to film the president, but such times as he drove out in his automobile he traveled so speedily that a picture of the question. In Fox News No. 49 one of the first portraits of the chief executive taken is reproduced. As he left the executive mansion, Mr. Wilson consented to hold up his automobile long enough for photographers to get screen and several feet of him. He smiled genially and waved his hand to the crowd as the car moved on.

Beadell Turns Mayor’s Office Into Studio and Makes Municipal Film

Ben W. Beadell’s vocation is being Select’s Chicago manager. Then he has a hobby, i.e., directing a municipal motion picture, entertaining a group of prominent Chicagoans.

It happened this way:

The Chicago Association of commerce and Mayor William Hale Thompson were planning ways and means of introducing a bond issue for the purpose of building in Municipal convention Hall seating 34,000 people. They decided the most effective way to reach all of Chicago’s citizens was to make pictures. And Sam Atkinson of the Allied Amusement Association was called into the conference and they consented to direct the affair.

The story was prepared by Spearman Lewis, a newspaper writer, and in conjunction with Mr. Beadell, a scenario was prepared. The stars of this production were to be the “highest priced obtainable,” therefore Mayor William Hale Thompson and department. Chicago “millionaire citizens” were selected and the “settings” and “stage” were quickly decided upon when some of the mayor’s office ports. From the Essanay Company was ordered a truck full of lights, cameramen, etc., in charge of Fred Wagner and everything was ready on Saturday, March 27.

On Saturday morning the mayor’s big office resembled a big studio, arc lights standing everywhere and electric cables winding all around the floor. The actors were all at hand and camera shell up and a letter came to Mayor Baker and the mayor and prominent citizens were hopping around at Ben Beadell’s orders. The way they chucked, they seemed to like it.

Now everybody is waiting to see Chicago’s own motion pictures, which are to be shown in every Chicago theatre to boost the big bond issue.

Baker Obtains Right To Tarkington Script

Tarkington Baker, who resigned recently as general manager of Universal City stopped in Chicago on Friday, March 26, on route to New York. Mr. Baker has a contract with Booth Tarkington for three original scripts which he intends to produce.

Cohen Warns New York F. I. L. M. Exhibitors Are In Militant Mood

NEW YORK, N. Y., March 30.—Declaring that the ruling of the F. I. L. M. Club of New York City barring consideration of any oral promise or agreement with respect to a contract for film service is arbitrary, unfair, and "an attempt to disown promises and representations" made by salesmen, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York State Picture Exhibitors League, has demanded suspension of the ruling.

Warns Exhibitors Are Militant in Spirit

"It may not be amiss for me to state that the exhibitor is militant in spirit at this time because of the many abuses and injustices that have been done to him by some exchanges and their representatives and we want you to know that our state organization will protect to its utmost ability the rights and interests of all exhibitors, particularly the small ones," Cohen warns in his open letter to the F. I. L. M. Club.

The first notice exhibitors received of the action of the F. I. L. M. club was in the nature of a circular letter sent to all managers and proprietors of theatres.

It pointed out that despite the fact all contracts stipulate no oral agreements are binding, many exhibitors file claims against F. I. L. M. Club members for not fulfilling oral agreements alleged to have been made at the time the contract was signed.

Ruling Is Presented

"To avoid such needless disputes and in fairness to all concerned and especially film companies in business transactions, the exchanges take this opportunity to officially notify you as follows," says the letter, continuing:

On and after March 21st, 1920, no claim will be entertained by the Credit Bureau of Grievance Committee of the F. I. L. M. Club to enforce an oral promise or an oral agreement with respect to a contract for film service. No manager or salesman in the employ of any of these companies is authorized to vary or change the terms of any of the written contracts by oral promises. Therefore, insist that any terms of the agreement of the contract be incorporated in the written contract and that all provisions and conditions of your contract shall be entered into the agreement by a clause in writing. This is especially important with respect to terms for protection detailing the amount of protection, theatres covered, the run and any other items with respect to which you attach any importance."

Exhibitors Are Angered

Exhibitors receiving the notices took the matter up with the state association, with the result that Cohen issued his warm reply.

"Contracts of every exchange differ from the other," said Cohen in part. "The copy of the so-called contract which is signed by the exhibitor is never left with him at the time it is signed, and in a very large number of instances, changes have been made in the contract after they have been signed by the exhibitor and have left his possession."

"It is the purpose of your club to help in all dealings between exhibitors and exchanges, we would ask you immediately to promulgate a ruling insisting on the film representatives of every exchange belonging to your club placing a copy of the contract for service with the exhibitor at the time same is signed."

Louise Glaum in “Sex” Will Play Fifty-Five Full Week First Runs

J. Parker Read, Jr., Claims New Record for His Star’s Latest Production—Will be Shown in All Large Cities April 11

The week of April 11 will establish a record for J. Parker Read, Jr., as a producer of motion pictures that is seldom duplicated in the industry. This record has been made by the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation with Louise Glaum’s new production, “Sex,” by C. Gardner Sullivan. April 11 is the official publication date of “Sex” and for that week fifty-five full week stand first run theatres will play “Sex” as the most widely exploited attraction they have offered their public in the past year. Certain companies in the industry use fifty-five prints regularly on their productions and perhaps two companies use in excess of this number. But there is not a company in America that ever plays fifty-five first runs on official publication date. This is due to the open market whereby standardized publication dates have become a thing of the past.

In two weeks of selling since the prints of “Sex” reached the exchanges the Hodkinson managers have had the time through the desire of exhibitors for what the entire trade generally recognized as one of the exceptional pictures of the past few years.

First Contract in Chicago

To W. C. Dineen, general manager of the Harry Moor chain of downtown first run theatres in Chicago, goes the credit for being the first run factor in America to sign a playing contract for “Sex.” He will open this production for a two weeks’ engagement at the Rose Theatre, Chicago, April 11. To launch “Sex” as he feels it deserves, Mr. Dineen, through his advertising manager, has bought four times larger space than he has ever used before on any picture in all the Chicago newspapers simultaneously. Jacob Fahn, the powerful Northern New York exhibitor, is the only exhibitor in the country who obtained a pre-release on “Sex” in advance of April 11. He took a chance that the newspaper notices on the picture would be in his Newark branch and opened the picture in Paterson, N. J., on April 8.

Moe Krydell, the big Newark exhibitor who broke a two weeks’ house record with Louise Glaum in “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter,” has booked “Sex” and opens with it on its national publication date.

In Chicago behind the first run in “the loop,” the Lablinder & Trinz Circuit has booked “Sex” solid for its entire chain of theatres, headed by the big Pantheon and inclusive of the Vitagraph, Paramount, Pershing, Madison Square, Michigan, Knickerbocker, Crawford, Covent Garden, Biograph and Wilson theatres. Regional first runs have been booked for this production by the Marks & Goodman houses; by the Gold Theatre; by the People’s theatre; the Oak Park.

Goldman Reports Record

Sidney J. Goldman, the Hodkinson manager in Chicago with control and direction over the Milwaukee, St. Louis, Indianapolis, Detroit and Des Moines offices, reports that his advance bookings in the Chicago branch alone are double the advance bookings taken on any picture in the territory prior to its first run date.

Sig Schlager, J. Parker Read, Jr.’s, personal representative, acting in conjunction with the Hodkinson organization, has had a job of large dimensions on his hands, being called upon in twenty-five days to cover twenty-five first run cities east of the Mississippi river for exploitation work in connection with the first runs. Similar work is being done by other special representatives west of the river.

This production, directed by Fred Niblo, has supplied the one big step forward by Louise Glaum and placed her at the very top as an emotional star. It will go down on record as the only motion picture in history that will have played upwards of one hundred and fifty first run engagements within thirty days from the date of its first run.

Miami League Adds 200 In Two Months

TOLEDO, Ohio, March 30—The Miami Valley Exhibitors’ League with headquarters here has added 200 new members in the last two months. Homer V. Guy and C. J. Donlin, organizers, have been touring Ohio, West Virginia, Kentucky, and Indiana. Louisville, Akron and Columbus were enrolled 100 percent.

A. F. Kinzeler, secretary of the league, who announced the figures, stated that a convention will be called in late May or early June. One of the principal topics to be discussed will be “camouflage commercial advertising.”

Capital Reorganizes

With Woody at Head

Milligan Is General Manager

Succeeding Eckels—Will Expand Operations

Hugh Woody, banker of Thornton, Ind., was elected president of Capital Film company at a meeting of the board of directors held at Frankfort, Ind., on Monday, March 29.

Mr. Woody succeeds S. L. Barnhard, who has been head of the Capital company since the formation of the Schblank.

B. Herbert Milligan, treasurer, was elected to the board of directors, filling the vacancy created by the retirement of Mr. Barnhard.

C. Eddie Eckels Retires

Mr. Milligan also was appointed general manager succeeding C. Eddie Eckels. Following the announcement of the change in the personnel of the management of the Capital company, Mr. Milligan stated that action already has been taken looking to the expansion of the company’s interests. I. Bernstein has been placed in charge of production at the West Coast studios and is rapidly working out an improved plan of operation.

Will Make Specials

According to Mr. Milligan, it is the plan of the company to make special features and to improve the quality of the type of subjects previously issued by the company. Plans also have been made for improving the service offered to affiliated exchanges.

It is announced that at the meeting of the board of directors $150,000 was appropriated for exploitation and $250,000 to carry forward new production plans.

Allan Dwan Disposes Of Three Productions

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, March 29.—A negotiation has just been completed between Allan Dwan and the Mayflower Pictures Corporation whereby Mr. Dwan disposes of his rights in three unpublished Mayflower productions to the Mayflower company.

Among the productions which now become the sole property of Mayflower is “The Heart of a Fool,” a production which is expected to be one of the big successes of the present year.

Mr. Dwan is now supervising the final editing and titling of the Mayflower pictures and when this work is completed his association with Mayflower will terminate.

The deal just closed leaves Mr. Dwan free to commence production for distribution through the Associated Producers, Inc., in the near future.

Educational Films to Issue Booklet Outlining Company's Future Policy

Complete Survey Is Being Made Before Completion Of Sales Organization—Joseph Lee Doing Special Investigation Work

Educational Films Corporation will announce shortly the future policy to be followed by the company as the result of its enlarged activities. This announcement will be made in the form of an attractive booklet. Company officials state that in the effort will be made to contribute this broadcast, but that it will be sent only to those who request it.

It was announced recently that Educational had acquired the entire product of the C. L. Chester studios, including the Chester-Outing Scenics, which will continue to be published weekly; the Chester Screenics, which will be bi-weekly publications; and the Chester comedies, the first of which has been given a pre-publication showing, and which will be issued monthly. Work is under way on the first product of the Screenics, in the invention of which Mr. Hammons, president and general manager. Only tentative arrangements are being made toward forming the general sales organization until a complete survey of the situation can be made. However, it is the plan of the company to make the New York exchange the model office.

Announcement that Educational would enlarge its activities and that it has ample capital for the distribution and exploitation of all short subject material that meets its standards of quality has resulted, it is announced, in the submission of a vast amount of product by established companies and independent producers. The projection room of the company is kept busy day and night viewing the material, and everything that appears to offer real quality is given careful examination.

Busy Examining Material

"We are being kept very busy," said Mr. Hammons, "examining the material that is being offered us. It is very flattering to find that the great majority of producers, both established companies and others who have not yet secured permanent distributing arrangements, have the greatest confidence in our plans. We are earnest in our efforts to get the very best of material, and therefore we always have time to go over such material as is sent us. However, we do not care to look at any material that is supposed to be a part of a proposed series unless the producers are able to give us assurance that the later product will be kept up to the same high standard.

"I am afraid that a great many people are unaware of the care that we always have taken in the past to assure quality in our product. I am not afraid to venture the assertion that in the five years that we have gone on a thousand feet of film for every foot that we have bought. It has been no uncommon thing for us to take 15,000 or 20,000 feet and then accept only enough material for a single reel out of it. Since we announced the enlargement of our work through our own exchanges and since we began to give especial attention to one and two reel comedies we have had much of this material offered to us, a great deal of which we have rejected in entirety.

"Some of the suggestions and made suggestions on and it may be possible that later product will come up to our standard."

Work Slowly for Results

"We are going ahead slowly for a very good reason. There is a temptation when a company greatly increases its potentialities to do things more or less hurriedly. The instructions to each one of our heads of departments is that there must be no speed that will interfere with results—that quantity must never be allowed to lower quality. We are delighted with the assurances that we have had from exhibitors. It will not be long before we are able to announce our complete plans, and we feel sure that our patrons will find that our structure is quite perfect when our doors are opened."

World Rights Acquired

A contract has been signed between Gibraltar Pictures and Inter-Ocean Film Corporation conveying the world's rights to all Louis Tracy productions exclusive of the United States and Canada to the latter organization.

City Where Laemmle Once Lived May Ask Him to Open Theatre

EVANSTON, IND.—Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Corporation, owned Evanville's first motion picture, the Pioneer Theatorium.

That was several years ago, but Mr. Laemmle's aggressiveness has not been forgotten. It has been suggested that he return to open the Liberty theatre in the seven-story building to be erected at Sixth and Main streets.

The new playhouse will be located just half a block from the site of Mr. Laemmle's original house.

New Moore Vehicle Is Considered One of the Year's Best Purchases

Purchase of "Stop That Man" as a vehicle for Owen Moore is considered by Myron Selznick, supervisor of productions for Selznick Pictures, as one of the best buys of the year. The story is the work of George V. Hobart, playwright and author. Mr. Selznick says the story stands out because of its originality in theme and its removal from the general run of conventionalism.

The story deals with a young society youth strangely buffeted about by fate to the point of physical and mental distraction, only to be aided and abetted by the gentleman leader of a band of Apaches toward the happy medium. The action takes place in Paris.

Associated Exhibitors Promises Early Issuance of Its Productions by Pathe

With the arrival in New York from California of F. C. Quimby, its general manager, Associated Exhibitors, Inc., announces that negotiations virtually have been completed for the early publication through Pathe exchanges of several big attractions.

Further, it is announced that it will be but a short time before the many exhibitors who have expressed interest in the organization will have made known to them the full scope and workings of the sub-franchise part of the association's plans.

Proposition Develops

It is understood that Mr. Quimby cut short his visit to the coast because of a vitally important proposition that developed in New York during his absence, and which now is in the process of being welded into a powerful part of the cooperative machine.

At present Associated Exhibitors is being represented in California by Harry Crandall, treasurer, and owner of a string of theatres in Washington, D. C. He is said to be carrying on the negotiations started by Mr. Quimby, as well as opening new channels of benefit to all concerned. Information from Los Angeles is to the effect that several stars, directors and authors will soon begin work in the furtherance of the plans of Associated Exhibitors.

Quimby Is Reticent

Meanwhile, the organization is working with enthusiastic activity, marshaling its various component parts into a coordinate unit. When seen at his offices, Mr. Quimby was reticent as to what he had accomplished in California. "While several important deals have been closed," he said, "neither Associated Exhibitors nor the individuals and organizations working with them are ready to make known the connections at the present moment. We are even further advanced right now than we had ever hoped to be, and the enthusiasm shown on every side is itself an indication of what can be expected of the Associated Exhibitors."

Vidor Selects Butler

Talk to Produce Next "Jack Knife Man" To Be His Second Independent Film For First National

Ellis Parker Butler's romance of the "shanty boats," "The Jack Knife Man," will be produced by King Vidor as his second independent picture for publication through First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

In "The Jack Knife Man," Mr. Butler wrote of life as it is, and in the visualization of his widely read story King Vidor will carry out the creed of fidelity to detail.

The Vidor Company now is working along the San Joaquin river, which provides scenic advantages for the background for the picturesque tale of the clan that live a precarious existence in the side washes of the river.

The cast includes F. A. Turner as Peter, Harry Todd as Boogie, Willis Marks as Briggles and Bobby Kelso as Buddy. All of these players have been cast in important productions.

While in no sense personally supervised by the author, he frequently was consulted by Mr. Vidor and William Parker, who wrote the scenario in regard to the selection of types and the wholesome atmosphere which permeates the novel.

Edith Hallor Prefers
To Remain In Pictures

Edith Hallor is quoted by L. Lawrence Weber, who has just returned to New York from the West Coast studios of Selznick Pictures, as saying that no inducements at the present time could influence her return to the stage. The report that she would desert the screen was current following Mr. Weber's purchase of the dramatic production, "The Beautiful Virgin."

Miss Hallor now is filming "Just Outside the Door" for publication by Republic Distributing Corporation.

Ince Says Business Prospects Bright
For Exhibitor and Producer In East

Declares Showmen Realize the Necessity of Big Productions, Big Stories, Big Casts and Also Faultless Direction

Thomas H. Ince and J. Parker Read, Jr., optimistic over trade conditions and enthusiastic over the cordial reception tendered them in Chicago and New York during their four weeks' sojourn in the two cities, have returned to the west coast.

Members of the Los Angeles press, relatives, and associates of the Ince studies in Culver City, bade "welcome home" to the crusading producers.

Feted in East

According to the producers, their visit in the East was one continuous round of "get together" affairs and banquets tendered by exhibitors and publishers of trade journals, dailies and motion picture magazines. The interest assumed in the future plans of the "Big Six" Associated Producers was both encouraging and inspiring, they declared.

Asking his opinion of trade conditions in New York and Chicago, Mr. Ince replied that the forecast is unusually bright and replete with big opportunities for both the exhibitor and the producer.

New Period of Prosperity

"Our discussions with prominent exhibitors and leaders in the distributing field supported my own convictions that the industry faces a new era of prosperity and progress," Mr. Ince said.

"Generally speaking, the evidence was quite conclusive that the day of the author and the producer is at hand, and that the successful exhibitors now fully realize the necessity of big productions, big stories, big casts and faultless direction.

"Exhibitors are buying pictures on merit only. They have learned to distinguish the real from the fake, universally appealing production from the inferior film that "gets over" mainly by force of exaggerated exploitation and advertising.

Public Demands Good Pictures

"The public, too, according to first-hand reports of the exhibitors with whom we conversed, are no longer the prey to superlatives and wildly alluring advertisements. The people need and desire productions that measure up to the best principles of the dramatic art, and the future is indeed bright for those exhibitors who are determined to surround themselves with the best the market affords.

"One of the outstanding, and most pleasing, impressions of our visit in New York was the growing tendency of the exhibitor, the producer and the distributor to co-operate for the advancement and general welfare of the industry. It is evident that the industry appreciates the importance of unity in all things and I was altogether impressed by the willingness of exhibitors to lend their endorsement and wholehearted support to movements which designed to further protect and advance the best interests of the trade."

Baron de Daue, who has been in America for the past two months in the interest of the Societe Des Films Mercantons of Paris, has sailed for France after completing arrangements for a closer affiliation with American interests.

Before his departure, he announced additional plans for the Mercanton Films, which will enlarge their scope in this country. M. Mercanton has obtained the world rights to Anthony Hope's romantic novel, "Phroso," which he will screen in one of the Mediterranean islands, corresponding to the mythical Neopolis, which was the scene of this story.

The screen version will be made by M. Mercanton with a selected company of players, including well-known American French and Italian actors, it is said. In addition, he is completing arrangements for a well-known American director. The idea of this innovation, he announced, is to combine the best in French and American producing art and infuse into these foreign-made subjects a broader touch of the American style and spontaneity.

During his stay here, Baron de Daue completed arrangements for Guy Crosswell Smith, Ltd., of New York to represent the Mercanton interests in this country. He also disposed to an American syndicate the world picture rights to Knoblauch's dramatic success, "Kismet," which Otis Skinner did on the American stage.

Well Known Men and Women See "Is America Worth Saving?" in New York—Production Said To Rise Out of the Ordinary

Col. Arthur Woods, former police commissioner of New York, and now in charge of all welfare work for the American Legion, together with scores of other well known men and women, visited the Universal service theatre in New York recently and saw "Is America Worth Saving?"—the Americanization picture produced by Harry Levey from the scenario written by Nicholas Murray Butler, president of Columbia university.

Mrs. Woods, who was present with her husband, considered the picture of interest to her for the reason that her great-great grandfather, Alexander Hamilton, is visualized in Dr. Butler's patriotic picturization along with Washington, Jefferson, Lincoln and Roosevelt.

To View His Picture
Dr. Butler has not seen the completed picture but is expected home from August, Ga., soon, when he will ask Mr. Levey in putting the finishing touches to the film. Two hundred prints of "Is America Worth Saving?" will be circulated and it is believed that within three months almost every person in the country will have had an opportunity to see it.

The only propaganda in "Is America Worth Saving?" according to those who have seen it, is pure Americanism of the most vivid kind, following closely the text of a book of the same name by Dr. Butler, which will be published soon by Scribner's.

Different From Others
"Is America Worth Saving?" differs from all other Americanization pictures, it is said, in that the romantic interest lies not in a number of characters portraying some incident of American history, but in America itself—its greatness, socially and economically. The foreword says:

"We are living in the greatest day that the modern world has seen. Old forms of government that have existed for fifteen hundred years have tumbled down in ruins before our eyes because they failed to uphold the will of the people. Ruling dynasties, which traced back their origin to the Middle Ages, have been driven from the places of power and authority that they have occupied for centuries. New nations are born in our very presence, standing erect and asking ready to march forward to take their independent places in the family of free nations."

Visualizes Farms
The picture visualizes the farms and factories of the country. Then the distinguished scenarioist says: "These material possessions are not the nation. The real nation consists of the ideas, the hopes, the beliefs that seethe and stir the hearts of the men and women who are of it."

Robinson and other "outs" are handled with a heavy hand. Certain things are pictured and commented upon as follows: These are the enemies of America speaking. Strange tongues are heard and new doctrines that were old and discredited when Greece was young."

A thousand newspaper editorials and magazine articles are visualized in the picture preceding this line: "Must the American form of government commit suicide in order to give inducement to a more satisfactory type? Is it so, it will make no difference whether industry is better, organized or not. Chaos will come."

The Constitution of the United States and the declaration of independence play parts in "Is America Worth Saving?". There is in every foot of the two glorious reels

Ethel Barrymore Begins
Production for Tri-Star

Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley, directors, who recently formed the Tri-Star Picture Corporation, have leased the Victor studios at 645-651 West Forty-third Street, New York, for a long term for the making of a series of productions.

Ethel Barrymore, star of "Declasse," the dramatic success now running at the Empire theatre, New York, is the first star to be placed under the Tri-Star management. She already has commanded her studio, which will not interfere with her stage presentation.

The initial Tri-Star production will be a screen version of R. L. Stinebenson's famous story, "The Super-Woman," with the film adaptation and continuity developed by George Dullin. Leslie Bingham has been appointed studio manager and casting director.

George B. Seitz will be the technical director, while W. S. Cooper will be chief cameraman.

Harlan May Be Starred

LOS ANGELES—Kenneth Harlan, accordingly, has been elevated to the star rank by an eastern company. Harlan has played leading parts for many feminine stars for three years on the West Coast.

Anti-Red Committee

Mayor of Philadelphia and Col. Arthur Woods Have Consented to Serve

Previous to the departure of Adolph Zukor and William A. Brady for Europe a meeting of the Americanism committee of the Motion Picture industry of the United States was held, with Franklin K. Lane presiding. It was decided at the meeting to enlarge the committee, and J. Hampton Moore, mayor of Philadelphia, and Col. Arthur Woods of the Americanism commission of the Legion of Honor were invited to join.

An interim of inactivity resulted while awaiting the acceptances of Mr. Moore and Col. Woods. Both, however, have now notified the committee of their consent to serve, headquarters have been established.

The reorganized committee consists of the following named persons: Franklin K. Lane, chairman; J. Hampton Moore, representing the interest of municipalities throughout the country; Col. Arthur Woods of the Americanism commission of the American Legion; Harry M. Crandall, treasurer of the committee, representing the exhibitionists' interests; William A. Brady, ex officio member; Lewis J. Selznick, in charge of distribution, and Adolph Zukor, in charge of production.

Florence Turner and Chris Rube Will Make Radin's Zip Comedies

Chris Rube will appear in a series of six single reel comedies, which will form the first group of the "Zip" comedies to be sold on the state right market by Radin Pictures. Rube is said to be supported by a cast of comedy favorites who assist materially in injecting good, clean humor, of a swift moving nature, into these subjects.

According to the present Radin schedule, the Rube comedies will be followed by six single-reel subjects in which Florence E. Turner will make a reappearance on the screen. Miss Turner some years ago was a popular screen player and was the winner of many popularity contests.

Realart Selects "Miss Hobbs" As Comedy In Which to Present New Player—Sam Wood Will Handle
Directorial End of Production

Wanda Hawley, the new Realart star, has returned to Los Angeles from a two-weeks' vacation and will start work immediately on her first production as a star. "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome Jermol, has been selected for her as the most suitable vehicle to bring out her talent in light comedy roles.

"Miss Hobbs" originally was produced at the Lyceum theatre in New York on September 7, 1899, with a notable cast headed by Annie Russell, Charles Rich-

"Nurse Marjorie," an adaptation of Israel Zangwill's stage play, is announced as the forthcoming Mary Miles Minter picture for publication by Realart Pictures for April 4. The picture was viewed recently by Realart officials and evoked enthusiastic praise for the work of the star and of William Desmond Taylor, director.

Admission Taxes Show
A Greater Attendance
WASHINGTON.—Figures from the bureau of internal revenue, showing tax collections for January, show that every man, woman and child in the country pays approximately 6 cents a month as admission tax. A total of $6,713,998 was collected from the admission tax during the month, as compared with $4,294,733 during January, 1919, an increase of $2,419,265.

Collections for the eight months ended with February totaled $41,256,658, as compared with $25,893,870 for the eight months of last year, an increase of $16,362,787, indicating that the admission tax increase has increased approximately two-thirds within the past year.

Rested on Return
On her return she reported that she had thoroughly rested and was ready for work. Returning her vacation, she spent a few days in the mountains at Forest Home and then went to Del Monte, a famous golf rendezvous. Miss Hawley is an ardent golfer and enjoyed the relaxed game thoroughly. She topped her vacation period off with a visit to the famous Arrowhead Hot Springs.

Since becoming a star, Miss Hawley, it is said, has been much in demand by interviewers and photographers. Sam Woods, who directed "Double Speed," in which Miss Hawley appeared as leading woman for Wallace Reid, has been chosen to direct the first star picture.

Plan New Keith Theatre
PADUCAH, KY.—A $100,000 motion picture and vaudeville theatre will be erected here in the near future as an addition to Keith's circuit. A fire-proof and wholly modern structure that will seat 2,200 persons is contemplated.

Will Protect Film
While there is no law on the books has about ceased in Brazil, the association, it is said, expects to make this elimination complete. One of the principal objects of the bureau is to assist in framing and in supporting laws for the protection of theatres and importers. All films published legitimately will be protected by the bureau, which will attempt to stamp out such objectionable practices as the interfering of films, cutting and destroying of film.

All destroyed or damaged film must be paid for, or service to the individual theatre will be discontinued. Offenders and any person who may be heard in their own defense, but are subject to dismissal and are denied further film service. Theaters having faulty machines which damage the film will be required to purchase new equipment, the association assisting in the purchase of such without profit.

To Eliminate Bad Accounts
The association also pledges its services in eliminating bad accounts, and theatre owners who neglect or refuse to pay just accounts will be deprived of film service. Pelculas D'Luxo of Atlanta, Ga., which is the distributor of Paramount Artcraft pictures in Brazil, has joined the organization.

Any theatre showing a stolen film forfeits its membership in the organization and is barred from receiving films imported by association members.

Earle Williams is at work on his newest production, "The Three Keys," taken from a popular novel by Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey. Chester Bennett is directing. The adaptation was done by H. Thompson Rich and Lucien Hubbard.
Mae Murray Derides Censorship
Wins Support of N. Y. Club Women
Star of "On With the Dance," Which Was Barred
In Pennsylvania, Shows Difference Between Legal Censors and National Board

A derision of legal censorship was voiced by Mae Murray, star of the Paramount Arcturus feature, "On With the Dance," which was barred from showing in Pennsylvania, in a talk before 200 members of the organization. So convincing were her words that at the close of her address it was voted to join actively in the fight against the menace.

Miss Murray did not mention directly the Pennsylvania case, but her subtle references carried an implication of it. As the club is closely affiliated with other women's organizations, having a total membership of approximately 4,000, it is evident that the star's talk will have a far-reaching effect in combating censorship.

Censorship Is Menace
Miss Murray said in part:
"Should I step on anyone's toes, please forgive me. I do not mean to be personal, but I love this industry of which I am a very small part and realize that legalized censorship is a menace.

The difference between the National Board of Review and legalized censorship is briefly as follows: The National Board of Review is composed of men and women who voluntarily give their service free. They are of different creeds and of different interests, business and social. Therefore, they form a cosmopolitan mind in reviewing a picture and collectively should know what is best suited to the public. And up to date they have proved that they do know.

Must Satisfy Prejudices
"Legalized censors receive salaries, and the fact that they receive salaries makes it necessary for them to find something in each film to be taken out, in order to prove that they themselves are necessary as well as to insure their salaries. The personal prejudices of the censors must be satisfied, consequently the film is made to suit a single narrow mind instead of the millions of picture patrons.

When men and women voluntarily give their services free of charge, they, of course, have a very different point of view than men and women picked just to find objectionable things.

Curtails Free Thought
"The greatest menace legalized censorship holds for the public is the curtailling of its free thought. The progress of our wonderful country has been so rapid because of the independence of each and every individual. Legalized censorship would take that independence away, depriving the public of the right to judge for itself. Its advocates seem to think that taken collectively the public is not fit to judge.

"To make the moral of a picture story clear it is often necessary to depict a phase of immorality. For instance, in 'The Miracle Man,' it was necessary to show the life lived by the people in the slums before they met the miracle man. The difference between what they had been and what they had become through his influence could be made clear to the audience only by showing the bad and the good. In places where legalized censorship holds sway these points were entirely destroyed. Now if this kind of thing is allowed to continue, the public not knowing why its interest is waning, will finally stop seeing pictures. Surely mutilated films carry no message.

AN OLD FAVORITE RETURNS TO SCREEN

"Skinner's Dress Suit," starring Bryant Washburn, has been re-issued in new form by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc.

"Why Jeopardize Industry?"
"Our museums, our libraries, our newspapers are within easy reach of the public. Why should it be necessary to keep legalized censorship for motion pictures? Are the people connected with the production of motion pictures so important or preeminent that it is necessary to hire guards to stand between them and the public?

"Any picture put out with an idea of getting through its salaciousness will be taken care of by the public because the public will report it to the police. We have plenty of laws for that sort of thing.

"In view of the success of the National Board of Review, why place this marvelous industry in jeopardy? What good can come of such a course? There must be a freedom of thought if we are to have progress. No art has ever progressed under a bar of negatives—and the motion picture is an art! Do not retard its progress by shackling it with legalized censorship."

Alice Joyce Working
On Story by Terhune
Vitagraph Examines to Have It Ready for Publication

Sometime in May

Alice Joyce, a member of a large Vitagraph company under the direction of George Terwilliger have begun production of "Dollars and the Woman," adapted from the novel by Robert Payson Terhune. Lucien Hubbard wrote the scenario.

It is expected that the picture will be published in May. Miss Joyce plays the role of Madge Hillyer, a young society matron, married to Dan Hillyer, scarcely more than a youth, whose future is staked on an invention. The pair have been used to luxury and ease, but as the picture opens they are beginning to find themselves in straightened circumstances. Soon thereafter they plunge heavily on Dan's venture in getting his invention into the hands of a western magnate. One of the scenes will be a dinner room in a large New York hotel in which over 200 persons will be shown. This scene will be staged in the largest set ever built at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studio.

Character Pictures Will Not Stipulate Number of Reels Picture Is to Run

Character Pictures announces that all of its photoplays will be presented in their natural length, instead of being run in a stipulated number of reels. The company announces that it is not in sympathy with the usual method of dealing upon the length of a production before it is made.

With Character Pictures, the production automatically will settle upon its own length after the story has been censored, and whether the picture runs 4,000 feet or 8,000 feet, it will be presented to the public in its entirety. Character Pictures feels that many splendid stories have failed upon the screen because they have been forced or padded.
"The Virgin of Stamboul" Scores Success at Chicago Trade Show

In the Cameo Room of the Morrison Hotel, March 24, "The Virgin of Stamboul," the Universal-Jewel-Master Production featuring Priscilla Dean, was presented following a luncheon to a gathering of approximately three hundred persons representing the theatre and the press.

Paul Biese's orchestra, from the Pantheon theatre, one of Chicago's leading playhouses, provided a characteristic setting for both luncheon and picture. A tribute to the latter may be seen in the fact that few noticed the absence of the music after the third reel, when the orchestra ceased playing. Further tributes were plentiful when the picture had ended and the Universal representatives were enthusiastically congratulated by departing guests.

Priscilla Dean, Universal discovery, has in "The Virgin of Stamboul" the genuinely "big picture" that was needed to clinch her claim to stardom. Her early productions, published inauspiciously and presented by exhibitors in like manner, were remarkably successful from the standpoint of public approval.

Her unique personality, with her unusual type of beauty, won almost instant favor. Exhibitorial reports, which reflect public sentiment, were enthusiastic in praise. Fan magazines printed her picture. Newspaper writers upon matters of the screen gave her big space.

Universal has been wise in allowing considerable time to elapse between her last publication and the present one. There is a well-founded demand for the production in which she is featured. And it is a production that will add to her following, as it satisfies that demand.

"The Virgin of Stamboul" is a splendid picturization of the story by H. H. Van Loan. It has been produced with great attention to detail and with no thought of economy. The interiors are elaborate when elaborateness is fitting, plain when the plain is demanded. Costumes are of the best.

Exteriors, which figure prominently, are no less deserving of commendation. The attack upon the walled villa which provides the smashing climax is a fine example of the technical and directorial staff working harmoniously together. In this episode several hundred players are employed, Tod Browning's direction keeping the various threads of action distinguised to a nicety yet weaving them into the story fabric.

Priscilla Dean, as Sari, a beggar girl of Stamboul, forced against her will into a matrimonial alliance with a powerful sheik, rises to every opportunity with acting that is superb. Her characterization is genuine, at no time theatrical, convincing.

Wheeler Oakman, as Captain Pemberton, the American hero, is at all times effective. It is doubtful if his past work, done under many trade marks, by the way, includes a portrayal as satisfying as the present one.

Wallace Beery makes of Achmet Hamid, the villainous sheik, a properly despicable character. Beery's villains are among the best of screen history. His Prussian officers during the war-time epoch made his name a household word. His desert chief-rain is no less commendable.

The exploitation possibilities of the production are almost unlimited. New York newspapers have not yet recovered from the shock of the publicity stunt that was put over just prior to the picture's premiere at a Broadway theatre. An excellent exploitation guide is supplied with the picture, which insures the exhibitor who uses it a big attendance on the opening day.

After that day, without a doubt, the attendance will not only hold up but grow. The booking should allow for a run of sufficient length to exploit thoroughly the theatre's drawing territory.

The picture possesses three dominant attributes that have assured the success of the big pictures that are talked about years after the world has seen them.

Dramatic strength, production excellence and stellar appeal are box office guarantees. These "The Virgin of Stamboul" has in ample measure.

CHICAGO TRADE SHOWING OF "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBoul"

Four productions have been introduced to Chicago so favorably as was "The Virgin of Stamboul" at the splendid luncheon arranged by I. L. Lesserman, manager of the Chicago branch of Universal, and his associates.

Tables were set in such manner that all might view the screening comfortably from their seats. The waiters were attired in Turkish costume. Gliding silently in and out among the tables, they introduced the first suggestion of "atmosphere."

Biese's Orchestra Plays

Paul Biese's Pantheon orchestra, the organization which is popularly credited with the remarkable success of "Dar-danella," a current song and instrumental hit, added to this by opening the musical program with that selection, one particularly well suited to the occasion.

When luncheon was finished, lights were extinguished and the orchestra "picked up" the story with the opening scene, a flash of Stamboul introducing Priscilla Dean, the star.

When the picture closed, with the race of troops from Stamboul to the stronghold of the villainous sheik and the subsequent terrific struggle between the forces of right and wrong, applause was spontaneous.

Universal was represented at the luncheon by I. L. Lesserman, Chicago manager; H. M. Berman, general manager of Universal exchanges; J. H. Mazier, director of Universal publicity. New York; Harry Reichenbach, New York; Harry Rice, director of Universal publicity in Chicago, and representatives of the Chicago exchange and sales force.

Many Exhibitors Present

The list of those present includes: Aaron Jones, Jones, Linick & Shaefer; Ralph Stockman, Lane Court; W. J. Russell, Rosewood; Nate Ruttenberg, Milford; G. Paul, States; L. P. DeWolf, Crown; Edward Drouby, Biograph; W. H. Bolton, Home; Arthur Haley, Hillside; Jos. Aronheim, Frolic; Joseph Lazaroff, Pershing; H. M. Rouda, Adelphi; Max Balaban, Balaban & Katz.

Brockell & Elliott Buy Interests of Lubliner & Trinz In Exchange
Associated Managers of Greater Stars Productions Exchange Become Sole Owners—No Immediate Change In Policy to Be Made

Floyd M. Brockell and Clyde Elliott, associated managers of the Greater Stars Productions, Inc., one of Chicago’s leading independent exchanges, have purchased the Lubliner and Trinz interest in the exchange and are now sole owners.

No change in policy will be made. The exchange will continue to offer only productions which they consider special and will back the exhibitors with every possible exploitation aid.

Has Five Series Contracted

The Greater Stars Productions is one of the independent exchanges which is guaranteed a continuous supply of features and desirable short subjects. It has contracted for the productions of Equity Pictures Corporation, Pioneer Film Corporation, Jans Productions, Comedyart, and the Spanuth Vodvel Movie. In addition to these series, Brockell and Elliott will keep in touch with the open market, continually on the lookout for big producers.

SCORED MANY SUCCESSES

In the year the exchange has been in operation, it has successfully exploited an unusual number of features. One of the spectacular campaigns conducted by Greater Stars during the past year was in the interests of “Eyes of Youth,” Clara Kimball Young’s first Equity production.

At the present time the exchange is heavily exploiting “The Forbidden Woman,” starring Miss Young, and “The Long Arm of Mannister,” starring Henry B. Walthall.

“The Boomerang,” a pioneer feature, will be offered in the territory in the late spring.

Dempsey-Willard Films Are Sought

Government Men On Trail
After Dinner at the Sporting Club

NEW YORK.—Agents of the Department of Justice and police inspectors are on a still hunt for films of the Dempsey-Willard fight which are said to have been shown at a dinner of the International Sporting Club at the Frederick’s commodore on Thursday night. If the films are found they will be confiscated.

John E. Webster, assistant United States attorney, stated that he knew nothing of the exhibition of the fight pictures, except what he heard in this morning’s newspapers. He said there was no law against showing such pictures, but that their transportation through the mail or in interstate commerce was punishable by a fine of $1,000 or a year’s imprisonment or both.

The exhibition of the films of the last big fight which was held at Toledo, Ohio, July 4, last, took place at a dinner of the club which drew the boxing bill introduced by Senator James J. Walker and recently passed by the state Senate. Among the members of the club are some of the best known men in the United States. The dinner guests included Anthony Drexel Biddle of Philadelphia, Gutzon Borglum the sculptor, General John F. O’Ryan, Jules Jusserand the French ambassador, Coleman Du Pont, and Frederick B. Pratt of the Standard Oil Company.

The dinner was arranged in honor of Georges C. Clemenceau, the French heavy-weight, who is in this country with the ostensible purpose of combating with Dempsey for the championship.

Siegel Now District Manager for Select
Sam. E. Morris Has Confirmed the Appointment From His New York Office

Sam E. Morris, general manager of Select Pictures and Republic Distributing Corporation, has given official confirmation of the appointment of Henry Siegel, former branch manager of the New York Select exchange, as district manager for New York.

Mr. Siegel’s career in the film industry dates back to the days of the World Film Corporation. Forsaking the practice of law, he became a salesmen for World, and later was placed in charge of the Newark, N. J., branch. About six months later he transferred his activities to the Bluebird office of Universal in the same city. Mr. Siegel then served another short period under the Bluebird banner, and finally joined the Selznick-Select Newark branch.

Mayflower Pictures For First National?
Report From the East Declares New Affiliation May Be Announced

NEW YORK, March 29—Negotiations that have been in progress here for some time indicate that forthcoming productions of the Mayflower Pictures corporation will be distributed by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc.

Publication arrangements previously announced apply only to a group of Mayflower pictures either already completed or now in the course of production. According to information received here the deal with First National is to apply to all future Mayflower pictures excepting only these, which already have been contracted for.

The Mayflower company has under contract several leading directors who are making special productions. This group added to the already strong line-up of stars and special productions of the First National will greatly strengthen the position of this company.

Rogers to Establish Masterpiece Branches

L. T. Rogers, manager of the Chicago office of Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation, which will handle Brady-made pictures, is establishing other branch offices for the company.

The organization has inaugurated a new policy in dealing with exhibitors in that theatre owners will not be required to give a deposit.

The features contain such stars as Alice Brady, Robert Warwick, Ethel Clayton, House Peters, Holbrook Blinn, Vivian Martin, Milton Sills, Doris Kenyon, and George Beban. The exhibitors are to be furnished with entirely new prints and new advertising matter.
THE AUTHOR ON PICTURE MAKING

Emerson Hough, Author of "The Sagebrusher," Blames Theatre Men For Many Shortcomings of the Screen in Saturday Evening Post Article.

Emerson Hough, whose novel, "The Sagebrusher," pictureized by Benjamin B. Hampton and distributed through Hodges, Figgis, & Co., was the same time that he declared a success, gives to the public his impressions of the American exhibitor in "The Soul Child," an article published in the March 27 issue of the Saturday Evening Post.

Mr. Hough was with the Hampton pictures, but left the Studio before the "Sagebrusher" in the studio and on location. At the time of its publication due mention was made of the fact and the influence of the author was plainly seen in the production.

Sets Forth Impressions

In "The Soul Child" the author sets forth his impressions of producers, directors, actors, distributors and finally the exhibitors. He gives the public the same time his experiences while associated with them in the photographing, assembling and publication of the film. He is frank in his statements. He gives his views without reserve or consideration of the feelings of persons discussed. Mr. Hough, it is said, is a man with intelligence and a knowledge of his business. The producer is acquitted of such charges as have been made at various times and from divers quarters against him. The author is criticised a bit less favorably, but his failings arecondoned.

Discusses the Exhibitor

The exhibitor is singled out as the weakest link in the chain, the man responsible for many of the shortcomings of the motion picture art.

Mr. Hough restates the merit consideration. One of the first authors to personally supervise production of his stories, he was given a goodly share of credit for its merit. Exhibitors will be interested in the following excerpts from his article. He describes a scene in which the exchange manager tries to sell his picture to an exhibitor in this manner:

"I give you right, Henry," said the latter—"I give you right you got a big picture. I want the "Sagebrusher." The girls comes to see my pictures. Nix on the Wild West film. You say this ain't Wild West and I know it ain't, but I don't like the name. If you should give me a name now, like The Love Affairs of Henry or something, I could put it up in a sign and pull in a house. My people want swell stuff, with dress suits, see? I ain't saying a word against your picture—i ain't saying a word to hurt your feelings. I'm not the Author, for you know more about them things than what I do. But what I say is, I want names that bring people into the house. If you don't make me that sort of picture some one else will. If I don't buy it of you I find it somewhere else. Nix on the Western. There's too much of the buckskins. Give me something swell."

"The distributing agent was calm.

"Oh, I know what you want," he said. "You see, you this picture, and I'm telling you straight. For instance, comes a man to me and I buy off him a picture called The Last Pinnacle." He pronounced it 'pinochle,' 'I put on the Pinochle and it fell dead. Long after I get that same thing and I run it under another name—I call it A Foolish Wife. Well, I packed the houses, that's all, the whole six of my theatres. It's a fine fillum you got, I give you right—but A Foolish Wife is a whole lot better for a name.'

"I think that in the exhibitor, the theatre owner, we have the weakest link in the movie chain today. There are brains enough and money enough in the producing end to make high-class pictures. The film audience is not below the high-class picture—it is as good as any picture you can give it. But the film audience sees only pictures selected by the exhibitors, who in these times are hampered by the strange traditions of the dramatic art, its timidity, its reluctance to change. Hence we have an industry which is so young that it still carries its own early past, its own unintelligent conventions. At first any movie would do, and anybody could start a movie show. As so many of these shows made easy money, their owners stayed in, and all the ingredients of a crystallized and unprogressive industry lay ready at hand. The real censors and selectors continue to be the exhibitors, who have not progressed."

Territory Purchased

Announcement has been made by Herman F. Jans, President of Jans Pictures Inc., that Pittsburgh and western Pennsylvania has been sold to the First National Exhibitors Circuit for the rights to the initial publication of Jans Pictures "Love Without Question" starring Olive Tell.

German Actress Is Killed in Snow Slide

GENEVA, SWITZERLAND—Hermione Koller, a well-known German motion picture actress of Dresden, was killed, and several other actors and actresses were injured near Innsbruck in the upper slopes of the Wildgrazut Mountain, when an imitation avalanche which was to envelop the group developed into a real one, according to a report received here.

Mountain scenes were being taken by a German film company at an altitude of 9,700 feet. One was to depict a party of eleven persons being buried by an avalanche. Just as the picture was about to be taken a real avalanche came down the mountain side and buried the company, killing Fränzel Koller and seriously injuring several others.

“Law of the Yukon” Is Being Cut and Assembled by Miller for Mayflower

Charles Miller is in New York, cutting and assembling “The Law of the Yukon,” after completing the camera work at Port Henry, N. Y. This adaptation of Robert W. Service’s poem under the same title will be presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Edward Earle, who was starred by Vitagraph in the O. Henry series and other productions, has the leading male role of Morgan Kleath in this production, in which Director Miller promises something new and different.

In addition to Earle, the leading roles are filled by June Elvidge, Nancy Deaver, a newcomer to the American screen, Nadine Nash, Warburton Gamble, Thomas O’Malley, Bigelow Cooper, Joseph Smiley and Jack Dillon.

No player is to be starred in the cast, it is announced, each one being featured in accordance with his or her importance in the production.

Well Suited to Role

Edward Earle, according to Mr. Miller, was suited peculiarly to the role of Morgan Kleath, who comes to Gold City to establish a local newspaper and bring with him the more civilized standards of life. He was chosen from a number of candidates by the producer-director as an ideal type for the part.

Instead of dwelling on the reform possibilities of such a character, as in many Yukon productions, the story develops the influence of the country and the irresistible law of the Yukon on Kleath. It is the story of a so-called tenderfoot struggling against the great forces of nature working through human instruments.

Earle’s early screen career was spent with the old Edison Company, where he played leading parts for two years. Later he was leading man for Viola Dana in her productions of “Gates of East,” “The Lure of Happiness” and “The Beautiful Eye.”

Starred by Vitagraph

He then joined Vitagraph and was starred in the production, “For France.” Then followed such productions as “Blind Adventure,” “One Thousand Dollars” and “Little Runaway,” in which he was starred.

Recently Earle has appeared as Alice Brady’s leading man in “His Bridal Night” and with Lucy Cotton in “The Miracle of Love.” He was a featured player in Charles Miller’s recent production, “High Speed.”

The feature will be published by Realart Pictures Corporation, probably within a month’s time. It is announced that a number of inquiries for pre-publication bookings have been received.

Weiss Has Organized Independent Exchange
Former First National Head in Chicago Will Publish Features, Re-Issues

Harry Weiss, who resigned recently as manager of the Chicago exchange of First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, Inc., has created Superior Screen Service, Inc., to operate as an independent exchange man in Illinois, Indiana, Wisconsin, Michigan and Iowa.

The new company will be composed of two departments, feature and commercial. Through the feature departments will be published annually twenty-six long subjects which will star well-known film players, or will be adaptations of stage successes. Re-issues will be published through the commercial end of the business.

The company’s offices are on the sixth floor of the Film Exchange building. Mr. Weiss announces that he has some original ideas which he hopes to incorporate into his business.

Since Mr. Weiss presented his resign-nation to First National there has been various conjectures as to his future affiliations. Rumors were current that he had become associated with this or that concern.

Open Air Show at Park

WILMINGTON, N. C.—An open air motion picture and vaudeville theatre is one of the new features at Lakeside Park this year. It is under the management of Roy F. Hanaford for Lakeside Amusement Company.

Strand to Celebrate Its Sixth Anniversary

The sixth anniversary of the Strand theatre in New York will be celebrated during the week commencing on April 11. An elaborate program is planned by Jack Eaton, managing director of this Mitchell H. Mark Realty Corporation playhouse.

Accomplishments of this theatre since it was opened in 1914, are given in the statistics which follow: Film totaling 1,093,000,000 feet has passed through the projection machines; Performances numbering 13,140 have been given; Paid admissions total 25,640,000, and Sixty-five per cent of the articles reported lost have been returned to their owners by the lost and found department, as have several thousand dollars in cash. The Strand was among the first picture theatres to install a concert orchestra and offer vocal and instrumental selections between subjects. This practice then spread throughout the country. The theatre’s concert orchestra at first contained only sixteen musicians, while today fifty men are in the musical organization.
SHOWMANSHIP

Showmanship, the science of properly and profitably selecting, exploiting and presenting motion picture entertainment, is the foundation of exhibitorial success. A clear understanding of the elements of which it is composed is invaluable to the man who is determined to develop his theatre to the highest point of productiveness.

Early in screen history the exhibitor came to realize in a measure the importance of carefully selecting his program. Yet for many years he was content to book "service," leaving the choice of subjects to the exchange man, who in turn assigned that duty to "the boys in the shipping room." Consequently upon the dissatisfaction that developed is the present exhibitorial stress upon program selection.

Advertising was first considered seriously at a much later date. It was believed sufficient to list the name of the theatre, the title of the subject and, somewhat later, the name of the star. It was not until the "novelty stage" had passed and the public had ceased to regard the motion picture as a curiosity that theatre men began to employ intelligent newspaper advertising to sell entertainment upon merit.

Intensive exploitation, with the exception of such simple devices as were borrowed from the so-called legitimate theatre, is of comparatively recent birth. Special presentation features, save for a few isolated instances, have been given thought by the general body of exhibitors only during the past year.

The science of showmanship is not yet a fixed quantity in exhibitorial minds. Since a full appreciation of its meaning and significance is essential to the commercially satisfactory conduct of the theatre time devoted to its study is time well spent.

Program selection, which is the first element of showmanship in chronological sequence, need be given little consideration here. It is not properly within the field of this department.

Advertising, of whatever nature, is the logical second step.

The simplest reasoning dictates that the well chosen screen attraction, the production that deserves the best that the exhibitor can give, is of little value unless the greatest possible number of patrons are brought into the theatre to witness its exhibition.

Custom Is Faulty

There is and always has been a tendency to regard this matter from the wrong angle, from the angle of expenditures made and a reasonable profit.

It is natural for man, in whatever business he engages, to map out for himself a "safe and sane" method of obtaining a standard percentage of profit. There are those who will maintain that this is good business. It may be that, but it is not showmanship.

Rain, epidemic, civic functions, accidents, a multitude of uncontrollable forces give to every theatre day and every theatre week the character of a venture. It is never possible, nor reasonable, to state positively, "Next week I shall sell so many tickets at such and such a figure and make this much money."

The genuine showman does not base his calculations upon such a premise.

Exploitation Is Essential

"I'm going to exploit every picture to the limit," he says, instead. "I'm going to play only such pictures as merit the best presentation that I can give them and will satisfy as many capacity audiences as I can bring to their showing.

Neither am I going to cut down on my advertising expense because it seems I can save a few dollars by doing. If I can save a few dollars by cutting down I can earn several dollars by increasing.

"I am going to make good the claims I make in my advertising. Simply because a picture is so good that it will please the public under whatever circumstance it is exhibited is no reason why I should economize on presentation and supplemental features. If the picture alone will please them, the picture aided by the best support that I can give it will please immensely more."

Such an exhibitor merits the name, showman.

He is more than a vendor of film fiction. He is a producer of theatre entertainment.

Covers Wide Field

He is the man that will be found in unlooked for places—in the streets, the stores, the clubs and the points where people gather—mingleing with those about him and spreading the doctrine of his theatre.

It is from men of this type that original ideas in advertising, exploitation, publicity and presentation are received. Such a man's success is not a matter of chance, it is a direct result of the working out of the law of cause and effect.

He picks his programs because of their entertainment value, because of their advertising possibilities, and because of the presentation features which they will accommodate.

He advertises his programs with the confidence that follows careful selection and the enthusiasm bred of a desire to have the world see the attractions which he exhibits.
When a picture is shown for three weeks at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, it is supported throughout the run by the best advertising the Grauman staff can contrive, which is among the best advertising of the American theatre. "Why Change Your Wife?" was given the campaign that is outlined in the accompanying reproductions greatly reduced.
Los Angeles Theatre Advertising Scores Heavily in Effectiveness

Los Angeles, Cal., a city the very mention of which suggests the motion picture, holds interest for the trade because of another reason quite as important in its way as the fact that it is the center of the industry on the West Coast. It is also the center of American theatre advertising, the city where this important branch of the theatre business has been developed to its highest efficiency. The pages of this department have been crowded from the time of its inauguration with illustrations and stories concerning the advertising from this city of progressive theatre men. Other cities have exhibitors whose genius in the composition of newspaper advertising is quite as marked as that of any Los Angeles manager. In other cities will be found presentation features, exploitation campaigns, etc., that rank as high in the general scale as do those that hail from Los Angeles. But no other city contributes these things as consistently, as regularly, as does the western film capital.

Sid Grauman may be depended upon to furnish each week something worthy of publication. If we were to print all of his advertisements that deserve public notice we would have space for little else, as he uses the newspaper as freely as though he owned it. His presentation features are no less worthy. They are invariably effective. They have always a characteristic touch. Grauman patrons expect them as much as they expect to be ushered to a seat when they come to the theatre. They are essentially effective.

From Los Angeles also comes with the regularity of Saturday night and Monday morning the striking advertisements used by the California theatre. They cannot all be reproduced. But their effectiveness is attested by the fact that the style persists and the size is undiminished despite paper shortages and similar circumstances that develop from time to time.

Los Angeles is also the home of the Tally theatres, institutions mentioned weekly in every conceivable connection throughout the trade. Where motion pictures and motion picture theatres are discussed, there will be heard mention of Tally's Broadway or Tally's Kinema.

Two recent photographs of these theatres are presented herewith. They show the crowds that attended the showings of "The Mystery of the Yellow Room" and "The River's End," Realart and First National productions respectively.

They are reproduced in connection with this article as a concrete illustration of the statement made in the title, that Los Angeles advertising is effective. Similar photographs, of these and other Los Angeles theatres, are among the common sights that greet the eyes of those who follow the trade press with proper regularity. Producers use them in their advertising to the exhibitor, knowing that the picture which goes well at the Tally houses will go well if properly exploited at other theatres, and knowing that the exhibitors who read their advertisements know that also.

There may be those who maintain that the public in Los Angeles is more keenly interested in the motion picture than the public in other sections of the country because of the intimate associations bred by the location of studios there. In this contention there may be a grain of truth, but there is certainly not sufficient weight to nullify the importance of Los Angeles advertising.

This intimate association may be in some measure responsible for the intensive drive that Los Angeles theatre men have made for the better things in advertising and theatre management. It can not be credited with having done more than this.

It is to the men that the credit must be given. And it is credit for a work that is of almost incalculable value to the whole of American theadredom.

Signs

Signs are serious matters. No good advertiser uses them carelessly. Film or glass screen announcements are the exhibitors' best signboards.

A prominent Chicago theatre, catering to better class patronage, is using three minutes of each performance to lecture his audience upon the surprising subject of love-making, "spooning," in the theatre.

It is difficult to conceive a better plan for losing the class of patronage to which the theatre believes it is appealing.
Hepp Takes Advantage Of National Holiday

Holidays have a peculiar way of creeping up on the busy world unnoticed. The exhibitor who is alert to the passing of time is frequently able to take advantage of the peculiar opportunities presented by each for novel exploitation or presentation. It pays to watch the calendar.

A. L. Hepp, manager of the Idylhour theatre, Greeley, Neb., was well aware of the approach of Washington’s Birthday. A man abreast of affairs, he was also thoroughly conversant with the aims and purposes of the committee recently formed to carry on Americanization work. He knew that Select exchanges were distributing “The Land of Opportunity,” the Ralph Ince production.

The photograph submitted by Mr. Hepp and reproduced herewith shows the interior of the Idylhour as it appeared while this program, with other suitable features, was being exhibited. Flags and bunting were used artistically and tastefully, carrying the necessary spirit without crowding the scene.

Appropriate advertising, all built upon the same foundation idea, brought crowds to the theatre. They felt the appeal of the picture, and the occasion, more strongly than they could have been made to do by any other means.

The effect that the Americanization committee has for its goal was gained more effectually by this plan than by any other that has come to attention.

Good work, from whatever angle it is considered.

City Street Is Field For Modern Advertiser

The streets of the modern city may be considered in all fairness the property of the exhibitor in so far as their use for exploitation is concerned. The sooner exhibitors fully realize the possibilities of this field the sooner will exhibitor advertising attain the high development which all are working for. Examples of street exploitation will encourage the practice as, therefore, worthy of more than passing notice.

When the Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn., used a series of striking advertisements recently we were glad to reproduce these with comment. We are glad now to be able to write the account of what is termed a “record-breaking” engagement of “Heart o’ the Hills.” Mary Pickford’s First National production.

Four lines of advance were followed in the exploitation of the picture. A splendid lobby display was made up of materials obtained from the film exchange. Heralds were used without stint, and a characteristic though unusually thorough newspaper campaign was conducted.

Effective street exploitation aided “Heart o’ the Hills” during its run at Knickerbocker theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

But the most important measure, the device that served as a climax to coordinate the other advertising mediums employed, consisted of a street enterprise. A donkey was obtained and suitably harnessed in tattered saddle and bridle. A girl was employed to ride the beast, wearing a counterpart of the costume worn by Mary Pickford in the play. A sign bore the essential data regarding the engagement and that information was spread broadcast by the rider.

The Idylhour theatre, Greeley, Neb., decorated fittingly for Washington’s Birthday, when “The Land of Opportunity” was shown.

Extensive Paper Campaign Draws For “Old Kentucky” at Victoria

Waking up staid old Philadelphia to a point where for two weeks straight its populace crowds a motion picture theater was a remarkable feat, yet Martin Wolf, manager of the Victoria did just that thing with billboard, newspaper advertising and a lobby display. The display is the thing which is credited with having accomplished the almost unprecedented record of the city of packed houses day after day. In spite of the fact that the Victoria had to contend with the stiffest sort of competition for each of the two weeks, the second being stronger than that of the first.

Wolf, in the past, has designed some wonderfully effective lobby displays, but on his most recent effort he outdid himself. Box office, entrance, doors, side walls were utilized so that when the display was complete the only familiar thing in sight was the large electric sign above the entrance.

Anita Stewart’s “In Old Kentucky” was the picture which inspired him to the exploitation which bids fair to stand for some time as a record in Philadelphia. Wolf saw the picture and intended it to run for a week, but after mapping out his exploitation campaign he decided that it was good enough to keep the house filled for two weeks, and subsequent developments proved him right.

For ten days prior to the opening scene the lobby was busy preparing the set pieces mapped out by the Victoria manager. These were ready Saturday evening preceding the opening and during the night they were installed. The day morning the theatre had been transformed in appearance to such an extent that it rivaled a first class race track scene for the interior of a theatre.

From a distance on either side of approach the passerby saw a file like recyclers every five minutes. Excitement finishing an exciting race, the two leading horses just passing the blackboard showing the betting odds. The Victoria lobby level is the steps above the sidewalk utilized the side space caused by the steps and the entrance level to erect two “Horse Boxes,” one on each side, neck and neck galloping horses, the jockeys of each crouching over the neck of their mount. The background for the cut-outs was furnished by a flat piece representing the back of a betting booth showing the board upon which the betting odds were marked.

It was not until a person got nearly in front of the theatre that the full effect and beauty of the transformation was realized. A person looking at it could easily forget that he was standing on a sloppy, snowy street in Philadelphia, swept by a cold breeze and imagine himself in the midst of a southern race track. Directly in the center of the scene was a ticket booth, on each side a row of gayly garbed women and fashionably dressed men. Above, a typical paddock fence, and the crush of humanity seemed to extend back an illimitable stretch. By the ticket booth the judge’s stand could be seen, already occupied by the figures of three men in earnest conference. The illusion was so complete that one found himself listening for the thudding of galloping hoofs.

Manager Wolf had accomplished the setting by comparatively simple means. The Victoria lobby has a width of five double glass doors, the box office standing directly behind the middle one. A fence of real wood was erected a few feet back of both of the double doors on each side of the centre one. A foot in back of the fence set pieces containing life size paintings of typical race track patrons were erected, extending the full width and height of the doors. The exterior of the box office was painted to represent a single board siding and the illusion was aided by two signs fastened on each side of the ticket window. One read “This Way to Paddock” and the other, “This Way to Grand Stand” with a pointing hand on each directing passage to either side of the box office.

Directly on top of the box office a set piece representing a judge’s stand, containing the figures of three men, also life-size, had been erected. In the front of this were the hooks for holding the cards of the winners of a race. Great attention had been given to details that the various set pieces would be true to the scenes of a race track which they represented. The whole assembly was so attractive that one’s steps naturally gravitated toward the box office.

The advertising of the feature was begun two weeks prior to the engagement. The preliminary announcements consisted in bills of the stocks and it was understood that Anita Stewart in “In Old Kentucky” would be the attraction at the Victoria and asking containing to keep the dates in mind. These notices were used in each of the morning and afternoon newspapers and in the Sunday papers, the day preceding the opening of the run he used advertisements three columns wide by 53 lines deep. Every available bill-board was covered and in this connection the total of paper used was 500 one sheets, 25 three sheets, 10 six sheets, 10 four sheets, 60 two sheets, 1,600 half sheets and 500 window cards, the majority of the last named being mounted in frames or used on the interior of stores and in the windows. He also used trailers in as many theatres as he could obtain.

The cost of such exploitation might deter other exhibitors from following suit except for the fact that Manager Wolf says that the lobby display was prepared for less than his original estimate, and that by the close of the first week the additional profits which had accrued paid all the extra expenses and left a balance which established a home record. According to this the only expenses of the second week was the house overhead, and the last performance filled the capacity of the house, as well as every showing of the picture which preceded it. Mr. Wolf declares that he is never fearful of the expense of exploitation, that he counts it as money which he has a chance to invest at a rate which will easily return 100 per cent interest.

Distribution

Distribution of heralds, house programs, and other theatre literature is an important matter. Upon effective distribution depends the value of this class of advertising.

A Zanesville, O., exhibitor distributed 10,000 heralds on “The Life Line” in grocery packages.

Chesapeake, W. Va., the manager of the Strand theatre obtained the co-operation of the laundries and got 4,000 “Everywoman” notices into Charleston homes.

In Louisville, Ky., an even better method was discovered. By enlisting the aid of a prominent bakery 20,000 heralds were put into residences and upon the kitchen table. Who has a better suggestion?
Kunsky Advertisements Convince Readers That Shows Have Merit

The newspaper advertisements used by John H. Kunsky's theatres, Detroit, Mich., three of which are reproduced herewith, constitute something more than good-looking, desirable newspaper representation for the houses. They are substantial selling arguments for the engagements which they advertise. Advertising can serve no better purpose.

The technique of the Kunsky advertising men is unique. In their work during the past year they have developed a style altogether individual. There is nothing that may be termed even similar in contemporary advertising. And there is good reason to believe that there is nothing that may be unhistorically pronounced superior.

There are other advertisers whose work is as striking. There are a few whose individuality is of totally unrelated character and there is no reliable method for determining which is the better.

It is sufficient to say, however, that the Kunsky advertising is of such quality that those engaged in its preparation need not be deeply concerned regarding the work of others in the same line of endeavor.

With the advent of Louis K. Sidney in Detroit as the manager of the Washington theatre, one of the William Fox chain, interesting speculation arises as to the contest for supremacy of the amusement page which may be expected to develop. Mr. Sidney has a style no less individual. It is a style that has been tried out in practice, its use in connection with the six theatres which Mr. Sidney formerly managed in St. Louis having attracted favorable attention from advertising men throughout the country.

Time will tell this story, however, and the time will be well spent by exhibitors who watch the developing conflict closely.

Unusual depth in a skillfully constructed upright from John H. Kunsky's Adams theatre, Detroit, Mich.

For the present it is well to turn attention to the excellent advertisements recently used by the Adams theatre for "The River's End" and "In Search of a Sinner," both First National productions.

It is difficult to say which has been given the better treatment. Larger space was devoted to the campaign for "The River's End" for obvious reasons. Marshall Nellan's first independent production for First National distribution, it was worthy of an extensive campaign to test its power as entertainment and to give an insight into the future as regards future Nellan productions.

"In Search of a Sinner," in which Constance Talmadge is featured, had an excellent chance of drawing capacity with less spectacular exploitation. Her past productions have been successful throughout the country. Her name is accepted by the public as almost a guarantee of satisfaction.

Yet the advertisement which is reproduced herewith is one of the best that has come from the Kunsky organization in some time. In it copy and illustrations are connected so intimately as to present a unified appeal. There can be no denial of its efficacy as a business gadget.

The "River's End" advertisements depend more upon the pictorial aspect, the copy, necessarily less pointed, serving to amplify the impression given by the illustrations.

The striking feature of the three advertisements is their fitness for the business of selling motion picture entertainment.

The appeal for attendance, in the case of the resident of Detroit, is first registered when the eye lights upon the name of the theatre at the top of the display. Instantly is set up a recollection of a previous visit to that theatre or, if no such visit has been made, of conversation with friends having to do with the theatre or some picture that has been exhibited there.

The natural thought is, then, "Should I go to this one?"

A prompt answer in the affirmative is made by the general appearance of the advertisement as a whole, for in its graceful lines and attractive finish is pictorial promise of pleasant entertainment.

Advertisements that make such answer would be efficacious if employed in behalf of attractions of inferior quality. When used for the best attractions that can be obtained, and the Kunsky organization makes a point of exhibiting only the best, they have a purpose worthy of their quality.
EXHIBITORS HERALD
April 10, 1920

Koch Special Section
Estabishes High Mark

Comparisons between the methods of the big city and the small town exhibitor are always interesting, whether or not definite conclusions are reached. It is interesting to speculate, as the following is read, what proportions a big city exploitation campaign would assume were it to correspond with this enterprise in a town of 2,500 population.

The Novelty theatre, Anthony, Kan., under the direction of Mrs. B. Koch & Son, published a seven-page special section for “Everywoman,” an enterprise unique in the history of Anthony and other cities of like size.

Furthermore, and as worthy of comment, the advertisements making up this special section were good advertisements—not the thrown-together make-shifts which it is commonly believed typifies the small town newspaper printer.

A double page spread from the section is reproduced herewith to testify to the quality of the work in general.

Personal Note Strong In Randolph Creation

Personal appeal is at the root of all advertising. Response to an advertisement is dependent to a greater extent than is at first imagined on the degree of development of this salient part of exploitation. While this reference may seem only too obvious, a person has but to scrutinize a page of advertisements to learn that this principle of attracting and holding attention either has been handled in a slipshod manner or has been overlooked in its entirety.

The accompanying illustration, which was used by the management of the Randolph theatre in Chicago for the initial presentation of “Huckleberry Finn,” brings out to a marked degree what can be accomplished along the line of personal appeal.

Taking cognizance of the fact that the picture would be of equal interest to young and old, the advertiser has so constructed his material as to demand a reading by both. To do this, he has incorporated in the advertisement the spirit of the story itself, a story that has been universally accepted since Mark Twain wrote it. The advertiser has let “Huck” himself do the talking, so to speak. The letter, supposedly written by “Huck,” bas the power in its crudity to demand a reading.

Mrs. Koch’s comment upon the occasion: “We have gotten a mention of the title ‘Everywoman,’ sixty times in this edition,” she says. “I found that the merchant expressed a higher rate when the proposition was put up to them. In fact, I could have made money by buying the space and selling it at a higher rate. In addition, we are mailing a thousand circulars and have four very pretty window displays. We are sure we are going to do a tremendous business, for nothing we have done has created as much talk as this section.”

A Good Point

When the manager of the Yale theatre, Cleveland, O., received the cut of Charlie Chaplin with which he intended to make up the cover of his weekly program for a certain week he found it entirely too small for the purpose.

He conferred with the printer.

The folder was printed that week in about reduced size—a size that fits nicely into the vest pocket or the hand purse.

The janitor mentioned to Mr. Kramer, the manager, during the week that he had never practically any programs out of the auditorium or lobby.

The size has become standard at the Yale.

It goes home with patrons.

Publishers Report Tie-Up Has Boosted Novel Sales

In developing the tie-up with “The Mystery of the Yellow Room,” an Emilie Chautard production presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, Grosset and Dunlap, publishers, at 1140 Broadway, New York, prepared attractive cards to be sent to book dealers in cities where the picture showed.

Realart Pictures Corporation provided an advance list of bookings, and as a result the publishers report that the tie-up had boosted materially the sales of the novel.

As Fruit of Close Cooperation

A year ago a page advertisement for the opening of a serial at a theatre would have been considered phenomenal. Today it attracts little attention. It has attained its place in the established order of things. And its presence in that place is seen by many as an important indication of the unquestioned development of co-operation between exhibitor and exchange.

Even at this time, with the great strides forward that have been taken in the past year, few exhibitors have reached the stage where they see fit to use an entire page for a single attraction, a single program element.

Yet page advertisements for serials come in with every mail. Comment upon receipt of a package containing such a page has changed from "Well, what do you think of that?" to "Here's another serial splash." The comment should not be construed, however, to indicate lack of interest. In the very number of them that come to hand lies the greatest claim to interest.

If theatres throughout the country are using these pages, theatres in big cities and in little towns, there must be an important interest in them, and one reason only presents itself.

Exchange men and exhibitors are cooperating in this work. The exchange man has dropped his old attitude. No longer does he sell the exhibitor the serial and then leave him to his own devices, believing himself secure in the knowledge that the exhibitor’s check has squared the account and made the proper impression when received at the home office.

He has adopted another attitude, a much more business-like position, and works upon the realization that not many weeks will elapse before he has another serial to offer the exhibitor and the exhibitor will not be in a position to buy it unless the present one pays its way and leaves a comfortable margin of profit.

Accordingly he gets down to shirt-sleeves methods and goes into the business of marketing that serial for his customer with interest and enthusiasm. The result is usually a page spread, sometimes a double page, and always an opening campaign that leaves the business of making the run profitable wholly up to the serial itself and the manner in which the exhibitor presents it.

The serial is an important department of the film man’s occupation. To provide suitable serials for the public is as essential as to provide suitable feature productions. There is an element that judges the serial as critically, an element that will not attend the theatre that does not exhibit a chapter play.

To serve the public with entertainment is the film man’s business as truly as it is the business of exhibitor.

With the two of them hand in hand in their efforts to serve, and hand in hand in their efforts to bring the public to the theatre, department is well taken care of. If the exhibitor follows through by presenting the serial as advantageously as it is within his power to do, and the film man follows through by producing the best serials possible, that portion of the public which supports the serial is well served.

Eye-Getters

Frank Hammond, publicity director for the S. A. Lynch theatres, Atlantic, Ga., engaged young ladies with trim ankles to appear in shoe store windows during the run of “Mary’s Ankles,” starring Douglas MacLean and Doris May, at the Kialto.

The stunt brought business—to the store as well as to the theatre.

My Lady’s Garder” is a current Paramount Aircraft publication. “The Garder Girl” has been announced by Vitagraph.

Nazimova feature, “Stronger Than Death,” for a solid week and put it on with most artistic presentation prologue.

The introduction started with an overture, “The Egyptian Ballet.” As the music drew to the end, the curtains parted, disclosing a temple scene with rows of large marble pillars and steps leading down. At either side of the entrance glowed incense burners, with the smoking incense throwing perfume over the entire house.

On the steps of the temple was posed a dancer, draped in veils with glittering headband and ornaments. As the spotlight enveloped her in light, she came down the steps and danced the Temple Dance, a beautiful interpretation of the dance of love which Nazimova in the picture dances to attract the man she loves. Most artistic was the gracefully moving and posing figure against the background of the temple, surrounded by the perfume of incense and with colored lights changing the color of her flowing, diaphanous draperies.

The dance completed, once again the dancer stood posed on the temple steps, and immediately the picture was flashed upon the screen, showing a street scene in India.

A special orchestration was also prepared to help create the proper atmosphere for this picture laid in India.

The presentation was planned and executed by Sara Maxon, exploitation director for Willis & Eckels. Devi Dassi, a pupil of Ruth St. Denis, interpreted the Temple Dance.

Logan Square Prologue
Artistically Presented

Presentation, the science of properly preparing an audience for feature entertainment, has not been given the attention in Chicago that might be expected in a city of its size. The houses where efforts of this sort are made can be numbered upon the fingers of one hand.

But there is reason to believe that a start, though belated, has been made toward the proper development of this phase of exhibitorship. The Logan Square, a neighborhood house, is the latest to enter the field.

The Astor diners are making a strenuous kick against the “three a day” overhead charges in the cloak-room. The contention being that if a hat costs four dollars new, the cover charge at the Astor makes the sky-piece cost about sixty cents a day for operating expenses. The film people eat lunch, dinner and after theatre supper at this hotel and they figure that the standard tip of 20 cents per call which runs into $18 per month is enough to make a fellow go bare-headed as well as red-headed.

Acceptances of invitations to attend the M. P. D. A. Ball at the Biltmore, April 10th, indicates that there will be a grand array of motion picture celebrities, as well as a large representation of producers and their staffs. In addition to the elaborate supper which has already been planned, the entertainment committee intends to have the most unique performance that has ever been offered for an affair of this kind. Considerable enthusiasm is being manifested in motion picture circles in anticipation of the function.

It was predicted when Goldwyn signed Hugh Thompson for three pictures, the first with Mabel Normand in “The Slim Princess,” that he would become a coast fixture. Such would seem to be the case. Before the completion of the first picture, Mr. Thompson was informed that he would remain for a second. Between productions he was extended a two weeks’ vacation, the first leisure he has enjoyed in many months. Several flattering offers are said to have been made Mr. Thompson since his arrival, to remain on the coast indefinitely, which will be under consideration at the termination of his contract with Goldwyn.

Dad” Humphrey Dies
At Fort Wayne, Ind.

J. A. Humphrey, whose congenial disposition and altruistic proclivities won for him the familiar sobriquet of “Dad,” died on March 24, at Fort Wayne, Ind., following a nervous break-down which developed into influenza.

“Dad,” who was loved by all those in the trade who came in contact with him, covered Indiana for Vitagraph. He was one of the best known film salesmen in this territory.

Spiegel Gets Franchise
For National Theatres
In His N. J. Territory

According to Lewis J. Selznick, President of National Picture Theatres, Inc., Max Spiegel, manager and proprietor of the Newark theatre in Newark, N. J., has obtained the first-run National Picture Theatres franchise for his territory.

The Newark first-run account is considered by Mr. Selznick to be one of the most important in New Jersey, and the endorsement of National Pictures by this theatre is said to be of far reaching significance.

“Illiterate Digest” Ready for Screening

The first issue of Will Rogers’ “The Illiterate Digest,” it is announced by Joe Brandt, Eastern representative for the Marion H. Kohn Production, is now ready for publication.

“I have been questioned by a large number of exhibitors regarding the marketing of this feature” said Mr. Brandt, “but I intend to stick to my original plan of state-righting it. Will Rogers’ popularity will serve to introduce it properly and his wit and humorous antics before the camera will firmly establish it.”

Pride of screen is a priceless exhibitorial possession. Exhibitors who have it are separated from those who do not by a gulf as wide as that which divides success and failure.

In the lobby of the exhibitor who selects his attraction with the care that can come only from a feeling of pride in his screen material will be found ample evidence of his fitness for the position he holds in the community as provider of community entertainment.

There will be artistic representation of current and coming attractions. There will be cleanliness, order, sympathetic atmosphere.

In the auditorium will be found comfortable seating arrangements, swiftness and precision in the disposition of attendance, appropriate decoration, suitable presentation, the multitudinous details that make up good exhibition.

In the lobby and auditorium of that other exhibitor, the one who buys his pictures by the price tag only, who permits to appear upon his screen the cheapest and most easily obtainable productions, will be found other evidence equally eloquent.

Pride of screen is priceless. It is the foundation upon which is based all that is good in showmanship.

"THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOL." (Universal-Jewel) establishes permanently Priscilla Dunn’s right to stardom. A splendid production from whatever angle considered, a box office power and a fine piece of entertainment, its history should be an enviable one. A detailed review will be found upon a preceding page.

"THE FAMILY HONOR" (First National) is another of King Vidor’s intensely human adaptations of a theme that is different. Taking a story of Dixie, the young producer has surrounded it with realistic atmosphere and has given to it the punch that will sustain interest.

"MY LADY’S GARTER" (Paramount Artcraft) has been listed as a Maurice Tourneur production. In it Wyndham Standing, Sylvia Breamer, Holmes E. Herbert and Charles Craig lend the producer material aid in well drawn characterizations. It is a mystery story of more than usual interest.

"A CHILD FOR SALE" (Graphic) deals interestingly with the profiteer problem, the "rent hog" being especially considered. The subject is timely. The picture is well produced. Gladys Leslie and Creighton Hale are the leading players.

"THE INFERIOR SEX." (First National) marks Mildred Harris Chaplin’s debut as a First National star. It is an intelligently narrated story based upon the question suggested in the title, a well made, attractive screen product which should succeed universally.

"EASY TO GET" (Paramount Artcraft) surpasses the great majority of Marguerite Clark’s latter-day vehicles. A honeymoon comedy, it is unfolded smoothly, rapidly and with good effect. Harrison Ford contributes valuable support.

"THE BRAND OF LOPEZ" (Robertson-Cole) reveals Sessue Hayakawa as a Spanish matador, a role which he essays without the aid of make-up. Florence Turner, remembered by all, gives important aid as the feminine lead.

"BLACK SHADOWS" (Fox) has an interesting angle in the introduction of the hypnotic element to create the action of the picture. The subject offers pleasing diversion with Peggy Hyland as the starring player. She is supported by a good cast.

"YOUTHFUL FOLLIES" (Selznick) will greatly increase Olive Thomas’ fan following. It is without question the most satisfying production of her career, a story that all may enjoy both in its humorous and dramatic sequences.

"IN SEARCH OF A SINNERS" (First National) combines the art of Constance Talmadge with the skill of Anita Loos and John Emerson in a farce comedy that will be favorably compared with any previous vehicle of the star—which is high praise indeed.

"HUCKLEBERRY FINN" (Paramount Artcraft) needs but little comment. Everybody who has read the book, which is practically everybody, wants to see it. The exhibitor who can play it is assured of big business and grateful patronage. William D. Taylor scored a distinct achievement in its making.

"THE INNER VOICE" (American Cinema) will doubtless be pronounced the best of E. K. Lincoln’s productions. A story of the West, of mountains and cities, and the men who dwell therein, it provides ample opportunity for the display of the star’s versatility.

"THE FLAMING CLUE" (Vitagraph) is the lively portrayal of the activities of the government secret service agents in apprehending a band of counterfeiters. Harry Morey as the federal agent presents a worthwhile characterization, and the picture as a whole should please.

"THE WOMAN IN GREY" (Serico) adds another good serial to the list of continued subjects now on the market. The further the story develops the greater becomes the mystery and the more strenuous the action. Arline Pretty and Henry G. Sell carry the titular roles capably.
Constance Talmadge in
IN SEARCH OF A SINNER
Five-part comedy; First National. Directed by David Kirkland. Published in March.
OPINION: Exhibitors reporting on Constance Talmadge productions which have just played their theatres have established a custom of buying, "Constance Talmadge" stock. It is pointed out that the product is doubtless the best single sentence that can be used in describing "In Search of a Sinner." The John Emerson-Anita Loos combination began the good work by preparing a story rich in possibilities for the Constance Talmadge genius. Selma is a star and story found better suited, each to the other, than in the present instance. Again it is the lighter fare that engages the undeniably popular star. Again the line separating the humorous from the risque is approached, but not crossed. Probably no other star in pictures could have made of the story the wholesomeness daring, the entertainingly frank and satirically pertinent amusement that it is.
Exhibitors owe producers of this type of picture a genuine debt. It is a type that acts as a tonic for their theatres. It is the best variation that can be given the program. It stimulates interest in motion pictures generally, and anything that performs that service is of intrinsic value.
"A Temperamental Wife" convinced exhibitors that the first National attractions of the star would be worthy of close inspection. "A Virtuous Vamp" was popularly regarded as superior to the first. "Two Weeks" was reissued as standard. "In Search of a Sinner" should prove still another stimulant to the star's popularity.
SYNOPSIS: Glorianna Chadbourne, whose life as the wife of a "good man" is happily closed with his death, returns to New York after the conventional year of mourning determined to find a sinner for her next husband. In the park she meets Jack Garrison, who flirts with her, meets her in the Casino, declares she is the girl of his dreams, rescues her from arrest for picking flowers in the park and insures her escape. Returning to the home of her brother-in-law, Jefry, she learns that the man she loves is a life-long friend of his and another "good man." When Jeffy and his wife are quarantined in his mother's home, Glorianna begins a campaign to "vamp" Jack, posing as Jeffy's wife. The complications that ensue are too intricate to be coherently detailed in synopsis form and the ending must be seen to be appreciated.
Marguerite Clark in EASY TO GET
Five-part comedy; Paramount Arcaft. Directed by Walter Edwards. Published in March.
OPINION: The exhibitor whose experience with the majority of the latter-day Marguerite Clark productions has been such as to breed doubt as to the advisability of endorsing without reserve her present production should meet the situation with confidence that "Easy to Get" is worthy of advertising. Marguerite Clark admirers will pronounce it one of her best vehicles. In it she has the advantage of Harrison Ford's support, and Harrison Ford is a young man whose name has taken on considerable fan importance during the past year.
She also has the advantage of a honey-moon story, a light affair with interesting angles, that occupies her screen time with the doing of the sort of thing that she can do best, the sort of thing that made her early popularity. Engaging subtitles keep the mind of the observer in tune with the spirit of the play. They help materially in giving the semblance of logic where logic is not—an important function in the lighter form of comedy.
"Easy to Get" is a title that can be moulded to the purpose of the advertiser. Its possible constructions are many. It may be used with authority, by the way, as the story centers about that phrase, uttered by a bridegroom on the night of his marriage and overheard by the bride.
SYNOPSIS: Millie and Bob Morehouse board the train for their honey-moon immediately after the wedding ceremony. The old friend is an old friend in the smoker. The old friend makes certain well-meant but poorly timed remarks anent Bob's early successes with the fair sex, said remarks being overheard by the bride, who promptly drops off the train at a country cross roads and makes and takes among divers adventures to a nearby summer resort. Bob follows frantically, experiencing numerous adventures of his own. A happy ending is worked out in due time.
Olive Thomas in YOUTHFUL FOLLY
Five-part comedy-drama; Selznick. Directed by Alan Crosland. Published in March.
OPINION: Olive Thomas has never made a grander or more fitting vehicle as "Youthful Folly." It is as far superior to her "The Spite Bride" and "The Glorious lady" as these were to her earlier vehicles. Selznick productions, always high class, is at its best. The exteriors showing the southern home of the leading character are among the best ever chosen to represent this locality. The interiors are no less fitting.
Craufurd Kent as leading man makes much of a difficult role. His support of the star in a sharply contrasted character is one of the picture's assets.
Hugh Huntley is also well cast, capable acquitting himself in a trying situation near the close of the picture, a situation that would have tried the mettle of a lesser and better known player.
The story is a curious mixture of comedy and drama, the mixing process having been so skillfully conducted as to carry interest through to end without apparent effort. It is an unusual plot, developed in unusual manner, having a freshness possessed by few present-day offerings.
Exhibitors can exploit the attraction with every confidence that it will meet with the approbation of the public.
SYNOPSIS: Nancy, a daughter of the South, is visited by her cousin, Lola, and a distant relative, David, New Orleans southern folk who have attracted some notoriety by reason of the uncouthly affection. David proposes to Nancy and marries her, his purpose being to cloak his affair with Lola. For a time the plan succeeds. Then Jimsey, ward of David, returns from college and falls in love with Nancy. The two young men enjoy each other's society and David realizes, when he believes that he has lost her love, that he loves Nancy. When he confesses the motive that prompted him to marriage and announces his intention of going away so that she may obtain a divorce and marry Jimsey, Nancy tells him that her love is for him. She is wounded when Lola's husband attempts to shoot David, but with her recovery comes the happy ending.
E. K. Lincoln in
THE INNER VOICE
Six-part drama; American Cinema Corp. Published in March.
OPINION: "The Inner Voice," it is reasonable to believe, will be popularly pronounced the best picture in which E. K. Lincoln has starred. He is wide range to his acting ability, providing ample opportunity for the display of the versatility which is one of his strongest assets.
The settings are lavish and the exteriors have been chosen with care. Photography of the best, bringing to the screen eminently satisfying backgrounds for the action. And especial mention should be given the work of the technical staff. It is a job of very fine work by a staff that knows what it is about.
Too much credit cannot be given to E. K. Lincoln for his acting and the realism which he gives to the character of Mark Reid. It is the fiction character, not the actor, that impresses while the play is in progress, a circumstance encountered all too rarely in general production. And it is the actor whose name remains in the memory after the picture is over, also as it should be but seldom is.

Alice Ayres makes of Barbara a believable, logical character. Her performance will doubtless remain in the memories of the multitude alongside that of the star after the picture has passed into the library of film literature.

SYNOPSIS: Mark Reid, prospector, discovers a rich claim in California. He also makes the acquaintance of "The Good Samaritan," an old man who lives nearby, whose counsel he follows. Mike O'Hara, bad man, jumps Reid's claim. They fight it out, man to man, until Reid is about to murder O'Hara, when the old man intervenes and the struggling men bury their grievances in a partnership. Morrison, a man of wealth, comes to buy the claim. Reid falls in love with Barbara, his daughter, and the affection is returned. Morrison then fleeces Reid, separates him and Barbara by guile, and Reid takes the downward path. A fight in the slums of San Francisco results in Reid's rescue of Barbara and his return to the mountains, where O'Hara, who has found a new claim, makes him his partner. Years pass and Reid, as King, becomes a power in the market. When circumstances place Morrison in his power he heeds the teachings of the old man of the mountains and forgives past wrongs, marrying Barbara for the happy ending.

William D. Taylor's

HUCKLEBERRY FINN

Five-part comedy-drama; Paramount Artcraft.
Directed by William D. Taylor.
Published in March.

OPINION: There are so many good reasons why the exhibitor should play "Huckleberry Finn" that a detailed review of the picture seems almost unnecessary. It is one of the few productions that may be booked without a qualm as to its fate when submitted to the approval of your audience.

At a Sunday showing the Randolph theatre, Chicago, was filled to capacity during dinner hour, lines extending to the sidewalk line in the Randolph and State street lobbies.

Within the theatre were gathered such an assemblage as had probably never before witnessed a presentation in that playhouse. Fathers, mothers, sisters, brothers, apparently whoever could make the journey, had brought the little folks. And the fathers, mothers, sisters or brothers were not less enthusiastic about the adventures of Mark Twain's famous boy character than were the youngsters whose reading of the book had resulted in the attendance.

But not all members of the audience were there because of young people in the family whose insistence would not be denied. Many there were who had come to renew boyhood acquaintances with the unforgettable Huck.

The cast, for the most part, is made up of players whose names are readily associated with their faces by the casual theatre fan. Many of them are total strangers to the screen, but every one is the logical choice for the role assigned him and his work satisfies.

William D. Taylor has produced the journey down the Mississippi in excellent manner. It was not an easy thing to produce. The atmosphere of that period is easily realistic to an audience of today. That Mr. Taylor has done this to the eminent satisfaction of what may be termed the representative gathering at the Randolph is to his credit.

"Huckleberry Finn" was given its first showings in the smaller cities in the community where the action was laid. In these instances numerous effective exploitation devices were evolved and duly chronicled in this publication. Exhibitors will find the picture rich in possibilities of this nature.

It should be as completely successful at the box office as it is upon the screen.
Mildred Harris Chaplin in THE INFERIOR SEX

Five-part drama; First National.
Directed by Joseph W. Henaberry.
Published in April.

OPINION: "The Inferior Sex," as the title suggests, deals with the ever pertinent question as to which is the stronger and which the weaker of the sexes. Those responsible for the production have earned the gratitude of exhibitor and public alike in dealing with the question sanely, cleanly and intelligently.

In many hands the story would have been given a suggestive twist to incorporate sensationalism, the supposed market value of that sort of thing overcoming the weaker judgment. No such has been given, and the picture tells a wholly presentable story in direct, logical continuity.

The point brought out is the point that must always be established in an intelligent digest of the question. The essence of the sexes is of equal strength, the sole difference lying in the field of their endeavors, is made clear in this instance entirely by means of Milton Sills, most believable of screen husbands, Mary Aiden, remembered for her role with Griffith productions, and John Stepping, lend capable aid to the star. The work of this quartette carries the story and it gains strength by reason of their sympathetic delineation of the various characters.

The action is laid in society circles and splendid settings have been provided, giving realism where realism is not always easily attained. Photography is of the best, making the time spent in viewing the production as pleasant physically as mentally.

The title alone should prove ample material for exploitation. With no other material at hand the enterprising advertiser could construct a campaign that would bring big business. With the other material available the box office success of the engagement should be almost a matter of course.

SYNOPSIS: Mrs. Randall believes that her husband, Bruce Randall, a business man, is tiring of her because he devotes so much of his time to business. George Kenneth, husband of Brucie Randall then, in an attempt to gain information regarding an oil merger which Knox is engineering, makes the mistake of confiding details of the closing date to his wife. Peter Maddox, a society man who lives by his wits, persuades Mrs. Kennedy to elope with Mr. Knox, his real purpose being to obtain the information referred to. Mrs. Randall follows them to a hotel and is surprised by the arrival of George Kenneth and Kennedy. Quick-wittedly letting her husband know the truth of the situation, concealing her sister's part in it from her husband, the manages to bring about a satisfactory conclusion, proving, incidentally, that there is no inferior sex.

Harry T. Morey in THE FLAMING CLUE

Five-part drama; Vitagraph.
Directed by Edwin L. Hollywood.
Published in April.

OPINION: Frederic Van Rensselaer Dey, famed for his "Nick Carter" tales, which have been read diligently by multitudes of boys, has given to the screen one of his typical stories of mystery and action, without, however, introducing the character for which he is best known. Because of this latter fact, though, the picture is none the less interesting.

The workings of the government's secret service agents in combating and finally apprehending counterfeiters makes attractive pictorial diversion. Close attention to the details of detection adds to the effectiveness of the presentation. Spontaneity is given to the action and a person's inquisitiveness is retained by efficient assembling in co-ordination with well-handled continuity.

It is a well thought out detective story, as might be expected from the pen of Mr. Dey. Dealing as it does with a national subject, it should offer to the exhibitor ample opportunity for exploitation.

Lending his activities to the success of the picture is Harry Morey, the secret service agent, who exerts himself in making the scenes move along in swift order. He is ably assisted by Lucy Fox, Sidney Dalbrook, Eleanor Barry, Jack McLean, Frank Evans, R. E. Milash, Robert Gaillard and Bernard Siegel.

SYNOPSIS: Ralph Cornell is assigned as the secret service agent to apprehend a band of counterfeiters. Discovering the house in which the spurious money is made, he represents himself as a professor and is given board and room at the place on the strength of a fake letter. He falls in love with Besse Quail, daughter of the landlady, and though unintentional it aids him in his work. Aaron Prime, leader of the counterfeities, surmises that Cornell is a detective. He lays many traps for him, into a few of which Cornell walks. Cornell, however, warns Besse Quail and her when Prime wrongly informs them that Cornell is a detective seeking to place Jimmie Quail behind prison bars. Cornell returns to the house after it is thought Prime has been killed as the later's brother. Quick action follows in apprehending the counterfeiters, and Cornell is received whole-heartedly by Mrs. Quail and Besse, who were ignorant of the crime being committed in their home.

Sessue Hayakawa in THE BRAND OF LOPEZ

Five-part drama; Robertson-Cole.
Directed by Joseph DeGrasse.
Published in April.

OPINION: There is a place for production, like "The Brand of Lopez," where the sensational melodramatic type of fiction that keeps interest alive by jumping from climax to climax, that tells its story in the sort of punches that serial audiences delight in, the picture should be well received.

The audience that gives thought to careful development of plot, plausibility of motivation, characterization, etc.,., will find points upon which to hang criticism. Sessue Hayakawa acts a part; the director is not impressive. He doesn't look Spanish, and after the first few scenes he makes no attempt to act Spanish.

To others it may seem queer production management to fail to introduce either a bull fight or theatre scene when some of the characters are a matador and an actress.

Still others may find it somewhat difficult to jump from the police cap to the murderer to his leadership of an outlaw band in the mountains without mention of his escape.

Details are frequently clouded. Connections are not always clearly established. It is as though much footage was lost. The most striking portions are eliminated to get within the regular reel length, the aim being to create a feature that would leave beholders breathless.

Exhibitors should prepare presentation features with these facts in mind. The picture is less a narrative than a continuous series of thrills. It should be presented broken, accompanied by crashing, dramatic strains.

Mention of the fact that Florence Turner, whose Vitagraph record is remembered by many, plays the leading feminine role, may be made advantageously.

SYNOPSIS: Vasco Lopez, matador, is the idol of Spain. His engagement to Lola Castillio, actress, leads to complications when another man brings her home from the theatre. Lopez, in his anger, branding her with a cigarette burn and later stabbing her escort, he escapes to the mountains becomes leader of a band of briganda. She obtains a divorce and marries Captain Alvarez, whom Lopez stabbed. Lopez, seeking vengeance, sends his men to kidnap Lola, but they bring her little sister instead and Lopez ravishes her. She returns to the town and dies a year later, leaving a baby which is exchanged for a child of Lola's that dies at birth. When the child is four or five years of age Lopez returns to their home, the supposed father and the child prisoner, and orders them shot, locking himself in a room with Lola. He thinks the child is his own, as police surround the villa, and sacrifices his life in saving his son.

Appraises Value of Film

An "appraising reviewer," who will judge the quality of a picture and appraise its value to the exhibitor and at the same time designate its popular appeal to the public. The recent acquisition to C. B. Price Company, Inc. Mr. Price, who refuses at present to announce the name of the person filling the position, says that results have been very satisfactory.

A Tourneur cast in
MY LADY'S GARTER

Five-part drama; Paramount Artcraft.
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
Published in March.

OPINION: Wyndham Standing, Sylvia Breamer, Holmes E. Herbert and Charles Craig are the capable members of the cast which Maurice Tourneur has chosen for his production of Jacques Futrelle's crook story, experienced players all. They make entertaining a story that might not have fared so well in less practiced hands.

Maurice Tourneur, whose past productions have resulted in the placing of his name in the list of great producers, has made better pictures than "My Lady's Garter." Were it not for his name and standing it is doubtful if the production would be considered as of more than ordinary importance.

Because it bears his name, however, and because exhibitors have been taught to look for something extraordinary in his productions, it will doubtless receive from theatre men less laudatory comment than it deserves.

It really is a capital mystery story, potent and smoothly narrated. It is nicely photographed. The settings are adequate. The suspense is well maintained and there is reasonable doubt as to the conclusion up to the moment that it is revealed.

It may not be of the caliber that justifies the high admission prices and lavish exploitation, but it will hold its own with the standard Paramount Artcraft product.

SYNOPSIS: A jaded garter which has interesting history disappears under mysterious circumstances. "The Hawk," a criminal who has never been apprehended, though he obligingly leaves many clues for the police to follow, is suspected. Helen Hamilton, daughter of an American millionaire, is accused of possessing it. She is found swimming in the sea, being rescued by a strange gentleman in a yacht who gives her the name of Bruce Calhoun. British detectives suspect him of the robbery and watch him closely. He goes to Helen's home and becomes acquainted with her family, including her brother, each of mysterious actions give rise to doubts in the minds of all—Helen, who loves him. Not even to her, however, will he admit his part in the mysterious proceedings which are occurring continuously, until, by a master stroke, he catches the criminal, a rival for Helen's affections and then proves himself to be an American Secret Service man and worthy of her love.

Gladys Leslie in
A CHILD FOR SALE

Six-part drama; Graphic Film Corp.
Directed by Ivan Abramson.
Published in March.

OPINION: Ivan Abramson has contributed a very interesting and well-made production to the independent field in "A Child for Sale." Dealing with the subject of profiteering, a timely one, he has shown one of the principle causes for the unrest prevalent throughout the country.

Showing how the greed of a rich man who attempts to profit at the expense of his poor tenants creates conditions that cause the poor to offer their children for sale, Mr. Abramson tells a story that is convincing and sure to hold interest.

Locations embrace the tenements of New York, scenes which give realism to the production.

The cast, which includes Anna Lehr, Creighton Hale, Julia Swayne Gordon, Bobby Connelly and others whose names are familiar to screen audiences everywhere, is well balanced and effective.

SYNOPSIS: Charles Stoddard, a struggling artist, is left by the death of his wife with a boy and a girl whom he can ill support. As the only solution of his problems that presents itself he sells the little girl to a rich lady, later buying her back at the tearful entreaty of the boy, her brother. William Harrison, founder of an institution for boys and also the rent profiteer who has been responsible for the sale of the child, finds the little boy singing on the street and has him sent to the institution. His father follows and brings the boy back home, incidentally making the acquaintance of Dr. Gardner, son-in-law of William Harrison, who becomes his friend. When the boy is stricken on New Year's Eve Stoddard calls for Dr. Gardner. The physician takes the boy to his home, where it is discovered that Stoddard is the son of Mrs. Harrison by a former marriage. Harrison is brought to a realization of his shortcomings and promises to do better, whereupon the happy ending takes place.

King W. Vidor presents
THE FAMILY HONOR

Five-part drama; First National.
Directed by King W. Vidor.
Published in April.

OPINION: Fine discrimination in the selection of cast and locations, skillful directing, good continuity, assembling and impressive acting combine with a story abounding in the melodramatic and heart interest to make this a genuinely worthwhile picture and one that should please the majority.

Every angle of the production has been given the close attention of the young producer-director, whose recent endeavors place him in the front ranks of those who are giving to the screen a better class of photodrama by seeking to eliminate the tawdry and cheapening elements. The results accomplished here show sincerity in development.

Every phase of the picture is clothed in realism. Without dwelling too strongly upon the melodramatic in order to put the ideas across, the director has retained in the action the power to grip an audience. The same is true of the action in that part of the picture which depicts a lighter vein of life.

The story adapted is one of the common people in a little town in Dixie. The astute Southern politician, the proud Southern family in financial straits, a gambling den and other parts of the story are vividly drawn. A tangled and incoherent plot is not presented, but in its stead is the narrative form of story telling, the scenes portraying the lives of the characters in every day existence.

The histrionic aspect stands out prominently in the picture. The three principal characters are handled proficiently by Florence Vidor, Roscoe Karns and Charles Meredith. Others who have accomplished satisfying results are Ben Alexander, George Nicholas, J. P. Lockney, Willis Marks and Harold Goodwin.

SYNOPSIS: Dal Tucker, son of a proud and aristocratic Southern family, returns from college to find that his sister, Beverely, and little brother, Ben, are in financial straits. In his waywardness, he overlocks this and becomes an inhabitue of a gambling house owned by the mayor of the town. Beverely refuses to wed the wholesome son of the mayor because of her brother's evil tendencies. During a raid on the gambling place, a detective is shot. Dal is tried for murder. He is saved from conviction by the testimony of an old negro. He then takes his sister's advice and drives a delivery wagon to earn an honest living, and Beverely and the mayor's son wed.

Pathe Exchange Gets Distribution Of Associated Exhibitors Product

Paul Brunet, Head of Pathe, Also to be Director of Cooperative Organization—No Pictures Yet Received for Publication

Negotiations have been completed whereby Pathe Exchange, Inc., takes over for distribution all Associated Exhibitors, Inc., productions.

Officials of the co-operative organization announce that in making final arrangements for disposition of their product they were guided by the knowledge that Pathe has branch offices in more than thirty countries which will permit members of the association to be in intimate touch with the exchanges.

Issue In U. S. and Canada

The agreement provides for the distribution of Associated pictures throughout the United States and Canada. Paul Brunet, vice president and general manager of Pathe, also will be one of the directors of the new organization.

As yet no productions have been turned over to Pathe by Associated Exhibitors. There have been false rumors of several important deals, it is said, in which the name of the organization has figured.

At the time of closing this deal between Pathe and the Associated Exhibitors, Mr. Brunet expressed the thought that with the big pictures which he was convinced would be handled for the organization, he would be supplying the exhibitors of the country a service of tremendous importance. Every picture bought or produced by the Associated will be distributed through the Pathe organization to the members of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Future Is Assured

Because of the number of branch offices of Pathe, which puts members of the co-operative organization in close touch with the distribution of their product, the Associated Exhibitors, says Mr. Brunet, starts operating with its picture more assured and its plans already further advanced than might have been the case had other arrangements been made.

Works in “Rose of Nome”

Gladys Brockwell is at work on "Rose of Nome" under the direction of Edward J. Le Saint. The exteriors are being made in Flagstaff, Ariz. This is the second of the Barbara Le Marr Deel stories to be made by Miss Brockwell.

West at Work

Billy West, who has discarded the baggy pants, the big shoes, loose coat and cane, has begun work on his first picture at the head of his own company, Billy West Productions, with Ethelyn Gibson as feminine lead.

Popularity of Players Making Up an All-Star Cast Should be Capitalized

A few hints on "how and how not" to exploit productions featuring all-star casts are offered by Sidney A. Franklin in announcing the cast for his first independent picture, which will be presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

"A truly all-star cast," he says, "commands a large personal following. To advertise merely an all-star cast, then, is neglecting a golden opportunity to capitalize the popularity of well-known screen favorites presented in the production."

Analogy Is Proven

"To draw an analogy," Mr. Franklin continues, "a publisher circulating a book written by Robert W. Chambers, Rupert Hughes, Harold MacGrath or any widely read author, would hardly consider it profitable to use in place of the author's name a term such as 'anonymous.' He recognizes in the author's name an asset of incalculable value—a source of revenue which he develops to its fullest limitations.

"Mr. Franklin is now at work on his initial subject, the screen version of Robert W. Chambers' ‘Athalie,' with a cast comprising players of prominence.

"For the role of ‘Athalie' one of Chambers' fascinating character creations, Mr. Franklin has engaged Sylvia Breamer, who joins the Franklyn company after starring in a series of features produced by J. Stuart Blackton.

Nagle in Lead

The leading male role is in the hands of Conrad Nagle, an actor of wide experience both on the stage and before the camera. Mr. Nagle has won a large following among photoplay devotees as a result of his work in "Little Women," "The Lion and the Mouse," in which he played opposite Alice Joyce, and "Red Head," in which he supported Alice Brady. On the legitimate stage, Nagle is best known for his performance opposite Alice Brady in "Forever After" and in the leading male role in "The Man Who Came Back," in which he toured the country for more than a year.

Rosemary Ethely, known for her character portrayals, has been entrusted with an important role, while Robert Cain, a "heavy," who has been prominently cast in Paramount productions, enacts an important part in the picture, Sam De Grasse, character actor, who has been seen in "support of Mary Pickford in a number of productions, rounds out the cast of principals working under Franklin's direction.

Defines Term

"One of the most universally neglected phases of picture exploitation is the all-star cast," says Franklin. "By all-star I do not mean an aggregation of obscure players which, by virtue of a producer's mandate, is given the 'all-star' appellation. I refer to the legitimate usage of the term—a cast which comprises players who have attained widespread prominence and who have won the recognition and esteem of motion picture patrons."

He further asserts that the producer in assembling an all-star cast pays substantial salaries to secure players of established repute in order to enhance the drawing power of his production. His efforts in this direction, however, are nullified if the exhibitor neglects to properly advertise these personalities, according to Franklin.

In closing his observation, the director urges exhibitors to give deep consideration to production of the all-star cast calibre: advertising and exploiting the cast to the limit.

Gentlemen:

We take pleasure in advising you that over 95% of all projectors used in all studios and film laboratories in and around Los Angeles are Powers Cameragraphs.

In almost every case other machines have been carefully tried out with the result that the respective studios have standardized on your projector.

We are subscribing our affidavit certifying the correctness of these several statements. We are also sending under separate cover letters from fifteen of the more important organizations which show beyond question that we have made no extravagant claims for the popularity of the Powers Cameragraph.

With best wishes for continued Powers success, we remain,

Yours very truly,

“What the Picture Did For Me”

VERDICTS ON FILMS IN LANGUAGE OF EXHIBITOR

Copyright, 1919

You are especially invited to contribute regularly to this department. It is a co-operative service for the benefit of exhibitors. Tell us what the picture did for you and read in the HERALD every week what the pictures did for the other fellow, thereby getting the only positive guide to box office values. Address, “What The Picture Did For Me”, EXHIBITORS HERALD, 417 S. Dearborn St., Chicago.

First National

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge—Wonderful. Raise prices and boost to limit. Let us have more like this one.—Cole & Thorpe, Colonial theatre, Keokuk, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Those who admire Mary will like this production. It is her best offering, since Daddy Long Legs. It is more than pleased my patrons.—R. L. Trescott, Pictureland theatre, Livonia, N. Y.—Transient patronage.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—As good as Daddy Long Legs, but doesn’t draw as big crowd. Splendid picture. Great advertising possibilities in picture.—H. R. Bisby, Liberty theatre, Caney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—Dandy picture. Went over good. Boost it big. It will make good.—Alvin S. Fran, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—This sure is a pleasing super-production. Did not make any money on account of cold weather.—Waldo B. Nelson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—Big business. Fine picture.—Dixie theatre, Mayfield, Ky.

Auction of Souls, with Aurora Mardiganian—Wonderful production. Go the limit and advertise this at advanced prices. It will set your patrons to talking and bring people into your show the second night that were never there before. Truly a wonderful production.—H. R. Bisby, Liberty theatre, Caney, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge—Dandy comedy. Business only fair, but will be good if Constance makes more like this.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—One of the best attractions of the season. Caused many favorable remarks.—R. L. Trescott, Pictureland theatre, Livonia, N. Y.—Transient patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—None better. Something to this one. Its big in every way. Showed it two days to ordinary business. People should have seen it. It’s great.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mind the Paint Girl, with Anita Stewart.—Very good picture up to the ending, which was poor.—Fred Paulick, Paulick theatre, Muscoda, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Best Pickford picture that we have ever run.—E. Saunders, Saunders Palace, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—A very good picture, but did not draw very well.—A. C. Klug, Empress theatre, Zumbrota, Minn.—General patronage.

In Old Kentucky, with Anita Stewart.—Big and mighty pleasing picture.—J. H. Thacher, Strand theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

A Dog’s Life, with Charlie Chaplin.—Good comedy.—J. J. Kualauk, Swan theatre, Swanton, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Virtuous Wives, with Anita Stewart. Wonderful picture. Pleased them all.—Louis Frana, Olympic theatre, Calmar, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Day’s Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—All I can say of this is it is poor. Did not draw. Have not as yet on second day found a person to give it a good word.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Turning Point, with Katherine MacDonald.—Nothing but beautiful scenes. No plot at all. Common picture. Not near as good as she is capable of making.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

The Beauty Market, with Katherine MacDonald.—This was a fine picture. Went over big for two days.—G. M. LeMonnier, Majestic theatre, Liberal, Kans.—Transient patronage.

Fox

The Lincoln Highwayman, with William Russell.—Very good picture. Something a little out of the ordinary. I make money on Fox programs.—J. A. Crouse, Ideal theatre, Iowa Park, Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Winning Stroke, with George Walsh.—Excellent photography.—H. C. Howell, Goldwyn theatre, Earlton, Ky.

Shod with Fire, with William Russell.

TWO-THIRDS OF THE REID FAMILY.

Wallace Reid and his son who takes part in “Excuse My Dust” the Paramount Art-craft picture adopted from the Saturday Evening Post story “The Bear Trap.” The young man with the cap works without make-up and is said to be a “Comet.”

Haney, the Knoblanch, all Over," lin;:i:ii!Hi:ii special have most wisely Axline. April Nielson, E. W. good line, town theatre, Liberty, Kans.-Neighborhood patronage.

The Speed Maniac, with Tom Mix.—Most of the patrons were out for a good time. The theatre is in full swing and plenty of action. The show is a special one and it was well received.

Last of the Duanes, with William Farnum.—Farnum always draws. Good business.—George Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Les Miserables, with William Farnum.—This picture may be classed as one of the greatest ever produced. We did splendid business. Star well liked. Heavy drama, but it will go over big in the town due to the great quality of the show. You can't go wrong.—Ethel M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Wilderness Trail, with Tom Mix.—A good Northern picture. Snow scenes are extra good, but story does not give star enough action. Went over extra big with Lloyd comedy, Doesn't Count. Elinor Fair, Liberty theatre, Wenona, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Cyclone, with Tom Mix.—Good picture. Not very far behind as good as some. Do not advance prices.—L. A. Tomlin, Liberty theatre, Easton, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sneak, with Gladys Brockwell.—Star good and a good picture.—Mrs. F. A. McGinnis, Posey theatre, Poseyville, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Coming of the Law, with Tom Mix.—Good picture to poor business. Mix unequal at present.—M. M. Davis, Jewel theatre, LaFayet, True Blue, with William Farnum.—Excellent picture. Enough comedy to make this an all-round first class production.—Waldo B. Nielson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Rough Riding Romance, with Tom Mix.—Book this one. It's a dandy Tom and his associates are money-makers for our house.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Kid is Clever, with George Walsh.—This one did not please at all. Poorest Fox I have had.—L. A. Hasse, Ma tastic theatre, Mount, Wis.—Small town patronage.

The Lone Star Ranger, with William Farnum.—Extra good. Star well liked and had the support. Showed to full houses.—George Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Merry-Go-Round, with Peggy Hyland.—Star is great. Good picture. Please all.—L. A. Tomlin, Liberty, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Be a Little Sport, with Albert Ray and Elmer Fair.—First class comedy. Give us more like this one.—Waldo B. Nielson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Goldwyn
Pinto, with Mabel Normand.—Went over big. Not as big as it should have been.—Mickey.—E. C. Bus-tick, New Strand theatre, Milwau kuee, Wis.—Downtown patronage.

The World and its Women, with Ger daline Farrar.—Extra large house. Average picture. Very pleasing.—H. C. How cell, Goldwyn theatre, Earlington, Ky.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—Exceptionally fine picture, but Jack does not seem to be much of a box office magnet.

H. J. Thacher, Strand theatre, Selina, Kans.—General patronage.

The Turn of the Wheel, with Geraldine Farrar.—Star always draws good here. Goldwyn pictures liked.—Mrs. J. P. Zimmerman, Liberty theatre, Avoca, la.—Small town patronage.

Back to the Woods, with Mabel Normand.—Dandy little comedy-drama.—S. J. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, la.—Small town patronage.

The Paliser Case, with Pauline Fred crack.—Goldwyn should be ashamed to claim this one. A typical machine made picture with a plot as old as Adam and Eve.—H. G. Ramsay, Royal theatre, El Do daro, Kans.—General patronage.

Pinto, with Mabel Normand.—Good, but nothing to rave over, although bet ter than the last few Goldwyns.—M. M. Davis, Jewel Theatre, Grand Island, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Leave It to Susan, with Madge Ken dy.—Best Kennedy picture so far. Please all and satisfied old and young. Doesn't count.—M. M. Davis, Jewel theatre, Grand Island, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—Duds is a fit ing name. Less said about it the better.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trin dale, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—This kind of story will put Rogers in the top notch class of screen stars.—H. J. Thacher, Strand theatre, Selina, Kans.—

The Girl From Outside, with a spe cial cast.—A wonderfully fine produc tion. Different from the regular run of pictures. Three days run and the last day will be the best, but second day bad on account of the weather.—J. E. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—Good pho graphy.—H. C. Howell, Goldwyn theatre, Earlington, Ky.

The Flame of the Desert, with Gerald eine Farrar.—As fine a picture as Goldw ine ever made. Good story, plot and cast. Interesting. Scenes good. Star a drawing card and it will be profitable if she comes out in any more like this one.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

Hodkinson
Desert Gold, with a special cast.—Fine picture. A money-getter. Will stand up under strong advertising.—Al vin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Shackled, with Louise Glaua.—Star pretty well liked here. Always satisfies patrons.—Mrs. J. P. Zimmerman, Xovelly theatre, Avoca, la.—Small town patronage.

A Woman of Pleasure, with Blanche Sweet.—Lost money on this one. Blanche Sweet is looking old. Some of these so-called specials are not Nothing special to them.—J. E. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Temporary Wife, with Ruby De Remer.—Just an average program picture. However, it is better than title will lead you to believe.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Live Sparks, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Pleasing picture. Better than regular program attraction. Star at his best.

Woman of Pleasure, with Blanche Smith. A good big show. Would not conside it a special, but will please nearly all. Played to good business.—
G. X. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blue Bonnet, with Billie Rhodes.—Pleasing value.—Gem theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.—Transient patronage.

$30,000, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Not quite up to Kerrigan's previous subjects.

The Island of Intrigue, with May Alson.—Pictorially beautiful. May is mighty restful to the eye.—Mrs. S. I.
Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, Iowa.

Lombardi Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—
The picture was good, but a very poor name. Hard to advertise. Did not make any money on this picture.—G. M.
LeMonnier, Majestic theatre, Liberal,
Kans.—Transient patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.
—Nothing to it. Very silly. Poorest picture I've used for some time. Don't raise admissions for this one.—W.
A. Dutton, Plaza theatre, Manchester,
Ia.

Eye For Eye, with Nazimova.—In my opinion excellent, but Nazimova not popular with my audiences. Would advise oil towns to lay off.—J. A. Crouse, Ideal theatre, Iowa Park Tex.—Small town patronage.

The Gold Cure, with Viola Dana.
—Kept them laughing. Many favorable comments.—J. W. Bascom, Pastime theatre, Sisson, Cal.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.
—Terrible. Silly, simple and suspected. Lost money.—Cole & Thorpe, Colonial theatre, Keokuk, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blind Man's Eyes, with Bert
Lytell.—Splendid story and acting and patrons didn't mind saying so.—Sadie
L. Haney, Elite theatre, Des Moines,
N. I.—Small town patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.
—A very odd subject. 50% of your audience will like, others not. Pretty spicy in parts. Just the way you take it.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St.
Joseph, Mo.

The Blind Man's Eyes, with Bert
Lytell.—Very good.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia, Nev.

Lombardi Ltd., with Bert Lytell.
—Did not seem to please the majority.
Star very clever. Did not draw.—W.
A. Dutton, Plaza theatre, Manchester,
Ia.

picture that brings your patrons out smiling and is rich with good clean comedy, as well as character depiction.

—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre,
Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

The Red Lantern, with Nazimova.—A marvelous big town production. Drew high class audience. Not appreciated by regular patrons.—J. C. Wilson, Star theatre, Clinton, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Revelations, with Nazimova.—Excellent about tells the tale. Pleased audicence and good business. Have never seen Nazimova in a poor one.—J. C.
Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Neligh,
Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Castles in the Air, with May Allison.
—Very good. Get this one. Fair business.—Will F. Krain, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Belle of the Season, with Emmy Wehlen.—The girl is clever but doesn't draw worth a cent.—E. N. Brown, Stocking theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.—
Neighborhood patronage.

His Bonded Wife, with Emmy Wehlen.
—Excellent comedy. Everyone liked it.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Spenders, with Bert Lytell.—Up to this star's average, which means it is very good.—Harold Daspit, Atherton théatre, Kentwood, Ia.—Mixed patronage.

The Return of Mary, with May Allison.—Very good picture. Pleased them all.—Louis Frana, Olympic theatre, Calmar, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Paramount Artcraft

Male and Female, with a special cast.
Great. DeMille is producing some great pictures. Better than Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Poor Boob, with Bryant Washburn.
—A good picture. People well satisfied.
Also showed a two reel Sennett comedy, Her Fatal Mistake, with this picture which makes a very good program.
—Harry Burden, Mirage theatre, Axtell,
Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Invisible Bond, with Irene Castle.
—If she is a star I am General Pershing.
Less said the better.—Jack Nash, Strand théatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.
—J. C. Lamonteen, American theatre,
Breckenridge, Tex.—General patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.
—One of the best pictures that we have ever run, but did not draw. Some did not like it. Lost money two days.
—Will F. Taddiken, Elite theatre, Morgarville, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Male and Female, a Cecil B. DeMille production.—Was liked better than The Miracle Man. Did good business on name.—H. B. Axline, Scope theatre,
Wenona, I1l.—Small town patronage.

Victory, a Maurice Tourneur production.—Splendid story and production.
Exquisitely filmed. Tourneur's name with the cast should get the business.
—W. G. Mitchell, Majestic Gardens,
Kalamazoo, Mich.—General patronage.

When Do We Eat? with Enid Bennett.—A few more like this and the exhibitors will be wondering when they will eat. It is not worthy of Miss Bennett, and we had a very small crowd.
—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

John Petticoats, with William S. Hart.
—Good picture and good name. Drew well, but Hart not suited for pictures of that kind.—J. C. Lamonteen, American théatre, Breckenridge, Tex.—General
patronage.

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast. Patrons did not wait for the finish.
—Xuf said.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre,
Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Love Insurance, with Bryant Washburn. Up to Washburn's standard.
Good puller.—Will F. Taddiken, Elite théatre, Morganville, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

"WILL" AND "JIMMIE"
The Thirteenth Commandment, with Ethel Clayton.—The best Ethel Clayton ever produced. Don't be afraid to play this one. A fine ladies' picture with good moral on the H. C. L.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan.—General patronage.

The Dark Star, with Marion Davies.—None of Paramount specials are good. Just get by with them.—Jean Dagle, Liberty theatre, Murphysboro, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.—Very good. Best picture we have had of this star for a long time. Boost it and go the limit on it. Will please any audience.—J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Beresford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

La Apache, with Dorothy Dalton.—My patrons liked this although plenty of criticism as to the boldness of the picture. It got 'the jack' nevertheless.—Hert Goldman, New Princess theatre, St. Paul, Minn.—Downtown patronage.

The Cinema Murder, with Marion Davies.—A good picture, but a misleading title. Author and story helped put it over. It will draw well if the latter are mentioned in the billing.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan.—General patronage.

A Very Good Young Man, with Bryant Washburn.—Good comedy-drama. Washburn has many admirers here.—Waldo B. Nielson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The White Heather, with a special cast.—Nothing to it. Ran for two days, good big first day, poor second. Walter Coddington, Home theatre, Rantoul, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Arms and the Girl, with Billie Burke.—Fair picture, but out of date.—Geo. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lyndon, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Hay Foot Straw Foot, with Charles Ray.—Very good comedy-drama. Charles Ray is bound to appeal to all classes.—Waldo B. Nielson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Three Men and a Girl, with Marguerite Clark.—Marguerite Clark always is good. Her pictures can be depended upon to bring out the crowd.—R. C. Cash, Lyceum theatre, Waterville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Counterfeit, with Elsie Ferguson.—I cannot put her over. I like her, but I don't pay to see her. Others won't.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

String Beans, with Charles Ray.—Poor picture. Does not come up to Ray's standard.—S. X. Andreas, Royal theatre, Ponca, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Knickerbocker Buckaroo, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Like every Fairbanks picture. Very good. If he (Fairbanks) would only make more we would be better satisfied.—R. C. Cash, Lyceum theatre, Waterville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

The White Heather, a Maurice Tourneur production.—They called it a special, but it's a very ordinary picture. My patrons don't like English pictures.—Cha’s, Blaine, Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

A Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clark.—Too much stuff. Not up to usual Clark business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Captain Kidd, Jr., with Mary Pickford.—Absolutely nothing to this picture. Star is liked, but picture did not please.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—Not a Dalton picture. Her talent is wasted on such stuff as this. Just fair business.—Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nugget Nell, with Dorothy Gish.—Though the picture is not without a burlesque angle it is good, but won't please only about 25%—Hert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman in the Suitecase, with Enid Bennett.—Good picture. One of the best she has appeared in since Step- ping Out. A good picture. A different.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan.—General patronage.

A Knickerbocker Buckaroo, with Douglas Fairbanks.—This gave general satisfaction. Drew good house.—A. C. King, Empress theatre, Zumbrota, Minn.—General patronage.

Wolves of the Rail, with William S. Hart.—This one sent them out talking and is the talk of the town. Book it and boost it. The ladies formerly disliked his homeliness, but they are falling for him now.—J. W. Baird, Crystal theatre, Honebursburg, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Counterfeit, with Elsie Ferguson.—Can look in display windows and see Elsie's wonderful eyes, that is not in live reels is I. W. W. tactics.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.—A splendid comedy production. One that will stand up with the best.—Parmele theatre, Plattsmouth, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grim Game, with Houdini.—Good picture. One-day run. Capacity house.—J. C. Lamonett, American theatre, Recknridge, Tex.—General patronage.

The Witness for the Defense, with Elsie Ferguson.—Fair. Elsie has had such poor ones they fail to get over now.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Thou Gavest Me, with Katherine Nield McAlpin.—A good picture. Will fill your house if properly exploited. Raised admission.—Preston Bros., Crescent theatre, Audubon, la.

Widow by Proxy, with Marguerite Clark.—Very good. Good business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pathé

The Sawdust Doll, with Marie Osborn.—Kids went wild and older ones well pleased. Baby and syrup always pack my house.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.

The Gay Old Dog, with John Cumberland.—Cumberland good, but lighting and photography miserable. No draft for second night run in the small town. Picture very much over-exploited. Better dodge this one as a special and play it as an ordinary program offering at lower price for the end of the year.—Victoria theatre, Neligh, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.
Brothers Divided, with Frank Keenan.
—A picture that you can't go wrong on. Clean, wholesome entertainment for the entire family.—Chuck Townsend, Lyceum theatre, Leavenworth, Kans.

The Bishop's Emeralds, with Virginia Pearson.
—A fine drama. Played two days. Lost money on it. Too stiff and formal. Nothing to it. This is a tip.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil's Trail, with Betty Compson.
—Fine as silk. Go to it. You can't fail.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Battler, with Earl Metcalfe.
—Some people are knocking the old World pictures, but I say they are good program pictures.—Chas. Blaine, Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

The Praise Agent, with Dorothy Green.
—Very good.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Small town patronage.

The Sea Waif, with Louise Huff.

A Home Wanted, with Madge Evans.
—A good feature with a little humor. Will please 90% of audience.—Geo. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lyndon, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Bring Your Betty, with Evelyn Greeley.
—A good picture and well played. No kicks.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—General patronage.

The Roughneck, with Montague Love.
—This picture gave very good satisfaction. Business poor on account of flu. The star is Michael S. Minter.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

Ginger, with Violet Palmer.
—Gave splendid satisfaction. Plenty of compliments.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Republic

The Steel King, with Montague Love.
—This is a plumb good one. Good story, good acting, good direction and made good all around. Book it. It's fine.—McClure & Faulkner, Comique theatre, Jamesport, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Realart

The Luck of the Irish, with a special cast.
—This is a knockout. Played to capacity business. Pleased 90% of patrons. Charged 25 and 35. Some said it was the best picture ever shown here. Photography is fine and there are some great light scenes. Had Theda Bara in Kathelen Mavoureen as opposition. We did all the business. Advertise big and raise the prices.—E. A. Bloomquist, Wisner theatre, Eldorado, la.—Small town patronage.

The Mystery of the Yellow Room, with a special cast.
—Bought it a special. Just an ordinary program picture. Lost money on it. My town not strong on mystery stuff.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sinners, with Alice Brady.

Listing of Gold Gables, with Mary Minter.
—Different from the average picture because it is human. Mary Miles Minter is going to be a bigger star than Mary Pickford. You cannot go wrong with this picture. Played two nights to S. R. O. in small town.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.

Robertson-Cole

The Other Half, with ZaSu Pitts.
—This is a picture worth while. Pleased a large crowd.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

—Played to a big, well pleased audience.—E. Saunders, Saunders Palace theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Hoopla, with Billie Rhodes.
—Here is a star that will register with the best if given production of better caliber. Everyone enjoyed every foot of this circus story and Miss Rhodes scores 100%.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Better Times, with ZaSu Pitts.
—Very good picture. Very good business.—Mrs. S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, la.—Small town patronage.

The Luck of Geraldine Laird, with Bessie Barriscale.
—Good regular program picture. You will not lose on Barriscale.—George Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Purchase Price, with Bessie Barriscale.
—This was a good picture. Full of pep and ginger. This is the kind of picture to run.—G. M. LeMonnier, Majestic theatre, Liberal, Kans.—Transient patronage.

Barefisted Gallagher, with William Desmond.
—Good. Desmond well liked here. Lots of compliments.—H. A. Wishard, Wishard theatre, Bloomfield, la.

HOW IT'S DONE

The submersed set, erected for a scene in "Tiried by Three," the Book, serial to be published by Pathe. The set is for a scene showing the hero trapped in a vault which is slowly filled with water.

Her Purchase Price, with Bessie Barriscale.
—Very good. You won't go wrong on this one. Average business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Other Half, with ZaSu Pitts.
—Just fair program picture. Nothing special.—B. A. Belt, Bennington theatre, Bennington, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Select

Out Yonder, with Olive Thomas.
—Good program picture. Pleased.—W. A. Dutton, Plaza theatre, Manchester, la.

His Wife's Money, with Eugene O'Brien.
—Pre-released ahead of Chicago. Class A-1 picture and liked very well by all who saw it.—LaSalle theatre, South Bend, Ind.

The Land of Opportunity, with Ralph Ince.
—Splendid drawing power and does not disappoint.—Mrs. S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, la.—Small town patronage.

Greater Than Fame, with Elaine Hamerstein.

The Lesson, with Constance Talmadge.

Redhead, with Alice Brady.
—One of the very best Brady subjects we have run to date. A good commendable offering.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Neb.—Small town patronage.

Sauce for the Goose, with Constance Talmadge.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.

The World to Live In, with Alice
A Lady's Name, with Constance Talmadge.—A dandy for all that family. It is of the light comedy type and will sure please. The Talmadge girls are good bets all the time.—C. H. Powers, Auditorium theatre, Dunsin, Cal.—General patronage.

Who Cares? with Constance Talmadge.—Poor business. Average program picture. One of the kind that people forget before they are out of the door.—J. A. Crouse, Ideal theatre, Iowa Park, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Delaux Annie, with Norma Talmadge.—Wonderful picture. Norma never did draw for me, but those who saw it said it was great. Any town that likes Norma Talmadge will eat this one up.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

United Artists

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—A remarkable picture. 100% Box office and you will never forget it, because of the fact that it is sure to please.—H. J. Thatcher, Strand theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

When the Clouds Roll By, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Our first showing of Fairbanks and pleased immensely. Excellent business.—J. A. Crouse, Ideal theatre, Iowa Park, Tex.—Small town patronage.

His Majesty, the American, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Played this picture to capacity house and everyone more than pleased. Ministers who witnessed it gave their hearty endorsement. It is in class "A" and the Fine Arts, Col.-Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

His Majesty, the American, with Douglas Fairbanks.—This picture did not draw. Did not give as much satisfaction as Doug. usually does.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

When the Clouds Roll By, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Here's one that simply knocks 'em cold, and makes 'em all cry for more. The flood scenes are great and held one spellbound. Was sure fire S. R. O.—H. J. Thatcher, Strand theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

United Picture Theatres

Between Men, with William S. Hart.—This was a good one. Please them all.—A. Haase, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Playthings of Passion, with Kitty Gordon.—This was a fine picture. The kind that my patrons like. Good in every detail.—G. M. LeMonnier, Majestic theatre, Liberal, Kans.—Transient patronage.

The Honorable Alg, with Charles Ray.—Would have been O. K. a few years ago. Leave it alone.—J. J. Kua-luk, Swan theatre, Swanton, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Man in the Open, with Dustin Far-num.—No way I hate to start an argument for I never saw anything but the highest praise on this, but my patrons, many of them, walked out on me. I had advertised heavily. Good business. Personal opinion, very ordinary and very disappointing. Ran a good comedy with it.—S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

The Female of the Species, with Dorothy Dalton.—A good picture that will please a critical audience.—B. A. Belt, Bennington theatre, Bennington, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Mayor of Filbert, with a special cast.—Not much to this picture. Do not ad-vertise this as a special because you will disappoint your patrons.—R. L. Trescott, Pictureland theatre, Livonia, N. Y.—Transient patronage.

By Proxy, with Roy Stewart.—Say, if you want a good one that will make them laugh, then book this one. Roy gets them for us.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

Children in the House, with Norma Talmadge.—A very good picture.—S. N. Ayers, Royal theatre, Ponca, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

The Gun Fighting Gentleman, with Harry Carey.—Better than a lot of specials. Lots of good remarks on this one. Best Carey I've played.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Brute Breaker, with Frank Mayo.—Good outdoor rough stuff. Lots of action. Good business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lotl, with Ors Carew.—More real punch and action in this excellent eek story than the general run of big specials. Everyone highly pleased.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Unpainted Woman, with Mary MacLaren.—Good star and nice picture.—H. C. Howell, Goldwyn theatre, Earlton, Ky.

Home, with Mildred Harris.—Nice Sunday picture. People liked it; I like to show Universal. Pictures are good and management is square.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Brute Breaker, with a special
EXHIBITORS

EXHIBITION of motion picture fiction should never be considered as other than a business undertaking.

DOLLARS AND CENTS success is the only kind that is recognized in business circles.

REPORTS upon cash value of current attractions printed in this department make up the best literature that the exhibitor can read—AND WRITE.

cast.—Broke all house records since The Spoilers. Finest scenery ever shown. This picture was made near Sisson.—J. W. Bascom, Pastime theatre, Sisson, Cal.

Loot, with Ora Carew.—This is some picture. By far the one best bet. Get the show. Will play in the Loew theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Amazing Wife, with Mary MacLaren.—Just ordinary program picture. Satisfied them all at regular prices. Good business.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Law and Order.—Very good. One that the majority will like. Good Saturday business.—J. E. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

The Wolf, with Earl Williams.—Good picture. Don't like Williams in that kind of a play. Liked best in society dramas.—Ethel M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Tower of Jewels, with Corinne Griffith.—Good picture of the mystery type. Holds interest well.—H. G. Ramsay, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

The Spark Divine, with Alice Joyce.—Fine. One of Vitagraph's best.—C. Oldham, Dixie theatre, McMinnville, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sweeters or Sinners, with Joseph creation.—A pretty good picture. Liked it.—E. C. Bos-tick, Merrill theatre, Milwaukee, Wis.

Slaves of Pride, with Alice Joyce.—Pretty good. Miss Joyce is making better pictures and wears some real clothes.—J. E. Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Painted World, with Anita Stewart.—Poorest picture we have played in years. The mother's blind eye haaus us yet. Lay off the Vitagraph Stewarts.—H. E. Thompson, Temple Hall, Boulder, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

Miss Dulcie From Dixie, with Gladys Leslie.—A good southern picture that is true to life. Will play in the Wigwam television theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Cupid Forecloses, with Bessie Love.—Stale, handicapped by weak story. It's another case of "mortgage on the dear old homestead." A theme almost as new as the story of Adam and Eve. Lay off of it and force producers to drop that old chestnut. It's a joke.—J. C. Jenkins, Auditorium theatre, Nethyl, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

The Forbidden Woman (Equity), with Clara K. Young.—Contrary to many reports, we find this a very good picture and did a good business but not as good as was expected. Due to the fact that Young has never done anything great for us. If C. K. Y. is a good star for you, you certainly should play this one.—H. J. Thacker, Strand theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

When the Desert Smiled (Capital), with Neil Hart.—Pleased them all. Lots of good work in this one.—L. A. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

Birth of a Race (Birth of a Race Co.), with a special cast.—Advertised it well and it did the business and all satisfied. Played on percentage.—R. C. Cash, Lyceum theatre, Waterville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.

Days of the Buffalo (Miller Bros.), with E. Krahmer.—The best frontier picture I ever ran. Good story and excellent photography. Broke record of attendance for one night. This is first picture Miller Bros. have made in three years.—C. C. Johnston, Triangle theatre, Hoxie, Ark.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hushed Hour (Harry Garson), with Blanche Sweet.—Just fair. No story or plot to this. Pleased a few. Good moral.—J. W. Bascom, Pastime theatre, Sisson, Cal.

Birth of a Race (Birth of a Race Co.), with a special cast.—A good religious picture. Will go over big in strong church towns.—H. B. Axline, Scope theatre, Wenona, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Serials

The Lost City (Selig-Warner Bros.), with Juanita Hansen.—The best serial I ever put on my screen. Juanita Hansen is sure there when it comes to action. Audience startled to see the stunt she pulled off. H. Goldstein, Shawmut theatre, Boston, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce (Arrow), with Ann Little and Jack Hoxie.—Ran a good many serials, but this is the first one that shows so much increase in the box office as the serial goes along. Don't lose any time. Book it.—Gem theatre, Gary, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Black Secret (Pathé), with Pearl White.—Finished this serial two weeks ago. My patrons came for fifteen weeks to see it. They said it was great. So that's why I got by. The serial of thousands of thrills.—Chas. Blaine, Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

Smashing Barriers (Vitagraph), with William Duncan.—This is a sure fire serial and will help to keep them coming during bad weather.—R. C. Cash, Lyceum theatre, Waterville, N. Y.—Neighborhood patronage.
ROBERT BRUNTON'S UNIT STUDIOS

Hollywood Plant Has Twenty-Seven Permanent Buildings—Independent Producer Is Given Chance to Produce Without Own Equipment

BY FLORENCE PORTER PARKS

The first unit studio was built a little more than a year ago at 3300 Melrose avenue, Hollywood, Cal, by Robert Brunton, a Scotchman who at an early age won an enviable reputation as scenic and landscape artist and was at one time head of the scenic department of Sir Henry Irving's company.

His idea for such a studio came with the advent of the independent producer and he built "the people's studio" on ten acres of unenlightened ground with one glass and two open stages.

Succeeds with First

The independent producer who had no equipment, no cast, no star, no director and no story could make a picture at this studio, and he found that due to the capable assistance given him that he had not lost money on his initial venture in production, but had succeeded as surely as though he had been in the producing business for years.

Today there are twenty-seven permanent buildings on the lot—this does not include temporary structures. Numbered among these are two open stages 60x150, exclusive of screen doors; one glass stage 60x150, a dark stage 75x300, and two other dark stages 60x290, all 34 feet high. A dark stage now in the course of construction measures 300x325 and is 28 feet high.

Improvements Made

A few improvements made this spring include a cafeteria that accommodates 100 stars and extras. A one-story concrete building was completed a couple of weeks ago into which were moved the scenario staff and the publicity force. Prior to the existence of this building these departments were quartered in "scenario cottage," the historic shack which was the only house on the ground when Mr. Brunton bought the land.

An attractive spot, especially on a warm day, is the new cement basin swimming pool which holds 3,000 gallons of water and is sunk amid an inviting cluster of graceful pepper trees.

Building Decorations

All buildings on the lot are plain, and are putty color with Nile green trimmings. A high cement wall over which climb the lovely roses of California partly surrounds the studio. A gardener has laid out the grounds in a most artistic manner, and a conservatory supplies flowers and plants for practical use in pictures as well as for the ornamentation of the studio.

Probably from the viewpoint of the general public, the cottage built for Mary Pickford is the most interesting building on the lot. An Irish cottage built for an Irish lass, for the architecture is Irish. The five-room cottage is putty color plaster with a red tile roof.

Miss Pickford's Cottage

Miss Pickford's lounge and dressing room is furnished in the natural color reed with old rose hangings at the windows. On the floor is a stunning old rose rug with a black border. The reception room is also furnished in the reed, but the furniture is painted delft blue and gold. A plain delft blue rug harmonizes with the window drapes. Her kitchenette is in white enamel, and that of Mr. Brunton was purchased for his daughter. Back of the cottage is a charming old fashioned garden.

Mr. Brunton recently purchased the land called Hollywood Springs ranch, covering 300 acres near Cahuenga. Part of this land is in the rough, with great rolling hills which lend themselves to western atmosphere.

The Brunton Studio was the first to have a fire department of its own. This studio was also the first to have a green room for picture actors. Book cases encircle the room, filled with books of interest to the profession, while current magazines are piled on the table. Over the fireplace hang many of Mr. Brunton's hunting trophies.

Plans New Studio

This is the Brunton studio of today, but already plans are being made by Mr. Brunton for a stupendous achievement of the future. Hollywood Springs is to become a complete studio, and we will assume that the locale is the Hollywood Springs ranch. The studio of the future will have thirty stages 150 feet in diameter, and 30 feet in the clear. These will be revolving circular stages, motor driven, thus making it possible to follow the sun about, and the time saved in so doing is almost incalculable.

There will be stables for airplanes, with a landing station for downtown delivery, and planes instead of automobiles will convey the companies to location.

Each company will have a three-piece orchestra, a violin, cello and piano, and at noon the musicians will assemble in the studio cafe with their string instruments to play during lunch hour.

With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

It's getting the fashion to announce trips abroad. First Mary Pickford announced an European trip, later called off, and now comes the announcement that Mary Miles Minter will probably go to India and Egypt.

Arthur Fraser, the cinema king of Australia, has sent B. L. Jones, a young associate of his, to Los Angeles to learn the motion picture game from the inside out.

Bee Daniels may be the next cinema star to invade the "speakers." Frank Egan, who presented Wally Reid in "The Rotters" at the Little America, is planning and her for a footlong season at his playhouse petite.

Bob Henri, who was a member of Sol Lesser's press staff, now is wielding a wicked mimeograph for Special Pictures Corporation.

B. F. Rosenburg has been appointed manager of the Metro exchange in Los Angeles to succeed Arthur Lahr, who has assumed an executive position at Metro studios. Rosenburg has been with Metro for four years, three years manager of the Salt Lake exchange and one year at Denver.

"Homespun Folks" is announced as the title of the second picture in which Thomas H. Ince will present Lloyd Hughes in the featured role. "Wheelbarrow Webster" marks the first special production feature for Hughes.

When the U. S. S. Mississippi left San Pedro recently for target practice at sea, it carried on board an eight days' supply of Metro Screen Classics for the nightly entertainment of Uncle Sam's gobs. The prints were supplied by Harry Lustig, Metro's coast representative. Among the pictures the sailors enjoyed were "Lombardi, Ltd.,” "Fair and Warner, “"Please Get Married" and "The Brat."

The entire company filming "Billions" which Charles Bryant adapted from a French play, has been held up for a week because a cold has kept the Metro star, Nazimova, at her Laurel canyon home.

The man who invented and manufactured the "tin hats" worn by American and British soldiers in the world war was guest of honor recently at the Thomas H. Ince studios. He is J. L. Brodie of London, declared by Britons to have done more toward winning the war than any other inventor or manufacturer.

Chic Sale, who is working in the Robertson-Cole production, "The Smart Aleck" at the Christie studios, says he likes California so well after playing the Orpheum circuit that he is going to sell his tux after this picture is finished.

Frank Roland Conklin is writing a new scenario in which Fay Tincher and Eddie Baker will start work shortly at the Christie studio.

Bob Vernon, Christie star, and Harold Beaudine, formerly assistant to his brother Bill in directing Christie's, are co-directing their own picture.

Kathleen O'Connor put up a gallant fight for three weeks against a threatened attack of pneumonia and conquered. She is back at work in Universal pictures.

"What Happened to Jones" will be Bryant Washburn's next picture. Twenty years ago this picture, one of the first written by George Broadhurst, was a reigning success, and it since has been played continuously by stock companies.

Readers of "The Hippotamus Parade" in its magazine form will be interested in knowing that it is to be made into a film comedy with Wallace Reid as the star, under the title, "What's Your Hurry?"

The part of the soldier hero in "Civilian Clothes" which Paramount has begun to produce will be played by Thomas Meighan. In Los Angeles this comedy ran as a stage play for thirty-seven weeks, breaking all western records.

Pauline Frederick has invested in a new home at Beverly Hills, valued at $75,000.

George Peyer, well-known scenario and continuity writer, who has been associated with the Jesse D. Hampton studios, Louis B. Mayer and Ben Wilson, is now connected with Universal. He will supply the continuity for the final episodes of the Eddy Polo serial, "The Vanishing Dagg," Hope Long, who wrote the scenario for this chaptered melodrama, recently has been promoted to supervision of serial and western dramas.

Irving Lesser, New York manager for his brother, Sol Lesser, the Los Angeles film impresario, is due to arrive here soon for a conference at the local executive offices regarding the distribution and presentation of the new George Beban production, "One Man in a Million," and the new Annette Kellerman comedy drama.

Gladys Brockwell is having a bit of a breathing spell after making "Rose of Rome," a western picture written especially for her by Barbara La Mar, directed by Edward J. LeSaint.

Vivian Rich, after proving her mettle in her first picture as a Fox star, is beginning her second, a society drama, with a role that fits her capabilities and personality, to say nothing of her wardrobe.

Max Roth, general manager of Sol Lesser enterprises, will arrive in Los Angeles next week after a flying trip to all exchange centers west of Chicago. The tour was made in the interests of Special Pictures Corporation, the physical distribution of which has been taken over by the Lesser interests.

Lucian Hubbard has arrived at Universal City to assume the position of scenario editor, taking the berth made vacant by the resignation of Percy Heath, who has gone to Metro. J. C. Brownwell, New York scenario editor for Universal, who has spent several weeks at the coast studios, expects to return soon to 1600 Broadway.

MAETERLINCK AT GOLDWYN'S CULVER CITY STUDIOS

The noted Belgian dramatist and poet being greeted by Mason Litson, production manager, when he made his first visit to the Goldwyn plant to study picture making at close range prior to writing his first screen play for Goldwyn.
A patent has been issued to Universal Film Manufacturing company and Harry Brown, chief electrical engineer at Universal City, for a new machine for producing flash lighting. The invention was worked out by Brown for use where night scenes are being taken. The lightning torch gives bare of light, the intensity of which runs up into millions of candle power. The light is so bright it can be photographed with the usual studio lights going.

MARIE WALCAMP, Universal serial star, who is heading the oriental expedition to film "The Dragon's Nest," cables that she is on her way from the Philippines to Hawaii, where two or three weeks will be spent, after which the company, under direction of Henry McCrae, will sail home.

When Annette Kellerman was in San Francisco recently for the deep water scenes of her newest picture being made by Sol Lesser banner, one of the sailors on a ship that had just arrived from South America insisted upon presenting the aquatic star with a baby monkey. All went well until Miss Kellerman's pet puppy got into a tussle with the monkey, and the strain of the strafed diplomatic relationship between canine and simian the star decided to make the hearts of the kiddies of a Francisco orphanage a bit brighter by making the monkey the mascot of their institution.

"We now have the Associated Producers, the United Artists, the Associated Exhibitors, the United Picture Theatres and the Eminent Authors Productions," says George Beban, "Why not the Amalgamated Cairenes, the Allied Property Masters, the United Projectionists and the Affiliated Press Agents Productions," quarrels the star who has just finished "One Man in a Million" for Sol Lesser.

W. A. V. Mack, manager of Select Distributing Agency, and Haddon Stephens, manager of the local branch of Republic Pictures Corporation, are leaving to attend a convention of Lewis J. Selznick interests in New York.

Harry McCoy, juvenile comedian, has returned to the Fox fold. He is now a feature player with Sunshine comedies.

EDWARD A. BIRD, who has been associated with the Charlie Chaplin studios for the past few years as casting director, has bought a lot on Beverly drive and expects to commence building operations soon.

EDDIE LYONS and Lee Moran are busy cutting and editing their first Universal comedy feature, "Everything But the Truth," by Edgar Franklin, and are employing their spare time in selecting their next starring vehicle.

CHARLES H. KYSON, one of the industry's best known artisans, has been appointed general director of sets and scenery of the Thomas H. Ince studios.

ROBERT ANDERSON, the well-known film star who recently entered into a contract with Universal to produce and act a series of two-reel comedies, has begun the filming of his first production. It is called "Mon-sieur Coupiner," and is based on a story by Bernard McConville.

BASES "ADS" ON FUTURE FILMS

Exhibitor at Fort Madison, la., Says Patrons Draw Conclusion That If Successful Pictures Are Scheduled Showing Must Be Good

Jack Boyle of the Strand theatre, Fort Madison, la., devotes practically half of the advertising used for current productions in exploiting coming attractions.

In explaining that such a system advertises the character of a theatre, he says:

"Such advertising is of special value to exhibitors in towns around the size of Fort Madison (30,000 population) or smaller. No matter how small the place is, the screen patrons are right up to date in the matter of releases and the reviews which they read of the pictures that are making the hits in the larger cities on first runs or pre-release dates make a big impression on them.

People Look to Future

"The particular picture which you happen to be running may have slipped out of their memory, or again maybe they never heard of it, but the thing that gets them is to see that in the future you will run the picture which is at the present time making a big hit in the larger cities. They draw the conclusion that if you have booked productions of that sort as soon as you are able to obtain them, the one you are running at the present time must be good.

"It makes a reputation for a house quicker than any way I know of. I've seen continuous advertising of the big productions as future attractions naturally brands your house as being the place where the big productions are shown and a steady day by day patronage results. Until something else turns up that I regard as better, and from the results I have gotten from this form of advertising it will have to be very good, I may say that the requirements of such productions will continue to be carried in all advertising for the New Strand theatre."

Used in Dramatic Theatres

Mr. Boyle said he got the nucleus of his idea for this sort of advertising from the dramatic theatres in Fort Madison, which in common with the theatres in similar size towns make it an object of printing a complete list of attractions booked for the season at the opening in the fall. The comment that this attracted was regarded by Mr. Boyle as being of advantage to a motion picture house. He made arrangements for all the half flyers in his productions for the present year and took full pages in the newspapers to announce the stars published through the circuit.

Dual Role Is Depicted

By Elaine Hammerstein

George Archainbaud, director, is supervising the cutting and timing of his latest Elaine Hammerstein production for Selznick. This production was finished about two weeks ago and is titled "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes." It is said that Miss Hammerstein does some of the best work of her screen career. The story was written by Grace Sartwell Mason and the scenario by R. Cecil Smith.

Hammerstein has a dual role in this production taking the part of Leontine Maddern and her sister, Leona Maddern, who goes under the name of Rosalie Byrnes. Leontine is a vaudeville actress with few if any scruples. For this reason her sister, Leona, has adopted the non-de-plume of Rosalie Byrnes.

"Blindness of Youth"

Territory Being Sold

Murray Garson, president of the Foundation Film Co., is sponsor for the statement that Charles Shwerin, who is handling the sale of "The Blindness of Youth," has made a record in the state rights market. Within five weeks after the first announcement, it is said, eighty per cent of the country had been sold. The only states left unsold are the following: Illinois, Wisconsin, North Dakota, South Dakota, Iowa, Missouri, Kansas, Nebraska, Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico. Many inquiries have been received from exhibitors in these states asking the name of the distributor in their territory, it is declared.

Follies Girl In Support

Lucille Cavanaugh, formerly of "Ziegfeld Follies" has been engaged by William Fox to support William Russell in "Leave It to Me," which is being made under the direction of Emilmett J. Flynn.
Perfected Model of Automaticket Ready Machine Is Subjected to a Severe Running Test Before Leaving Ships Perfection of the 1920 model of the Automaticket Register is announced by the Automatic Ticket Selling and Cash Register Company.

In perfecting its machine, the company has aimed to produce one that will give consistent service day in and day out. To accomplish this end, its models are subjected to a five-year continual running test at the factory. This test, it is claimed, is harder on the machine than five years service in a box office. Satisfied users, the company says, are the best proof of the quality of Automaticket Registers. The machine gives rapid ticket selling service and cash protection.

It is pointed out that in a box office where tickets are sold by hand there are leaks and losses every year that amount to many times the cost of an Automaticket Register.

The Automaticket factory on West Fifty-eighth street, in New York, is one of the most interesting places for an exhibitor. From here he goes to the metropolis. Exhibitors are always welcome.

Read Is Seeking Closer Relations With Exhibitor

J. Parker Read, Jr., producer of the Louis Glum and Hobart Bosworth productions, has launched a nationwide direct-to-exhibitor campaign. Sig Schlager, for many years identified with movie picture publicity on the coast, is touring the country in Mr. Read's behalf, and will hold a confabulation with every exhibitor he can reach in the time allotted, whether his house seat 200 or 2,000, it is announced.

Mr. Read says: The exhibitor and producer must work hand in hand and each should know more of the other's business. Every picture that leaves my studio will be accompanied by an exploitation campaign the highest order, and the studio publicity department will co-operate with the exhibitor to the fullest extent."

$50,000 to Remodel

LANSING, MICH.—The Bijou theatre is to be remodeled during the Summer season at a cost of $50,000 and reopened under the name of The Regent as soon as the work is finished, according to announcement made by W. S. Butterfield and Harold Bird of the Bird estate, who controls the property.

Craft to Build

AUBURN, WASH.—Walter Craft, manager of the Terminal theatre, has purchased a frontage of 55 feet on East Fifteenth street, and announced plans for the erection of a new and thoroughly up-to-date motion picture theatre on this property.

Theatre Building Sold

KANSAS CITY, MO.—The Bonaventure theatre building, 2315-17 Independence boulevard, has been sold to Norman Nelson of Tulsa, Okla. Mr. Nelson has not announced his plans.

National Film Buys 'Son of Tarzan' As New Serial Vehicle for Jack Hoxie

Jack Hoxie, featured in "Lightning Bryce," the serial produced by National Film Corporation, is to be starred in a new continued feature.

The screen rights for the last of the Edgar Rice Burroughs books of the Tarzan series, 'The Son of Tarzan,' has been purchased by National and will serve as the vehicle for Hoxie's new serial. National Film screened Burroughs' previous works. "Tarzan of the Apes" and 'The Romance of Tarzan,' several years ago. Both still are being exhibited in their original form.

Each Episode Complete

National will plan carefully the entire production before it is started, according to an announcement. As a result, each episode of the new serial will be a complete picture in itself, it is said, while at the same time it will be an integral part of the completed narrative. This arrangement, National officials believe, will make the production unusually attractive.

L. V. Jefferson, who is writing the continuity, has reduced the original version to ten episodes. Harry M. Rubey, National's president, has stated that every effort will be made to make it the biggest serial of the year and that it will be the costliest picture ever produced by his company.

To Produce On Island

As the scene of the story is laid in the tropics, it was necessary to obtain an island in the South Pacific in order to set realism into the picture. Jack Hoxie's entire company will sail immediately and remain in the tropics until the serial is completed. The natives will be utilized in furnishing the local color. Included in Hoxie's support is Lucille Rubey and a large cast.

This is the first time an Edgar Burroughs man-monkey novel has ever been attempted in serial form, it is announced. While the director has not as yet been announced, Joe Brandt, eastern representative for National, says that the man selected will be the best serial supervisor available.

I. Bernstein, production manager for National, promises that "The Son of Tarzan" will be replete with new kinds of thrills and exciting episodes. An unusual exploitation campaign of nationwide scope is being planned. Work on the first episode was started the first part of April.

They Part To Meet Again

The roads of many film cutters lead to Rothacker's. W. A. Smith, cutter for King Vidor, and Gail S. Carter of the M. A. Dodge Film Company, became acquainted when their companies occupied stages 1 and 2 at the Hollywood, Cal., studios. They parted in January, March found them at tables 1 and 2 in the cutting room at the Chicago Rothacker laboratory.

Remodel Silver Theatre

GREENVILLE, MICH.—Remodeling operations which will include the rebuilding of the stage, the installation of a modern ventilation system, the recreation of the front so as to accommodate a balcony, and a new exterior finish, have been started on the Silver Family theatre.

William A. Seiter, director of the National studios, was once the hero in one-reel comedies. Under Allen Curtis on the first stage of the first unit of what is now Universal City, "Bill" Seiter was the leading man in "The Cruel, Cruel World." He is tied to the prop tree. The villain on the extreme left is Billy Frainy. In the doorway are Louise Fazenda and Gale Henry.
Three directors under whom Wanda Hawley, new Realert star, has worked during the last few months, have written Morris Kohn, president of Realert, congratulating him on his acquisition of the services of the actress and praising the accomplishments of Miss Hawley.

Cecil B. De Mille, director-general of Famous Players-Lasky, is quoted as declaring to Mr. Kohn: "I consider her one of the most promising young actresses in the entire motion picture field, and I heartily concur with your judgment in engaging her for stellar purposes in Realert productions."

Mr. Crisp has directed eight Paramount Artcraft pictures in which Miss Hawley has appeared as leading woman. "You can say for me," he wrote to Mr. Kohn, "that, from this work, I have won her right to stardom through youth, beauty and an ability to listen to reason."

She Is Willing Worker

"Let me make my statement clear to you. I want you particularly to understand that last portion, which I consider the most important of all. Wanda Hawley's youthfulness and her remarkable blonde beauty would have availed her nothing if at all times she had not been ready and willing to work hard and to accept the advice of persons more experienced than she.

"Wanda Hawley profits by her own mistakes and by the mistakes of others. And because she is and always has been so alive to learn I am willing to stake my reputation on the statement that she is one of the most promising actresses who has ever been raised to stardom."

"Further," he continued, "Wanda Hawley has a period of successful star-personality. Her fan letters and her reviews show that she's getting across an audience in a remarkable manner. I am convinced that she will score a tremendous success with Realert."

Woods Compliments Her

Mr. Woods, who some years ago was an assistant director to Cecil B. De Mille, gave Wanda Hawley, then a film novice, her first lessons in makeup and makeup restrictions. He was the first and only producer in which they worked together was the Cecil B. De Mille serial, "Old Wives' Tales." Miss Hawley was chosen to direct her first production as a Realart Star.

"I feel that good fortune has traveled along parallel paths for Miss Hawley and myself," he says. "From the first day I met her we have both gone ahead, and now we are both a star and myself as a director. I want to say for Miss Hawley that her youth, remarkable beauty and real acting ability have been important factors in bringing her to stardom."

"I already have directed her in one picture, "Double Speed." She secured a real success opposite Wallace Reid. In fact, it is in delicious comedies of this sort that Miss Hawley has been at her best. Of course, she is a finished player and has been very fine in strongly dramatic roles."

Roland Lee is Signed by Ince for Prominent Roles

Roland Lee, who will be remembered for his work in Enid Bennett's "The Woman in the Suitcase," has been placed under a long-term contract by Thomas H. Ince to play prominent roles. The young player is under a characterization in the new Hobart Bosworth production, "Mr. McNier."

Producers Enthusiastic

Theodore C. Deitch and Arthur F. Beck are very enthusiastic over the results obtained in their new Gibraltar picture, Augustus Thomas' "The Harvest Moon," starring Doris Kenyon, which will be distributed by W. H. Hodkinson. A recent trade showing brought commendatory words from many first-run exhibitors.

Langemack President First Run Association

"Other Men's Shoes" First Picture Chosen by Milwau-kee Organization

Officers elected by the Milwaukee Associated First Run Theatres, organized recently by neighborhood houses for the purpose of obtaining initial showings on productions, follow: President, Ernest Langemack of the Colonial theatre; vice-president, L. Plate of the Climax; secretary, Fred Siegert of the Regent; treasurer, M. Rice of the State.

Other members are Earl Rice of the New Riviera; S. Bauer of the Venus and Atlas; Harry Berlowitz of the Climax; A. Dietz of the Savoy; J. H. Silliman of the Downer and Astor; A. L. Bartlett of the Empire; F. Breummer of the Idle Hour; and Joseph Schwartz owner of several houses including the Riviera and the Liberty.

In addition to combining for the purchase of the pictures, the exhibitors have arranged a joint newspaper and street car advertising campaign to drive home the fact that the public may see the latest motion pictures in the neighborhood houses as well as in the downtown houses. The first picture selected for first-run presentation by the associated exhibitors was the Pathé special, "Other Men's Shoes," an Edgar Lewis production.

Both the public and the newspapers editorially have accepted the new organization favorably. The Wisconsin News said: "These men are pioneers. They thought of something new and did it. Therefore, they merit the congratulation of all progressive citizens."

Americanism Board Reorganized After Death of Pullman

Owing to the death of Major R. W. Pullman, who was secretary of the Americanization committee organized by Franklin K. Lane while secretary of the interior, the active efforts of the committee were halted. A reorganization has been effected, however, with W. A. Ryan as its executive secretary, with offices at 1239 Broadway. Mr. Ryan formerly was comptroller of the United States reclamation service and served as secretary of the railroad wage commission, of which Mr. Lane was chairman.

In answer to the invitation of Chairman Lane nearly all the leading producers, directors, stars and distributors have signified their intention to co-operate in the making of one and two-reel films in which shall be embodied lessons in practical Americanism.

Among the stars who have volunteered to assist in the making of films are Lionel Barrymore, Irenee Castle Tre-main, George Fawcett, George Fitz-maurice, Tom Mix, Chester Conklin, Dorothy Phillips and Norma and Constance Talmadge.

In the preliminary work of this committee the distribution of trailers embodying extracts from the speeches and state papers of Lincoln and epigrammatic utterances by Mr. Lane and Herbert Hoover, all the national distributing concerns are co-operating. Nine thousand trailers are now in circulation.

Howard & Wells Manager Ties Up With Bookstores

Aided by a big exploitation campaign, Benjamin B. Hampton's Zone Grey production, "Desert Gold," recently brought a record week's attendance at the Victoria theatre. Howard-Wells Amusement Company's big first-run house at Wilm-ington, N. C. The promotion drive was engineered by D. M. Bain, exploiter in chief and booking manager of all Howard-Wells enterprises.

Mr. Bain played his trump card in three bookshops window displays on the main thoroughfare, two of the book-sellers devoting two windows and large bookstands in front of the store to the sale of Zone Grey books during the en-gagement of "Desert Gold" at the Victoria.

Blanche Sweet Stars in "Leona Goes a Hunting"

Blanche Sweet has begun work on "Leona Goes a Hunting," based on the story by Edwina Levin. It is a light comedy-drama, and is directed by Henry King, who has just completed "Behind Red Curtains" with H. B. Warner.

The scenario for Miss Sweet's new picture was written by George Plympton, the newest addition to the Jesse D. Kaufman, an author who has been brought from New York by Dwight Cleveland, Hampton's scenario editor.

Twin City Exhibitor Watches Del Ruth Film Scenes of Fox Sunshine Comedy

While in California recently, M. L. Finkelstein of Rubin & Finkelstein, owners of a chain of thirty-five theatres in Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth, paid a lengthy visit to the William Fox studios in Hollywood for the purpose of acquainting himself with the stars and the executives of the plant.

Being introduced to Hampton Del Ruth, who supervises all the Sunshine comedies and at present is engaged in cutting and titling the Sunshine special, Mr. Finkelstein displayed interest in the five-reel comedy and went into session with the supervising director upon the details of the production.

Is Likeable Comedy

"This is the kind of comedy we like," said Mr. Finkelstein, after viewing several sections of the film and watching various incidents filmed for last-minute additions to the production. Mr. Del Ruth has found it necessary to round out a spot or two in the action of the story and has taken several additional views of the seventy-five Sunshine widows who dress the background of the whole picture.

"It is the kind of comedy screen entertainment that I would like to buy for my patrons," continued the theatre owner. "I realize that it is difficult to outline a definite plot or story in connection with a comedy production of this nature, but I think I have seen enough to convince me that it will shape into a very fine piece of work."

Mrs. Finkelstein Present

Mr. Del Ruth escorted Mr. Finkelstein through the Fox lot, showing him the entire comedy section of the plant, including the large new dark stage erected there, which is used for both comedy and straight dramatic productions.

Mrs. Finkelstein accompanied her husband on his tour of the studios and the party included also Jauouis Sloto and Lazare Guggenheim. Before leaving the studios Mr. Finkelstein and his party posed for the Fox cameraman with Madalaine Traverse, and carried away with them several copies of the photos for use in the lobbies of the chain of theatres.

"I feel quite sure," Mr. Finkelstein declared, "that Mr. Fox's big special Sunshine comedy, under whatever title may be selected for it, will be booked for runs in every one of our chain of theatres. We shall anxiously await its completion."

Pictures Unharmful To Normal Children

Data Shows Delinquency Not Result of Evil Effects Of Films on Child

Data gathered by the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures and the American Probation association from the chief juvenile officers in the principal cities of the country shows that motion pictures do not have evil effects on child life as so often has been contended.

Although charges have been made that pictures cause juvenile delinquency, the board's investigation proves that, in a majority of the cases, such charges are misstatements.

Few Blame Pictures

One officer reported that of the thousands of boys and girls arraigned in his court, there had been few who testified, or of whom the investigators could learn, that they had committed any wrong because of so-called baleful effects of the pictures.

Out of the forty-two officers replying, two of the five who indicted pictures as being a direct cause of juvenile delinquency, were from the states having legal censorship—Ohio and Pennsylvania.

Parents Give Excuse

One officer who scouted the idea that pictures have the slightest effect on children, says: "Parents always have excuses in court when confronted by the judge and the jury, and with lack of responsibility, the movies are so popular it is natural they should rest the blame there rather than on the real cause. Some of the teachers who lack initiative also blame a greater attraction than a classroom run by an incompetent person. Juvenile officers also lay trouble at movies' door to excuse their laxness."

This bears out the contention of the board that motion pictures intended for adults cannot be made fit for young people by any amount of censorship and that, therefore, the only way of meeting the problem of screen-watching is with respect to the films, is by means of special performances. Even the average show, however, is not held generally to hold the probation officers to be harmful to the normal boy.

Neglect Is Cause

Most of the probation officers emphasize that the true causes of delinquency in cases where motion pictures are alleged to have played a part, are really neglect, or neglect connected with the home, environmental or hereditary causes, and physical conditions connected with the theatre, rather than the character of the films. Thus trouble has been found to be due to inadequate lighting, to the admission of unaccompanied minors, loitering around the entrance, non-enforcement of the show's "no children" regulations, in which the cooperation of the National Committee for Better Films (a department of the National Board of Review), is offered communities everywhere.

Avoirdupois Found to Cast "Slim Princess"

LOS ANGELES.—"Twenty-five women, with a gross tonnage of 5,000 pounds! That was, in effect, the order that went out to the casting department at the Goldwyn Studios, recently, during the filming of the palace lawn fête scenes in "The Slim Princess," starring Mabel Normand. The casting department, metaphorically speaking, threw up its hands and fainted dead away. Then it recovered and rose to the occasion, seeking in the highways and byways for the twenty-five perfect "forty-eights."

Night fell. Dawn came thundering out of the Eastern sky, and with it another thunder arose—the rumbling tread of troopers in the Goldwyn courtyard. Not many in numbers—three squads and sergeant—but a host in its weight.

"DO THE DEAD TALK?"

You'd think so, judging from the way people flock to see this amazing production—the picture that brings them back the second and third time. The reason should be apparent.

IT'S A REVELATION

The subject is in the mouths of every one. Every leading newspaper, magazine, etc., advertises it for you every day through various articles on Spiritualism in their columns.

And who is not interested in such a subject? All are, and they're going to jam every theatre where the picture is being shown.

All you have to do is to simply let it leak out that you are going to show "Do the Dead Talk?" That alone will sell every seat in your theatre while you are running this picture.

The title gets 'em and the public likes the picture—

INDIANA AND ILLINOIS BOOKINGS
The De Berri Scenic Company announces the change of the firm name to the Da-Lite Screen & Scenic Company, and will continue at their present address, 211 W. Monroe street, Chicago, serving the vast following of exhibitors this enterprising concern has created through the effective results the Da-Lite screen is giving for better projection.

Many thanks, Charlie, old top. We refer to the nifty Easter card that Charles H. Ryan, manager for the Garfield theatre, has been sending to his numerous friends in the trade.

E. S. Rowley, sales representative for the local Realart exchange, came up for a visit to the picture capital in the “Bowling News” last week and they admit he’s "Champeen." He bought an artful of copies for the clipping, so get in touch with him for deals.

The aristocratic environs of the staid Congress Hotel was the "setting" for a supreme struggle betwixt the effete East, temperamental West Coast and fire-eating up and at 'em Mid-West. Suffice it to state, Joe Friedman, of Celebrated fame, upheld the prowess of the Windy City at the expense of Irving Lesser and Jerome Lewis, and 'tis whispered was Joe's first party with the romping "elephant dominoes."

Emil Rogasner, an old-timer, is to trail the suburban territory for the local Universal sales department.

The local National Pictures exchange is to be represented with two new sales experts. E. W. Johnson will cover parts of the Illinois field and Major L. A. Boening (a charter member of the old Reel Fellows Club) will huss around the Indiana "sector."

Paul Hines, now associated with the home office of the M. P. World and in the former days popular Chicago advertising representative, arrived in the City for a few days visit March 23. After a few moist hours whiled away at the Chicago Yacht Club gazing at the listless waves of ol' Lake Mich., Paul was heard to murmur: "You'd never think it was the same old place." Glad to greet you P. H., try and shorten the space between visits, that's all.

We feel duty bound for the safety of the party centered to dig him a gentle warning. The next time that palatial Nash coupe of Georges Bromley is desirous of passing the car ahead, be sure that James Salters is with thee. Give Jimmie a pair of gloves and you'll never need accident insurance of any sort.

Louis B. Goldein, Indiana representative for Celebrated Players exchange, gave the home office a visit just long enough to inform them he had set the serial "Lost City," for a week's run in Frank J. Kembsuch's new and beautiful Ohio theatre. Goldein holds to his present speed, the hardest task he has before him is to find some Hoosier theatre that isn't playing this bang-up serial.

That is the question—"To be or not to be"—as Shakespeare squawked in the bygone days. The latest info says it will be on the Northside. Wot? The new fillum building, we mean!

A "paramount feature" of note has just been unearthed by one of our daring scribes in the Film Exchange building on South Wabash avenue. The popular duo, Beck & De Lorenzo, are now known as the "Male and Female," booking lights of the local film colony.

That futile attempt to beat Wall street through the offices of Ben Marcus most likely is the "cause" of one of Chicago's best film purveyors accepting his new berth as "chauffeur" for his pal Henri Elman. He was lamped the other night on Sheridan Road, and answers to the name of "Cadillac Joe."

Erin certainly went "bragh" out at Abe Powell's Rex Theatre on St. Patrick's night. Abe, being a true Irishman, got up a real Kilkenney night at the theatre, having for the delectation of the south side O'Murphy's and MacHanrahan's, an Irish picture, Irish songs, Irish dances and Irish speeches. Even the dollar bills that came in at the box office were green.

We've discovered what keeps Joe Holtz's figure boyish and graceful. He takes exercise. The other night he was discovered seated in the lobby of the Congress Hotel. Every time one of the "buttons" would come through paging Joe Brandt, Joe Friedman, Frank Tinney, or Governor Lowenst, Joe would rise and cry "Here."

Speaking of close shaves: Johnny Mendikow was presented with a safety razor, which his brother won in a raffle the other day. Now Johnny simply has to shave to show his brother how he appreciates the gift.

Sam Rieger almost had a cold in his head last week. The cold made a try at his head, but owing to the slippery surface it glanced off and landed in his lungs. Sam was laid up for four days, but he's back again hitting on all twelve.

It does one's heart good to see how chummy the independent exchangers of Chicago are. You should have seen Manager Lowy of the Mickey Film Company helping himself to Lee Henry's cigarettes and Crimson Shoals' matches the other day.

Ed Bricketto of the Slicer Exchange claims the field are taking to Crimson Shoals with a gusto. Must be the way old Ed is stepping about these days with those smiles that can't come off.

D. Padorr, manager of the Merit Film exchange, reports splendid bookings on the Doubleday Bathing. Beauties about the local territory. No men, that sweet (not Swede) young thing with the blonde hair, is the office steno, not one of the water gurlys.

Republic's San Francisco branch soon will be a busy spot again. Floyd St. John, manager of the Golden Gate city office. hurried through Chicago to resume his duties after a sojourn in New York.

Harry Rice, the debonair Universal publicity genius, displayed the skill bred of khaki service in directing the efforts of that corps of Turcos at the "U" party last week. That they were efficient efforts was the conviction of all.

J. Ray Murray, of the Exhibitors Herald editorial staff, has returned from a fortnight visit to Broadway. He wired and dined with the "old gang" around Times Square, he says, but we query that "wined" stuff.

Visiting the Chicago Exhibitors

—With H. E. N.—

J. L. Adams of Adams Theatre Circuit, Des Moines, Ia., dismissed business worries long enough this last week to pay his respects to the trade in Chicago.

Jerome Lewis of Fidelity Pictures Company, New York, was a Chicago visitor this last week. It was business before pleasure with him, but he managed to get a touch of both.

Irving M. Lesser of All-Star Features Distributing Company, Los Angeles, could not resist Chicago's lake front scenery while en route from New York to the Coast. Friends said they saw him in the city for a few days.

BRANDT EXPLAINS PLAN

pay. The money that you had spent to exploit these pictures was practically wasted and you honestly felt that you were taken advantage of by the producers. Under the present plan it is intended that you shall have a subject featuring a star acceptable to you just as long as you desire and just as long as you feel it is profitable for you to keep that star on your program.

"There is nothing in the plan which is proposed that will compel you to take any series of pictures that are not profitable for you to handle. By a vote of your purchasing committee or your general finance committee, the Film Clearing House will, upon proper notice being given, be obligated to cancel contracts providing for the distribution of subjects featuring a star who is not making money for you and will provide for the substitution for a star that will not.

"One of the big factors that has made the big program organizations so profitable is the fact that they have spent money regularly in consistently and persistently advertising and exploiting their stars and their subjects, so as to keep them prominently before the public and before their exhibitors.

Plan Heavy Exploitation

"Under the plan of the Film Clearing House a stipulated amount has been set aside for advertising and exploiting every star and every picture released through the Clearing House. Under their contract with the producer they will employ the best person or persons available to exploit and give publicity to all products released through the Clearing House and will send these special exploitation men into various local exchange territories whenever needed to bring the product properly before the public and the exhibitors.

"The advertising and exploitation campaign referred to above particularly provides for the continuous advertising of all subjects contracted for by you and the inclusion of the names of individual franchise holders in each territory. This campaign is to be continuous for fifty-two consecutive weeks in each year during the period of years provided for in the contract. The subjects you are distributing and the individual franchise holders will be kept prominently before the trade and the public. You know only too well that a great many producers have very often stopped their advertising and exploitation campaign immediately after the territory for a picture has been sold and it was a rare occasion when your product was continued in the advertising. It is the intention of the Film Clearing House to make your subjects so well known in the individual territory that the sales work will have been done before your sales force gets in the field. And further than that the advertising and exploitation will keep the product in front of the public so that your customers will derive the benefit and in return you and the producers will profit thereby.

Other Details Settled

"The subject of advertising accessories will also be one of the important service and money-saving features of the Film Clearing House. All advertising accessories will be sold at cost plus a normal profit and your opportunities will not be affected because the Film Clearing House will know exactly how much material to order. This is important because such things as have been prevalent heretofore and will supplies at a minimum figure and to permit the Film Clearing House to buy the advertising materials at a profit to you. This plan whereby advertising accessories will be sent to you far enough in advance so as to absolutely avoid the delays which have so often resulted in the cancellation of service.

"The financial condition and purchasing ability of each producer is guaranteed by the Film Clearing House and under its contract with each producer it will be impossible for them to switch to another program or any other field for the period of years they have agreed to supply their product to the Film Clearing House.

"The Film Clearing House has also made it obligatory upon every product to guarantee that he will pay the dam ages when there has been incurred an exchange on account of the failure to deliver negatives and prints on time, and the Film Clearing House will see to it that any body who does so suffer by reason of the cancellation of contracts or any moneys you referred to exhibitors on account of failure to deliver subjects to you on time will be repaid to you."

Mary Pickford Offered

Engagement In London

LONDON.—George Grossmith, who recently was in the United States, an¬nounces that while there he endeavored to persuade Mary Pickford, motion pic¬ ture star, to act on the London stage during her proposed trip to this country.

"One of the objects of my visit to the United States was to persuade the wonderful little star to play Tilly of Blooms¬ berry in the American stage, and to act in the play over here. When I put my scheme before her she said she couldn't do anything of the kind in the United States owing to her contract, but that she was greatly tempted to do so in England."
Rewinding Eliminated by Ever-Ready Device Which Prolongs Life of Film

Elimination of rewinding, with consequent saving of operator's time and wear and tear on film due to friction in rewinding, are among the features claimed for the Ever-Ready Reel, a device controlled by Ever-Ready Sales Co., Denver, Col.

With the device, which consists of a specially constructed reel, the film is fed over a series of rollers and through a channel guide to the outside of the center of the core. The film is then wound on the reel as it rotates in the usual manner.

Rewinding Eliminated

When the reel is filled it is then placed in the upper magazine and the end to be threaded through the machine is taken from the center of the coil. Another reel of the same construction is placed in the lower magazine.

The film coming from the machine is fed into this and when the reel is finished, it is said, the reel is ready for placing in the top magazine, all rewinding having been eliminated.

No Wear and Tear

It is said that the reel will come into favor with operators not only because of its labor-saving qualities, but also because of the fact that by eliminating the wear and tear upon film due to rewinding the life of a print is prolonged and prints will be received in better condition at advanced age.

This feature is mentioned also as indication that film companies will support the reel because of the saving it will mean for them if it does what is claimed for it.

Ready in September

The reel will not be ready for the market until September, 1930, but finished reels will be ready for test purposes before that time.

The reel has been demonstrated to Nicholas Power Co., manufacturing and marketing the Power projector; Prizma Organizes

Following the recent announcement that Prizma Color Pictures in the future will be distributed by Select, and that Lewis J. Selznick aims to produce in colors a series of five-reel features, as well as shorter dramas, it became known that Prizma also has inaugurated an industrial department. Several contracts for productions already have been made. It is reported that Carroll H. Dunning, vice president of Prizma, is named as head of the Prizma industrial department. He now is on the coast in the interest of the organization. It is expected his journey will keep him away five weeks.

Prizma's list of subjects now will embrace color scenics, educational, long feature dramas, short features and industrials—all in color. Lewis J. Selznick is quoted as saying it is his belief that color films are the crying need of the present day.

Frank Condon Engaged

As Scenarist By Lasky

Frank Condon, writer of many stories for the Saturday Evening Post, and well known as a contributor to other periodicals, has been engaged for the Lasky scenario staff. He is temporarily with George Melford's organization, where he has aided in the scenario staff for the Sir Gilbert Parker story which will be produced as a George Melford special production for Paramount Arctraft.

Jackson Is Elated Over

First Screen Endeavor

Arthur Jackson, playwright, recently witnessed a special showing of his first pictorial endeavor, "Leave It to Me," a Fox production starring William Russell. He was elated over his first efforts for the screen.

The picture is scheduled for publication in April. Supporting Russell are Eileen Percy, Marcella Daley, Lucille Cavanaugh, Hal Cooly, William Elmer, Harvey Clark and Milla Davenport.

"King Spruce" Shown to

Trade by W. W. Hodkinson

Trade showings of "King Spruce," starring Mitchell Lewis, the Dial Film Company's picturization of Holman Day's story of the Maine forests, are being held at all Hodkinson exchanges.

True-to-life characters of northern Maine people this powerful Holman Day story, it is said. Besides affording the star a role in which he excels, "King Spruce" is said to exact some splendid characterizations from a number of screen favorites.

Quimby Gets Pre-Issue

On Sennett Production

Mack Sennett's "Down on the Farm," which will be distributed by United, will be given a pre-issue showing at F. C. Quimby's Strand theater, Fort Wayne, Ind., on Easter Sunday. The picture will be published on April 23.

No Vibration in the Devry!

Y ou can balance a Devry on a tea cup and it produces motion pictures as if shot from a stone wall.

You can put the Devry on a table, a chair—on any non-rocking object with four legs or none, and it does perfect work. It's in a class by itself in this, as in all other respects. See it and know for yourself.

Preview with a Devry!

A projector which stands up to that test is what professionals need for previewing.

To a Film Exchange, also, a Devry is invaluable.

We ask that you let us give you a Devry demonstration. Say the word and our representative from one of 60 cities will come and show you—in your own office.

There's nothing like the Devry. So light! So handy! So compact! Remember, a poor projector kills a good film. So see the Devry before you decide. It is endorsed by the best and most successful people in the motion-picture profession.

A letter, or the coupon below filled out and signed, lets you see for yourself. Why not send the coupon today?

for 30 YEARS
THE MIGHTIEST OF AMERICAN DRAMAS

It is a big human drama of thrills and heart throbs, replete with delicious humor and tender pathos.

Martin Berry, a stern old New England lighthouse keeper, forbids his spirited daughter Helen to speak to the man she loves.....Helen elopes with her sweetheart on the "Liddy Ann", a vessel bound down the coast.

Her father insane with rage, tries to prevent his brother, Nathaniel, from lighting the beacon that will guide the ship safely out through the rocks of the harbor.

What befalls thereafter is thrillingly unfolded in scenes that have never been surpassed.

OLDLADY 31—when produced by LEE KUGEL on Broadway, was one of the greatest theatrical successes New York ever saw. It ran for more than a year and later for long engagements in Philadelphia, Boston, Chicago & other large cities.

It's heart-reaching story revolves about Angie Rose and her husband Abe. For fifty years they have lived and loved side by side. Then comes poverty & the prospect of separation—he to go to the poor house and she to the old women's home.

At the gate of the home for aged women Abe is invited to become an inmate. Labeled "Old Lady 31"—he is the sole male—he enters into the life of the institution. Finally he can stand it no longer: "I dunno whether I'm a woman or a man," he wails and runs away.

What happens after that makes this one of the quaintest and most tender stories ever screened.

"Sex" is What You Would Expect From Title

REVIEWED BY HELEN ROCKWELL.

"A ND I learned about women from her"—the oftquoted line of Mr. Kipling's—might have been inspired by Louise Glau. The famous British poet saw her in her newest photographs "Sex." For Louise Glau reveals a few things about the feminine mind and a little more, perhaps of the feminine figure. She does it in typical moving picture vampire fashion—obviously and seductively. It is amusing to note that C. Gardner Sullivan, who is responsible for this story, shows more acumen and more real intelligence in his writing of the character of the star than shows in her rendering of it. Nevertheless, "Sex" is a lively, simple-minded and at times thrilling piece of entertainment which will serve nicely in any theater, where the exhibitor desires to make hits without the need of showing a lot of pictures to crowd the table. One particularly will party in the first reel is truly enlightening and deliciously full of thrills.

A good story配上 an original twist accompanies the revery. And the logic of it is so sound, and the moral so sure that the end justifies the means. But just the same the realism could be tempered with some degree and give quite a bit more of a more general fashion. The settings are lavish and in harmony with the general theme of the picture, and it is evident that expense meant nothing.

EXHIBITORS TRADE REVIEW

"Sex" J. Parker Read, Jr., Seven-Real Production for Hodkinson Features Louise Glau

Reviewed by Margaret J. MacDonald. It is difficult to believe that Miss Glau could turn out to be as unattractive a woman as she appears to be in the latest and most recent of her pictures. She is both tawdry and immaterial, as presented in its recent-reel visualization, which is released through the Motion Picture Corporation. Louise Glau, the featured member of the Bantam series, works overtime in trying to put across the sensational character of Adrianne Renault, and succeeds. She is quite fascinating and the role is excellently tied.

Not all is hokum and sensationalism in this absorbing picture, and the story shows Miss Glau in her true(light). She is quite fascinating and the role is excellently tied.

KING SPRUCE

Here is a story rich with the scents and odors of the Big Woods; dramatic with the crash of falling trees; filled with muscular action and daredevilry.

"King Spruce" for ten years has been one of the foremost novels of the great outdoors. All the big motion picture producers have bid for it.

It contains a sweet, clean love story. It shows the sweep of a great forest fire. It contains hard fighting and breathless adventure. It is enacted by a cast of fine players who feel the story they are acting.
Immense Power

When this production came to us for first examination we said: "This is the kind of independent production we like to take in from the outside and get behind with our organization."

We have rarely said about this, that or the other picture that it is "the biggest production of the season." But we do say about "King Spruce" that we like it a great deal; that you, the exhibitor, will like it and that your public will like it.

And we also say that we wish we could, in the course of the year, find eight to twelve other pictures of equal power, appeal and quality.
TRADE REVIEW says: "King Spruce" has plenty of plot and rapid action; it gives the spectator a real thrill quite often.

THE WORLD says: A straight melodrama that is good entertainment. Fine in detail and picturesque in setting.

THE NEWS says: We are quite genially disposed to this virile and pleasing picture.

"King Spruce" is pre-released in the large cities April 18. Prints are ready for screening in all of our branches.

Who's Guilty?

A new extraordinary situation has developed in Minneapolis. The council of that city, from reports received by us, is actually giving serious consideration to a proposed ordinance which would prohibit the erection of new theatres in Minneapolis until the population passes the 500,000 mark.

Just what general good would be served by this measure has not been made plain. Just why the theatre business should be made the target of this piece of class legislation also remains up to this moment a profound mystery.

The proposed Minneapolis ordinance looks very much to us like inspired legislation that may have a very serious back-fire in the direction of those who are seeking to benefit through its enactment.

Lithograph Economies

Even in this day of advanced exploitation there occurs with alarming frequency cases of exhibitors who purchase lithographs as if they were running a penny arcade.

There is no ground for argument on the point that good paper and a sufficient amount of it constitute one of the indispensable factors in motion picture exploitation. Despite this obvious fact any exchange man will attest to the statement that even among the leading exhibitors there are many cases in which paper is used most sparingly as if it were an expensive luxury.

When an exhibitor pays several hundred dollars for the rental of a picture and then buys about two dollars' worth of paper he is pursuing a dangerous course and one which if persisted in certainly will be disastrous.

* * *

International Trade

Out of the maze of misunderstanding that has surrounded the relations between American and British film interests there is bound to come—and certainly should come—a new order which would be mutually advantageous. And fortunately there are many below-the-service indications that point with considerable certainty to the rapid approach of this new order.

The American producer needs the British market, perhaps not in the same degree that the British producer needs the American market with its twelve to fourteen thousand consumers; but nevertheless, he needs it. And the British picture will never really find a market that will be a genuine encouragement to greater effort until it is given a regular place in the programs of American theatres.

And greater than any commercial considerations there are reasons why there should be a free inter-change of motion pictures between America and the British Empire, this interchange of necessity promoting a better understanding of national ideals. The great good that has been done by the free interchange of literature between these two nations during the past hundred years may best be carried to its greatest fruition through the motion picture.

* * *

Specialists Needed

Advertising matter of various kinds supplied by distributors should be a great factor in bigger business for the theatreman. Unfortunately a great part of it misses its mark—if not entirely, at least to a great extent.

Several exhibitors with whom we have discussed this matter express the conviction that this is due to the matter not fitting exactly the peculiar requirements of the exhibitor's business. The point is made that no matter how expert a person may be on the general subject of advertising as applied to a straight merchandising line, he may yet be far from qualified for preparing advertising aids which will fit exactly the problems of theatre operation and picture exploitation.

Picture exploitation is a highly specialized work and more than a casual familiarity with the exhibitor's business is necessary to be able to supply him with advertising matter that really helps.
Heraldgrams

Joseph Trinck and Emil Stearns of the Lubliner & Trinck circuit, Chicago, are in New York attending a conference of the Associated Exhibitors, Inc.

Harry Reichenschach, after starting New York and stirring up Chicago, is on his way to Los Angeles to aid in the exploitation of "The Virgin of Stamboul" there.

Frank Zambreno, president of the Unity Photoplays Company, Chicago, is recuperating from an operation performed several days ago.

Frank Bell, director, has rejoined William Fox and is to direct Vivian Rich in her "A World of Folly." He was formerly director for Gladys Brockwell.

R. E. Shanahan has been appointed sales manager of Wistaria Productions, Inc., succeeding Jacques Koppstein.

C. A. Meade, secretary of the C. B. Price Company, Inc., has returned to New York, after a business trip to Chicago, Detroit, Cleveland and Pittsburgh.

H. D. Goldberg, former special representative of Selznick News, has been appointed manager of the Republic Distributing Corporation's branch at Atlanta. He succeeds Mrs. A. H. Sessions.

Louis W. Thompson, president of Special Pictures Corporation, after spending several days in Chicago, returned to New York, where he will remain ten days.

Winfield Westaker, who is now playing opposite Buck Jones in "Forbidden Trails," has signed a twenty weeks contract with the Central Film Company of Sweden and will sail from New York May 11 for Sweden.

Fritz Tiddo, former critic for the Dramatic Mirror, has been engaged by Myron Selznick as a member of the board of editing and review at the Selznick Bronx studio.

Sig. Schlaeger, personal representative of J. Parker Read, Jr., is spending several weeks aiding in the exploitation of "Sex."

R. E. Wortham has been selected to head the technical staff of Whitman-Bessett's new producing organization. Tom Griffeth will be chief cameraman; Phyllis Houson, art director, and W. O. Hurst, businessman.

C. Garvin Sullivan has deferred the start of his trip around the world until May.

Peter Cernia, formerly with Goldwyn Pictures, has been appointed personal representative by R. A. Walsh, who is now producing for Mayflower.

Hiram Abrams, general manager of the United Artists, left New York March 31 to attend an important meeting of the company's directors in Los Angeles, April 3.

Jack Weil, manager of the Republic office at Seattle, and Hugh Rennie, manager of the Select office at Seattle, passed through Chicago April 3 on their way to New York to attend the Select and Republic conventions this week.

Jack F. Reilly is now head of the advertising, publicity and exploitation departments of Robertson-Cole Company.

J. E. Gossage, chairman of the board of directors of Goldwyn, will act as president while Samuel Goldwyn is in Europe.

News reaches Chicago that Sol Baum, manager of Universal, Portland, Ore., branch, is confined to his home suffering with a nervous breakdown. Handling the affairs of the office during his absence is George Bourke, Pacific Coast division manager.

Concern over the condition of John Barrymore, whose nervous breakdown caused a suspension of "Richard III" in New York, has been expressed. It is believed that Mr. Barrymore will not resume work this season.

It is a long ride from Atlanta, Ga., to Chicago, but Lester Le Rue of Savini Piano Company made the trip without incident. Mr. Le Rue hasn't a bone in the world to pick with Chicago, but at the same time he is very fond of the southern atmosphere.

THE monotony of counting up to high numbers tends to overcome insomnia. The exhibitor who uses Ritchey posters has to spend so much time counting the receipts they bring him that he sleeps soundly on the nights of their use.

Movement Started at Minneapolis To Restrict Number of Playhouses

Proposed Legislation Would Prevent Opening or Constructing Theatre For Several Years to Come—Danger Seen in Situation

Who Is Behind Proposed Legislation to Limit the Number Of Theatres in Minneapolis?

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN., April 6—Rigorous legislation is being considered by the city council here which virtually would be a barrier to the opening or construction of additional motion picture theatres for several years to come, or until the population of the city had reached the 500,000 mark. Provisions of the proposed ordinance follow:

To divide the city into three zones:
To limit the number of theatres in each according to the population:
To restrict the opening of other theatres by issuing a license only for each increase of 5,000 after a population of 500,000 has been attained, and
To increase the rate of taxation.

Passage of such a measure, city officials declare, would mean that Minneapolis would have no more theatres until a substantial increase in the population developed. This would have the effect, it is believed, of creating a potential trust by holding competition within the sphere of the theatres now operating.

The proposed law would present a bad situation. The ordinance was written on the statute books it might take years to wipe it out. Representatives of real estate companies have voiced opposition to the proposal.

May Censor Pictures (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

BOSTON—The sub-committee of the censor board on motion picture affairs is expected to report out a measure that would put state censorship of motion pictures in the hands of the department of public safety.

The sub-committee has decided against the creation of a special board of censorship. The censorship bill when reported to the full committee will propose that the department of public safety be given power to prevent anything in a film or in connection with it which the department considers cruel, obscene, indecent, immoral, likely to debase or to corrupt morals or to incite to crime.

Estimate U. S. Film Tax Is $75,000,000

Admission Fees Expected to Net Government Large Sum in 1920

(Washington) The motion picture industry is expected to give the United States a big sum in taxes during the current fiscal year, according to officials of the bureau of internal revenue, who have just furnished the house committee on ways and means with estimates of the income which it is expected will be derived under the new revenue law.

An estimated $5,000,000,000 has been set as the figure to be obtained from the admission taxes during the fiscal year ending June 30. This expectation is based upon the actual collections for the past six months of the year, which amounted to $344,529,564. The rental tax, under which $1,851,251 was collected during the first six months, is expected to provide $3,500,000 during the year, and a further amendment will be derived from the special tax on theatres, from which $1,660,435 has been collected.

With total collections for the first six months amounting to $2,756,184,907, experts of the bureau believe that $5,150,000,000 will be collected for the year.

"Don't Ever Marry" Announced as Title of Second Neillan Feature

First National Concludes Teaser Advertising Campaign by Explaining Secret—Matt Moore is Featured Player in the Production

For the past month the First National Exhibitors' Circuit has been saying "Don't Ever Marry" in page advertisements in the trade papers. Considerable interest has been created around the trade as to why, what and how, no further information being available at the First National headquarters or exchanges. "Don't Ever Marry," that's all, except the plainly inferred hint to watch the trade papers carefully.

And now the secret is out. "Don't Ever Marry" is the title of Marshall Neillan's second independent production to be released via First National, following "The River's End," the well known and justly popular screen hit of 1920. This also accounts for the careful evasion of all mention as to title and details concerning Marshall Neillan's new film following "The River's End." From the publicity department of the Neillan organization there have been frequent hints as to the great "commercial possibilities" of the title, but that was all.

From Franklin Story

The second Neillan offering is an adaptation from Edgar Franklin's story which created wide interest when it ran as a serial recently in the All Story Magazine. Every exploitation opportunity available in connection with this striking title will be taken advantage of in what is conceded to be one of the most extensive and novel campaigns ever prepared for a motion picture. This campaign includes many unusual stunt suggestions for exhibitors together with newspaper and other tie-ups which will give the showman wide scope in handling this production.

"Don't Ever Marry" was adapted to the screen by Marion Fairfax, whose work in connection with "The River's End" attracted great interest in and out of the trade. The story is one in which the hero, played by Matt Moore, is a victim of circumstances throughout. Secretly married to the girl of his choice, he is claimed as a husband by two other women, each of whom has an excellent reason for her false claim. In his efforts to explain his position in the many complicated situations that arise and at the same time retain the love of his wife and avoid his rate father, he is continually stepping from one bad predicament into another.

Picture Is Completed

The picture is now finished and will receive its final treatment at the Roathacker laboratory within the next week. It is said to offer one of the fastest moving comedies ever screened, presenting throughout many typical Marshall Neillan touches of humor which have made his pictures so distinctive.

To get the desired background for the chief action of the plot, Mr. Neillan engaged one of the most exclusive hotels in California. Here he moved a complete motion picture outfit and scenes in practically all parts of the big building were "shot." Other interiors for this production were staged in the Douglas Fairbanks studio in Hollywood where several large sets were erected.

Assisting him in the presentation of "Don't Ever Marry," Marshall Neillan had the same technical staff responsible to a large extent for the success of "The River's End," "Daddy Long Legs," and other Neillan-directed productions. Among the prominent members of the producing staff besides Marion Fairfax are Ben Carre, art director, Howard M.

Twin City Chain Has Booked Lewis Picture

Other First-Run Houses Sign To Screen Pathé's "Other Men's Shoes"

First run accounts on Edgar Lewis's special Pathé production, "Other Men's Shoes," have been augmented by the addition of the Finkelstein and Ruben theatres in Minneapolis and St. Paul. A week's run will be given the special in each of the circuit's leading houses in the Twin Cities.

Other first run theatres that recently have booked the production include the Albany, Albany, N. Y.; Penn, Uniontown, Pa.; Strand, Cleveland; Knickerbocker, Columbus, Ohio; Colonial, Lansing; Palace, Tulsa.

Wherever "Other Men's Shoes" has been played, it has won the plaudits of the exhibitor and his patrons. It is said that one of the most recent tributes paid the production, comes from A. S. Wida, manager of the Colosseum, Warsaw, Ind., who writes the Chicago office of Pathé Exchange, Inc.

"Unsolicited, I wish to express to you my appreciation of such a wonderful picture as 'Other Men's Shoes.' To my mind, it is one of the greatest pictures I have ever seen. Every character in the production is a star and the climaxes are exceptional."

Lucy Cotton Plays Lead

In Emil Chauvard Film

Mayflower's first announcement concerning the cast of its new Emil Chaud-Vard production deals the news that Lucy Cotton will be seen in the leading feminine role. The statement also says that the director Chaud-Vard has completed the work of cutting and assembling the film and now is engaged in titling.

Miss Cotton plays the part of a fascinating woman possessed of psychic powers which she uses to bring about the vindication of the man she loves. The character, it is stated, is an unusual one, abounding in opportunities for emotional acting.

In addition to Miss Cotton, the cast includes a number of players well known to the Broadway stage and screen. No individual player will be featured, however. The picture will be designated as "An Emil Chaud-Vard Production."

New April Publication

Weekly distribution of Goldwyn-Bray Comic, a new single-reel subject, will begin on April 18. The new issue is a split reel presenting a comedy cartoon in the first half, with what are termed "Lampoons" in the second. The latter will be comprised of selected jokes from the humor columns.

The cartoon phase will present such well-known characters as Happy Hooligan, the Shenanigan Kids, and Judge Rumhauser and his pal, Silk Hat Harry.
Selznick Enterprises Convention
Held in New York City This Week

Managers of Select and Republic Offices from All Parts of United States and Canada Meet With Executives at Hotel Astor

By JAMES BEECROFT

NEW YORK, April 6.—(Special to Exhibitors Herald.)—With managers of Select and Republic exchanges from all parts of the United States and Canada assembled, the convention of the Selznick Enterprises opened in the College room of the Astor Hotel here yesterday, General Manager Sam E. Morris presiding.

Every man present was urged to make at least one suggestion during the present gathering which will be valuable to the Selznick organization.

Assembly is an Optimistic One

Only recently, the organization completed what officers of the company regard as the most successful sales drive in the history of the motion picture industry, and it was an optimistic gathering. On every side, predictions were freely made that the Selznick Enterprises would exceed its remarkable 1919 record during 1920.

Lewis J. Selznick, head of the organization, was introduced to the assembly by General Manager Morris shortly after the first business session was called to order at 11:40 o'clock. His appearance was the signal for a long and enthusiastic ovation.

Thanks Men for Loyalty

Mr. Selznick spoke briefly, thanking the men for their loyalty to which he attributed the rapid progress of Selznick Enterprises, and congratulated the winners of the recent sales drive. He encouraged the losers, urging them to greater efforts during the coming year.

Herbert Kaufman was next introduced. He congratulated the men on their achievements and expressed his warm personal admiration for Lewis J. Selznick.

Briton N. Busch, president of the Republic Distributing Corporation, was next introduced and delivered a short address reviewing the rapid strides of his organization during the past few months.

Morris Delivers Address

Sam E. Morris, general manager, then took the floor. He urged representatives to contribute at least one constructive idea during the convention. He told the men to commend or criticize if they had cause for either.

"The purpose of the convention is better organization," he said, "and less men on the ground such as exchange managers and salesmen offer advice, it will be impossible to accomplish this purpose.

"Sales Manager Rogers, after being introduced, thanked the men for recently accomplishing "the most successful sales drive in the history of the industry."

Charles C. Pettijohn, assistant to Lewis J. Selznick, was next introduced and delivered a brief address.

Youngest Officer Introduced

David B. Selznick was then introduced as the youngest official of the Selznick Enterprises. He delivered an address asking the men to put forth their greatest efforts to make the Selznick organization the best and the biggest. He explained how Selznick intended to increase production and the quality of its product.

"Director of Advertising and Publicity Kugel delivered an address stating his department is endeavoring to give constructive publicity, the kind that helps salesmen sell pictures and exhibitors to show them.

He stated that in the near future, every newspaper of any size will carry some publicity for Selznick Enterprises.

Issue Daily Bulletins

Warren Lewis, editor of the "Brain Exchange," the Selznick house organ, is getting out a daily issue during the convention.

A luncheon was held at noon yesterday at the North Ball room of the Astor Hotel with representatives of the trade press in attendance. After the luncheon, visiting members and officials went by automobile to the Selznick studios at Fort Lee and the Bronx where the Selznick parts were shown in Vetericuts.

Last night, the visiting members and officials enjoyed a theatre party.

Charles McClintock is in charge of the entertainment during the convention.

Today's session is being held at Lower roof. The convention will continue throughout the week.

Those in Attendance

Among those present are included the following Select managers: Charles Wald, Toronto: W. E. Chaloner, New York; Benjamin Rogers, Boston: A. W. Moses, Buffalo; Ben Beadell, Chicago; J. A. Conant, Cincinnati; S. S. Webster, Cleveland: C. C. Ezell, Dallas; Ben Cohen, Denver; James Kent, Detroit; Sam Sax, Indianapolis; Cliff Reid, Kansas City; A. V. Mack, Los Angeles: H. A. Rathner, Minneapolis: Morris Saber, New Haven; H. G. Till, New Orleans: Henry Siegel, New York: C. W. Taylor, Oklahoma City; Max Mild, Philadelphia; Leo Levinson, Pittsburgh; S. W. Hatch, St. Louis; T. C. Malcolm, Salt Lake City; H. L. Knappen, San Francisco; S. Hugh McFadden, Seattle; J. M. Millen, Washington; V. P. Whitaker, general representative: E. C. Fielder, field representative.

From the Select Canadian organization are: Phil Kauffman, managing director; H. E. Kissock, Calgary; Earl Kram, Montreal; James McSween, St. John; W. A. Kent, Toronto; T. W. Bailey, VanCouver: Dan Freeman, Winnipeg.

Exploitation representatives here include: Ed Danforth, Atlanta: A. J. Sharrock, Buffalo; L. A. Young, Philadelphia; W. M. Merkle, Boston; James Carrier, Cincinnati: Edward Carrier, Cleveland.

Assistant managers present are: F. J. Scheuerman, Cleveland: Edwin Silverman, Chicago.

From the Select New York offices are: Assistant General Manager J. J. Rotchford; Charles Steel, general auditor: Watt L. Parker, plan book editor: Randall Whitlock, assistant general manager: James Solomon, service department: Lee S. Ferguson, associate director of publicity, and Lowell Cash, publicity department.

Republic Managers Present

Author League Hits At Picture Censors Issues Statement Decrying Mutilation of Films By Politicians

At a recent meeting of the Authors’ League, leading authors of the country took a unanimous position against state censorship of motion pictures. Now that some of the best modern novels and more important magazine contributions are being adapted to motion picture form, the authors realize that they may not afford to have their literary works when translated to the screen mutilated by the stupid action of politically appointed censors. The following is a statement of the position which the Authors’ League adopted:

“Legalized censorship of the film is a dangerous departure in a free country. It is no less dangerous than a censorship of the press or the stage, for it places a ban on ideas. The inherent improper and immoral film can be eradicated by the same methods as are used against improper and immoral and books or plays. It may be the making of films a matter of political influence and result in consequent abuse of power. It does not reflect public opinion, but merely the professional views of the censors themselves. The experiment which has been tried in other states does not warrant making such a radical departure from the principles upon which our government is founded. Nor does there appear to be the necessity for that departure. Great has been the improvement of the film in recent years and much more rapid were the menace of censorship eliminated and the art allowed to develop along its natural lines, governed by common sense and the good taste of the American people.”

The Authors’ League also approved plan of cooperation with the National Board of Review, looking toward the betterment of motion pictures through improvement in scenario writing. At the recent meeting were Henry Syndor Harrison, George Creel, George Middleton, Rex Beach, James T. Battle, Andrew B. Lippman, Arthur Somers Roche, Channing Pollock, Leroy Scott, Orson Lowe, Percy Mackaye, Cleves Kinkead, Rupert Hughes.

Abrams Denies Story In Theatrical Paper Says United Artists Issuing Exclusively Through Own Exchanges

Hiram Abrams has called the attention of the trade press to the following story which was printed in Variety in the issue of March 26:

TO DISTRIBUTE VIA STANLEY
Philadelphia March 24.—A deal has practically been consummated whereby the United Artists Corporation will distribute their pictures through the Stanley Booking Co., in this territory. Hereafter they have been releasing independently here, booking direct.

“This story,” said the statement from Mr. Abrams, “like others which have appeared in the same publication, is utterly and absolutely untrue. We have repeated so often and have demonstrated so continuously the absolute independency of our distributing organization that I feel sure we have made it clear that we will at all times and in all territories, release the pictures of United Artists exclusively through our exchanges. I am certain no exhibitor will take any stock in a story of this sort.

“Our policy is to promote the publication of this kind of a story. It is not news, because it is not true. It is not good journalism, because in the case of this particular story we were not asked by Variety whether the story was true or not. They merely published it.

“I can only ask exhibitors to consider always the source of publication of stories like this and to realize that our business is an open book at all times and any radical departure in plan or policy will be announced from this office over my signature, and need never come to the exhibitors in a round-about, mysterious way.”

Thielen Theatre Is Wrecked by Tornado

ELGIN, ILL.—The Grand theatre of this city, owned by the Thielen circuit, and which is the only naturalist, Famous Players and Realart pictures, was wrecked by a tornado which killed seven persons and resulted in property damage of $2,000,000. Other motion picture theatres in the city were put out of business three days on account of electric wires being down.

Zukor Seeking Alliance With Lord Beaverbrook in England

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, April 6.—Information is now disclosed which points to the real mission of Adolph Zukor’s present visit to England.

According to advice which has reached here Mr. Zukor has formed an agreement with Lord Beaverbrook who is acknowledged as one of the chief factors in distribution in the British Isles.

The alliance of Beaverbrook carries with it the controlling interest in Pathe Freres, Jury, Ltd., and the Provincial Theatres, Ltd.

If the reported combination is actually effected it will create a difficult situation for a large number of American producers who have been distributing independently in England.

With the Beaverbrook interests no longer in the open market for the American producers, those on this side who do not operate distributing organizations in England would have to depend largely upon Wurltardaw, Ltd., and the General Films for selling pictures in the British Isles.

The reported combination applies only to the British Isles and would not affect existing arrangements for Continental distribution.

Ray Buys Dramatic Works By Hoyt For Screen Adaptation

LOS ANGELES.—Fourteen plays by Charles Hoyt have been purchased for screen adaptation by Charles Ray Productions, Inc. The acquisition was made at a large expenditure, it is indicated.

It is not known whether Mr. Ray will find any of these far-countries adaptable to his own personal uses, but the new star-producer is said to have put over a business coup by the acquisition of the fourteen Hoyt comedies for the company.

Through all of Hoyt’s work runs a vein of originality and good inspiration and the screen adaptations of it will no doubt be a useful source of income in the future.

It is said that at some time or other almost every one of the celebrated fun-makers of recent years has been in the Hoyt comedies. These include such well-known names as Henry E. Dixie, Wallie Collier, Weber and Fields, Top Wise, James T. Powers, Ed Garve and many others.

Ah! Secret Is Out—Universal City Rumor Exploded by Cohanre

R. H. Cohanre, vice president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces the appointment of a new general manager for Universal City, Cal.

He said:

“I have appointed a new general manager of the studio. This is my first appointee for the big job and I am confident I have picked a good man. He is a new worker considered by me to know the ins and outs of the business, because I, myself, brought him up in it. He knows a good story when he sees it, he has the faculty of making friends and of securing hearty co-operation from actors, directors and all others involved in the making of good pictures. I am going to give him a corps of assistant general managers which, if laid end and end would reach from Universal City to Medicine Hat with enough left over to fire a first class for Depression. He is a bright, eager young American, full of pep, and I know he will give us the same cigarette in the history of the Universal.

"Do Not Sell Your Theatres" First Message From Federated Exchanges

J. L. Friedman Declares Independent Exchanges Will Guarantee Exhibitors Supply of High Class Features and Short Subjects

That the organization of the Federated Film Exchanges of America guarantees a supply of high class features and short subjects to the exhibitors and will protect the individual theatre owner in his independence is the gist of the first statement issued by J. L. Friedman of Chicago, newly elected president of the federation of eighteen independent exchanges of the United States and Canada.

"Do not under any conditions, sell your theatre to film powers and do not let the big interests get even a finger hold on your business," he warns.

Removes Fear of Any Future Combination

Continuing, he declares that the federated exchanges are now in a position to buy the best pictures in the market and will be able to provide the independent exhibitor with a quality of product which will prevent any organization from "freezing" him out of business.

"There is no necessity for entering into so-called cooperative agreements with any distributor; no necessity to pay for a franchise, and no necessity for any of the absurd things that are being foisted upon the unsuspecting exhibitor," Friedman declares.

"The independent exchange is, must be and should be the closest friend of the exhibitor," he continues, "if the independent exchange men can survive, it stands to reason that the theatre owner can remain independent."

"There is a temptation, when big money talks, for the individual to listen and let the governing powers of the big money interests do his thinking for him. For the last year or thereabouts, the film industry has been hearing rumors of such and such an organization investing in theatrical interests all over the country. And, as a consequence, the individual theatre owner does not know just which way to turn. It was partly to combat this feeling of unrest, and to settle in the minds of the exhibitors that the business they have built belongs to them, and to them alone that the Federated Film Exchanges of America was formed.

Reviews Past Situation

"In the past, the independent producer—and who can say that the greatest pictures of all time have not come from the independent producer?—has, as a business man should, sold his pictures where he could get the greatest profit, and where full distribution was practically guaranteed. It was impossible for the independent exchange man to compete, in buying power, with the big film circuits, for the simple reason that they were not organized. And, in spite of the fact that the united buying power of the leading state right exchanges was and always has been a mighty buying power, and on a par with the buying power of the leading exchange systems throughout the country, state right men had to sit idly by and watch the greatest pictures pass into hands other than theirs because they were not organized.

Upon this ability to swing the biggest of deals were built the interests that have attempted to take from the exhibitor what he has built by years of sticking to his own business—his theatre.

"Now that the independent exchanges are organized into the Federated, independent producers will not have to seek further for an organization with power and money to swing the biggest of purchases, and with an exchange system that will guarantee national and Canadian distribution to the picture purchased. Exhibitors will not have to worry about the question 'To sell or not to sell.' Films will be available to them through the Federated Exchanges in their various territories, at a price that is fundamentally right. And as a further guarantee they will know absolutely that the pictures which will be offered to them through the Federated Exchanges will be the biggest 'money pictures' made—and the most profitable short subjects as well.'

Negotiations with the independent producers are still under way. Announcement of the product purchased is expected within a few days.

Corporation Is Formed

FUEBLO, COL.—Floyd Fairyland Film Corporation has filed articles of incorporation for the purpose of producing and selling motion pictures of interest and amusing subjects. Capitalization is placed at $250,000. Incorporators are John W. C. Floyd, Fernando G. Montoya and Albert L. Moses.

Oil Well Is Christened

By Star With Olive Oil

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 6—J. D. Willliams, general manager of First National, headed a motor caravan of exchange men and screen stars to San Diego Sunday for the christening of the Linda Vista oil well, owned principally by Sol Lesser and the Gere Brothers, local First National franchise holders.

Mildred Harris Chaplin broke a bottle of pure olive oil from the famous Chap- man gusher against the base of the new derrick, and Michael Gore pressed the button that started the actual drilling.

NEW ORLEANS, LA, April 6—"Not pitiful ignorance—malicious falsehood."

Under this heading, the current issue of Saengerette, the house organ of the Saenger theatres of this city, contains a vitriolic attack on the States, a local daily newspaper, which during the recent investigation of the Saengers by a federal trade commission flayed the Saengers in its editorial and news columns.

Brands Attacks "Malicious and Untruthful Howl!"

In course of its statement to patrons, the Saengerette declares "the States has not tried to be honest to itself or anyone else," and after reviewing a situation which resulted in the Saengers withdrawing their advertising from the States says "hence, the malicious and untruthful howl."

During the recent hearing, the States devoted columns to the probe of the Saenger Amusement Company. Night after night, it contained editorials, short feature stories and occasionally cartoons smashing at the Saengers.

Indicates Warm Fight

The tone of the editorial in the Saengerette indicates that the amusement company has elected to stage a finish fight with the States and is determined to reply to the States through the columns of its house organ.

The controversy has aroused wide interest in the city. Nothing has occurred recently which has been the topic of so general conversation.

On the inside cover, the Saengerette contains a comparison of prices paid by people of New Orleans to see various pictures with the prices charged at the Capitol, Ri- alto and Strand theatres in New York.

The page concludes with a statement in large type "We do not advertise in the States. See page 12."

Page Given to Statement

Page 12 is devoted entirely to the attack on the States. Complete, it is as follows:

"Every little haggard urchin who peddles the States on our streets is wiser than the publisher of that sheet, or whoever in its employ is responsible for the drive which has been making the States the laughing stock of every town in which it circulates and, more particularly, of this city—"For every gamin on our streets knows

First National's Negotiations With Associated Producers Still Pending

Executives and Exhibitors' Defense Committee Hold Meeting in New York and Decide to Hold Annual Convention in Chicago, Beginning April 26

Salient phases of the important special joint meeting of the executive committee and the exhibitors' defense committee of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., held in New York on March 29 and 30, were:

- Consideration of the details of the distributing arrangements sought by Associated Producers, known as the "Big Six":
- Decision to hold the annual convention of members and exchange managers in Chicago at the Congress hotel for one week beginning on April 26;

NEW PRODUCER OFFERS DISCUSSED

Final survey of the percentage allotments determined by its statistical department for every independent theatre in the country on its new sub-franchising plan, and Holding of conferences in which several new offers from producers were debated.

An announcement issued following the meeting declared that no final action had been taken by First National executives which in any way terminated the negotiations which have been in progress for weeks between Associated Producers and the circuit, or which the director members of the "Big Six" have had with other distributing organizations.

No Concluding Action

Two meetings between the executive committee and First National attorneys, A. L. and S. F. Jacobs, and Nathan Burkan and Nathan Vidaver, chief counsel for Associated Producers, resulted in an agreement of terms and conditions favored by the exhibitor members of the circuit and sought by the directors, but without any concluding action resulting, it is said.

Pending a definite settlement of distribution arrangements, members of the "Big Six" are continuing their work on present contracts, it is declared, or are planning in advance production work to be included in the output through whatever distributing affiliation is finally made.

The Chicago convention will be the biggest of the annual affairs held by circuit members since the organization of First National as an exhibitors' cooperative body three years ago. As in 1919, it will be a joint meeting of the franchise owners and managers, but on this occasion, it is announced, many of the important exhibitors throughout the country will attend, in addition to the present members.

Coincident with the transaction of organization affairs by the members, the most important feature of the convention will be a complete explanation of (Continued on page 35)

“Miserable Lie”—First National Brands Latest Talmadge Rumor

Allegations that an important sales executive for at least one prominent producing and distributing organization is deliberately and wilfully making misstatements of facts to members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit, and to many other independent theatre owners concerning the activities and intentions of Joseph M. Schenck, president of both the Norma Talmadge Film Company and the Constance Talmadge Film Company are contained in a statement made this week by exhibitor officials of First National, in which they brand the practice they charge as "a premeditated attempt to victimize and terrorize exhibitors with lies and slander."

The statement was issued following receipt at the general office for First National of telegrams from its members in the far west, requesting verification or denial of information given them, it is said, by the sales manager of one of the largest of the producing and distributing units, to the effect that Mr. Schenck had signed a contract with his organization for the release of attractions starring Norma and Constance Talmadge after his present contract with First National had been fulfilled.

"This is nothing short of a miserable lie," declare the First National officers. "One more instance of its kind and we will draw the line at nothing short of publication of the name and identity of the individual, as a warning to every independent exhibitor in the country that he is not to be believed, even under oath, and that his tactics are nothing less than a reflection of the standard policy of his organization to browbeat, bull-doze and intimidate exhibitors by any means whatever, so long as the result is a continuance of exhibitor recognition of his company as the champion heavy weight business slugger in the motion picture industry.”

FIRST NATIONAL MEETING

details of the new sub-franchise arrangement, which will become effective immediately after the convention. Present at the session devoted to this expansion method will be salesmen from every territory, the exchange managers, other Executive members, and the total body of exhibitors, both present members and future members by franchise, together with the Executives of all the various producing companies holding contracts for the issuance of their pictures through First National.

As the slogan goes, this is the key point in the development of the Distributors' Co-operative, which has been decided upon as the most central point for the convenience of members and branch managers, and particularly for its greater accessibility to the independent theatre owners who will be present preliminary to obtaining franchises in Associated First National, and who, it is expected, will attend from practically every state in the Union and from Canada.

Theatre Owners To Talk

Exhibitor co-operation will be the keynote of the convention. The theatre owners of the newly organized First National for their mutual welfare, will explain, in speeches to the prospective members by franchise, the signal advantages of the extension of the circuit's co-operative principles to increase its membership to 6,000 and more theatre owners who will participate in the direct relationship with independent stars and producers on a basis which fixes their rental costs at a certain percentage or the actual negative value of every picture published through Associated First National.

The statistical data, which has been compiled by the members of the exhibitors' defense committee to develop the details of its plan for a larger exhibitor co-operative body, is not completing the work of determining, from facts and figures compiled by the circuit's exchange managers, salmanen and special corps of field survey men, a fair percentage assessment for each picture for every independently owned house in the country. This work was started last fall, and it was thought then that it would be completed in January, but the amount of detail involved was so great that it was decided, that the time for completion was extended to guarantee absolute accuracy in the final results. Several new production propositions, fostered by important independent directors and producers, which have been submitted to First National in the last four weeks, were discussed by the members of the executive committee, and will be made public at the convention, when they will be taken up for final action by the membership at large.

Exhibitors Are Waging Fight to Open Sunday

FREMONT, Neb.—Exhibitors of motion picture theatres here and others have circulated petitions in an effort to have sanctioned the opening of the playhouses on Sunday. Ministers are making a house-to-house canvass with a counter petition. The woman's club is protesting the opening on Sunday.

Goldwyn to Adapt Cobb

Irvin S. Cobb's "Boys Will Be Boys" has been purchased by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation for screen adaptation. As a stage play, "Boys Will Be Boys" was very successful.

DENES PRIVILEGE TO MAE TINNEE

Harry L. Reichenbach Will Refuse Special Showing to Chicago Tribune Critic—Urges Other Executives to Follow This Practice

To:

Exhibitors' Herald

I am writing this to you in reference to an abuse existing in your city, and nowhere else to so far as I have any knowledge. That and abuse is practiced by the newspaper which terms itself the greatest in the world.

"For several years, on each visit to Chicago, in the interest of a picture, Mae Timne of the Chicago Tribune, has endeavored to prevent upon me to give her a private showing of the picture I represent."

"When I opened "Eyes of Youth" Miss Timne's secretary called me and stated that, as Miss Timne never viewed films in theatres, she would be very grateful if I could arrange to display the picture privately so that Miss Timne could write a review."

"I told Miss Timne that it was against my policy to show a picture privately, when it was about to open at a theatre and that she would have three weeks in which to view the picture."

"The result was, that all of the intelligent reviewers who saw and of the film, Miss Timne was the only one to find anything critical."

"Last week I was again the recipient of a request to show "The Forbidden Woman" to Miss Timne privately, and again refused and know full well that the film will suffer in being reviewed, but felt that it is a miserable abuse by a journal, which are a medium to demand special privileges and regardless of the consequences, will positively not give the young lady a private showing."

"Imagine if every paper in Chicago demanded the same privilege."

"Each time a picture is projected, it costs from three to five dollars and if we gave Tom, Dick and Mae a private showing, it would be more profitable to cease producing."

"I wonder if local exploitation men and exchange managers will agree not to give Miss Timne private showings? The proper place of a production is in the theatre, where incidental music and the proper atmosphere prevails."

This I think should be taken up with the Tribune publisher and an issue forced, but speaking for myself, and this goes no matter what company I represent. Miss Timne will see the picture in the theatre, for which purpose she is engaged by the Tribune, or my film will have to forego any benefits to be derived from the Tribune review."

"In contrast is the attitude of all the other Chicago dailies, the reporters of which usually attend the theatre on the opening day or the one following."

"I will thank you if you can arouse other exploitation men to follow the precedent set."

Very sincerely,

(Signed) "HARRY REICHENBACH,

"Vice-President, Equity Pictures Corporation."

Industry Should Aid Post Office Employees to Obtain Living Wage

Postoffice employees are important factors in maintaining the social and commercial welfare of the nation.

The men and women who are devoting their life's best efforts to this work are scandalously underpaid; a hopeless battle against rising costs of living is being waged; the morale of the service necessarily must suffer.

It now becomes the outstanding duty of every citizen, every business concern and every association to get strongly behind the movement to compel early action by Congress, bringing the wage relief the employees of the postoffice department have well earned.

The operation of the postoffice department is a high type of public service; its continued operation along lines of efficiency and dispatch is essential to the well-being of the nation.

Lend a hand to the work of getting a fair wage for every employee of the postoffice department.
Philadelphia Film Men Will Halt 'Bicycling' By Larceny Warrants
Seventy-Five Exhibitors in Three States Carefully Watched for Delay in Returning Film—General Warning Issued to Theatres

PHILADELPHIA, PA., April 6.—Charging that seventy-five theatres in the Pennsylvania territory make a regular practice of retaining rented film from three days to two weeks over the time permitted by their contract, the Motion Picture Group of the Philadelphia Chamber of Commerce has issued an ultimatum to exhibitors of the territory warning them to return film promptly or pay damages and face possible prosecution for larceny.

Warning Follows Quiet Investigation

The warning, which took the form of a circular letter sent to all owners of motion picture theatres, followed a quiet but thorough investigation which covered Pennsylvania, New Jersey and Delaware.

In many instances, it is said, the delays were found to be due to carelessness. A few of the theatre owners, however, are suspected of "Bicycling."

Chairman Harry M. White of the Motion Picture Group stated that the investigation was the result of information indicating films were being shown by theatres which had not contracted for them.

It was indicated that in many instances sufficient evidence has been obtained on which to base a prosecution in court, but it was decided to issue a general warning to theatre owners before any court action would be taken.

Contents of Circular Letter

In a circular letter to the trade, Mr. White says: "The tabulated report before me at this writing shows that seventy-five theatres in this district make a regular practice of returning prints from three days to two weeks late. Although I am willing to admit that some of this may be due simply to negligence, yet to my mind it is evident that a great majority of these seventy-five have been making illegal use of the prints in their possession."

"Hereafter, exhibitors who retain film an unnecessary length of time will be required to pay a very heavy rental for every day extra a print is kept out of an exchange. If such delay in turn causes another exhibitor to be disappointed, the exhibitor at fault will be required to pay, in addition to the heavy rental mentioned above, the full damage incurred by the exhibitor disappointed. No exceptions will be made to this rule; none are so big they can get away with it and none are so small as to escape our attention."

"There are probably a few exhibitors who still believe they can get away with unfair practices, and from information of those so inclined we might add that we have a ruling from the best attorneys in Pennsylvania to the effect that any exhibitor who uses a film in any other way than specified in his contract can be indicted for larceny, and this organization intends to prosecute any exhibitor who continues these methods."

Put Jensen on Newly Created Censor Board

New 'Portland Review' Board Outcome of Fight Waged
By Exhibitors

PORTLAND, ORE.—Two members of the newly created censorship board of three, which is to supplant the former body and which gives representation to the exhibitors, have been appointed.

C. S. Jensen of Jensen & Von Herberg, who control a chain of theatres throughout the Northwest, will represent playhouse owners. Mrs. Alexander Thompson is the citizens' member of the board.

A third selection will be made by Jensen and Mrs. Thompson.

Creation of the new board followed a bitter fight waged by exhibitors in cooperation with the public. The new board will abolish entirely the obsolete system of censorship.

Estherville Theatre Is Damaged by High Wind

ESTHIVERRE, IA.—F. H. Graaf, manager of the Lyric theatre, had a narrow escape from death when the roof collapsed during a heavy wind storm and fell into the theatre a few feet behind him. The damage is estimated at $3,000. The accident happened at midnight, an hour after the last show had closed.

Selznick Has Booked 1,644 More Theatres

Theatres numbering 1,644, representing 1,166 towns, have been added to Selznick bookings in eight weeks, it is made known this week by Lewis J. Selznick through Charles Rogers, sales director.

This latest record of 1,644 theatres is said to be more than conclusive evidence of the box office calibre of Selznick pictures.

Latest announcement of the winners of the first, second and third business prizes, the winners respectively are as follows: C. C. Ezell, Dallas; H. L. Kappen, San Francisco; C. C. Reid, Kansas City; the first, second and third advance payments are: Samuel Sax, Indianapolis; A. W. Moses, Buffalo, and Charles Walder, Albany.

Previous winners of the cash bonuses offered by Mr. Selznick to all his branches for the greatest amount of business were: James O. Kent, Detroit; S. S. Webster, Cleveland; J. A. Conant, Cincinnati; Benjamin P. Rogers, Boston; Morris Safier, New Haven; W. R. Liebman, Atlanta; H. A. Rathner, Minneapolis. For the biggest sums received as advance payment, the prizes went to Henry Siegel, New York, W. A. V. Mack, Los Angeles, C. W. Taylor, Omaha, J. C. McCormick, Washington, Ben W. Bendell, Chicago, Hughennie, Seattle, and S. W. Hatch, St. Louis.
Alice Brady Films "Dark Lantern" While in Chicago With Stage Play
James L. Crane Featured With Star in Production Being Made by John S. Robertson—Story Is Work of Elizabeth Robins

Alice Brady, who is in Chicago waiting to open her engagement at the Princess theatre in her stage success, "Forever After," is at work at the Essanay studio on her next Realart Pictures Corporation production, "A Dark Lantern." John S. Robertson is directing, and James L. Crane who twice before has been Miss Brady's leading man, again is in support.

Complete Staff in Chicago
A complete studio staff has been gathered in Chicago by Mr. Robertson, preparations at the studio having been made by Joe Darrell. Shaw Lovett is assistant director, Roy F. Overbaugh is cameraman, William Shurr, assistant cameraman and Bill Johnson, property man.

This will be Miss Brady's first picture since she completed "The Fear Market," by Princess Troubetskoy, while playing in New York. It will be Mr. Robertson's second picture for Realart, the first being "Erstwhile Susan."

Mr. Robertson has just completed "Away Goes Prudence," starring Billie Burke. Previous to that he made "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," starring John Barrymore. He directed Miss Brady in "The Better Half," and has been in charge of productions for John Barrymore, Marguerite Clark and Miss Burke.

Scenario by Mantle
The vehicle chosen for Miss Brady is the novel, "A Dark Lantern," by Elizabeth Robins. Burns Mantle, dramatic critic of the New York Evening Mail, made the screen adaptation of the story. "A Dark Lantern" is a romantic story laid in three countries—England, Argentina and Italy. The opportunities for a lavish production are said to be numerous.

Among the sets called for in the script are a first "drawing room" of the season in the palace of the Prince of Aragonia, for which several hundred extras will be used; a reception in the home of a titled family in England, an old castle in Italy and several out-of-doors scenes for atmosphere.

Those supporting Miss Brady besides Mr. Crane are Brandon Hurst, Reginald Denny, David Montero and three members of Miss Brady's "Forever After" company, Mrs. Russ Whytal, Dorothy Betts and Virginia Huppert.

Vaudeville Theatres Not in Combine, Says Federal Trade Board
It has been decided by the federal trade commission that there is no combination of the vaudeville houses of the country contrary to law. This is considered a victory for Vaudeville Managers' Protective Association, B. F. Keith Vaudeville Exchange, B. F. Keith Circuit, Orpheum Circuit, and all others, controlling or representing hundreds of the leading vaudeville theatres in the United States.

The federal trade commission, in pursuance of its decision, entered an order dismissing the complaint involving the allegations that there is an illegal combination of the interests opposed in the case, their relationship practically creating a trust inimical to the public interest.

The order of the commission dismissing the case states that no violation of either the federal trade commission act or the Clayton act was found.

The controversy arose originally over a difference between an actors' organization known as the "White Rats" and the vaudeville managers. The "White Rats" demanded that no one be engaged as actors other than members of their organization. Upon the refusal of the managers to accede to this, there was a strike of the "White Rats" throughout the country some three years ago. The complaint before the federal trade commission followed. More than 3,000 pages of testimony were taken and altogether the case was one of the most important involving theatrical interests in the country. Approximately 450 vaudeville theatres were concerned.

Film Star Is Guest at Screen Club Luncheon
The Screen Club of Denver, Colo., gave a luncheon April 1 in honor of Victor Mersereau, star of the Art-O-Graf Film Co., 125 persons, including club members and their wives, actors and Denver exhibitors being present.

Plans for a "movie ball" were discussed and arrangements made to invite prominent stars from Hollywood to be present at the affair, which promises to be one of the best in the history of the club. Mr. Mersereau is presently engaged in making "Finders Keepers."

Fox Circuit Contracts Four Chaplin Reissues
Following the showing of "The Champion" at the Rialto theatre, New York, the New York Independent, Inc. exchange reports a heavy demand for bookings from exhibitors.

Ira H. Simmons, manager of the Kramer exchange, has announced that the entire Fox circuit has contracted to play "The Champion" as the first of a series of bookings which include "The Little Game," "Work" and "By the Sea," the length of the showings to be from two to four days.
Metro Will Not Force “Percentage”

Richard A. Rowland Declares Exhibitors Can Book Pictures on Flat Rental System—Denies Combination With Other Distributing Firms

In a statement of Loew-Metro policy that fairly bristles with important announcements, Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro Pictures Corporation emphatically denies that Marcus Loew or the Loew-Metro affiliation is interested in or connected with any other producing and distributing organization. Mr. Rowland’s denial was in refutation of recent rumors reaching exhibitors of the country and the foreign, that Loew-Metro has entered into a combination aiming to secure a monopoly of the producing and distributing ends of the motion picture industry.

All Cards Are Laid on the Table

That Loew-Metro may be compelled to produce stage plays on Broadway as a step toward reducing the mounting cost of literary material for the screen; that the company will not force the percentage system of booking upon exhibitors, but will adopt it if they desire it; that the coming year will see an output of approximately fifty sumptuous Loew-Metro specials, mostly with all-star casts, and that a famous male star will be added to the Loew-Metro roster are some of the high lights in the Metro president’s statement.

In addition, Mr. Rowland points out production costs have risen all around to such an extent that they have become almost prohibitive. Salaries of all employees, from stagehands to top office executives and up around the studios, the materials required in the making of screen productions and general office overhead have trebled and even quadrupled in a few months.

Costs May Be Increased

Loew-Metro will make every effort to prevent waste in any quarter and curtail expenses wherever possible, without stinting the quality of its productions, but the Metro president makes it plain that this increasing expense may ultimately fall in some measure upon the exhibitor, who should be prepared to meet it.

“We wish to deny most emphatically,” says the Rowland statement, “that Mr. Loew is interested in or has affiliated with any other producing or distributing organization, as has recently been rumored. We have heard of these rumors reaching the trade through underground channels, and in justice to Mr. Loew I must say that they are absolutely untrue.

“Mr. Loew is not interested in any producing or distributing organization other than Loew-Metro. We reiterate what Mr. Loew made public when he acquired the controlling interest in Metro Pictures Corporation—that he did it to protect himself. The Loew theatres, embracing a chain that extends throughout the country, were in need of a constant source of supply of the highest grade pictures. Metro was and is the fountain-head of that supply.

“The same protection which he secured for himself Mr. Loew is now willing to extend to others. In other words, he offers to exhibitors everywhere, and particularly the smaller exhibitors, the opportunity to bring to their theatres the big Loew-Metro specials under a protective franchise arrangement. This protective franchise would not only insure a steady supply of quality pictures that would build up the business and prestige of these houses against any opposition, but Mr. Loew would willingly arrange to extend vaudeville bookings to such theatres as wanted that form of amusement to supplement their screen entertainment.”

Continues Rental System

Touching upon the much discussed question of percentage booking, the Metro president’s statement has this to say:

“We have given the subject of percentage booking considerable thought. It presents a situation, however, in which we have no axe to grind; we are willing to let the cat jump either way it will. Loew-Metro will not force percentage booking upon the exhibitor. We shall, as in the past, continue to accept a flat rental for our releases wherever that method is the wish of the exhibitor himself.

“While we will not force the percentage system of payment for subjects, we will meet the exhibitor half way and adopt it with individual showmen who find that it is the more desirable of the two. It is our firm belief that this matter will best straighten itself out in time by actual operation and it is not the desire of Loew-Metro to precipitate confusion or bring about undue haste in the adjustment of this vital matter. By cooperative experiment both producer and showman will eventually arrive at a satisfactory basis of agreement.”

The Metro executive cites the exorbitant prices now being demanded by stage producers for theatrical successes wanted for screen presentation as one of the big factors in the mounting cost of motion picture production.

Play-Selling Is “Hold-Up”

“The present exorbitant prices asked for stage scripts amounts to nothing short of a hold-up,” the Rowland statement continues. “In the last six or seven months the valuations placed on stage plays—so soon as it is discovered that picture producers are after them—have soared to almost unbelievable heights. Where we used to be able to get a screen story for from $5,000 to $10,000, theatrical producers now think nothing of charging from $50,000 to $150,000, and in some cases more than these fabulous sums for the rights to a stage success.

“This condition may force us into the field as stage producers. If we should it would be on the theory that it would actually save money on the gross overhead cost of a film production of the play later. When it is considered that now a screen producer must pay an average of $30,000 or $50,000 for a bare script, and that he could produce an original play in the theatre for about $10,000 to $15,000, stand to recover his initial outlay on the success of the play.
Los Angeles Interests to Film "Taylor Made" Comedies in Two Reels

"Taylor Made" is the latest brand of two-reel comedies to be produced by Los Angeles interests. They are to be marketed by Acme Comedy Company, a new organization, with E. E. Reynolds as general business manager, and C. J. Taylor as general production manager.

Mr. Reynolds, when seen at his office in the Ferguson building, said:

"The Acme Comedy Company is a producing organization that will attempt to give exhibitors and picture patrons something new. Our first product we have called "Taylor Made Comedies," and they are to be that in every sense of the word. They will be made with the best people, the best director and the best production and stories that are to be had. There is no limit to the price we will pay for a comedy that has a new angle in it.

"Our stories are to be made just as carefully as any five-reel feature, and only twelve comedies a year will be released under the trade-mark of "Taylor Made." Our director is to be the one that he desires. He is not limited as to expenditures, staff or cast.

"On or about September 1 we will send one of the biggest comedy directors in the industry to produce three big super-five-reel comedy features that will take him and his staff to Italy, Turkey and Egypt. These features, when completed, will be sent out over the country as road shows, with special cast of the people who appear in the picture and special music and effects."

Crows are Crows and Hawks are Hawks But Crows are Not Hawks

Louis Burston, producer of "The Hawk's Trail," starring King Bagwell and recently released, has received an unique exploitation angle for the serial.

1. Obtain a goodly number of hawks and use them as advertisements in communities where serial buyers might need added incentive before purchasing.

Another idea!!!
Advertise in agricultural papers for 100 hawks.

Result!!!
One hundred birds received at Los Angeles studios. Sent forward to carry their message to the public via cages in front of the theatres.

Another result!!!
Haw-hawks greeted the appearance of the "hawks." It was found that the cause of the haw-hawks had been the caw-cawing for the "hawks" proved to be only every day back-yard crows.

And now!!!
Burston has a new advertisement in the papers with the supplementary warning that though pigs are pigs, crows are not hawks.

Hulsey Exchange in Dallas, Tex., Bought by Metro Pictures

Metro Pictures Corporation has come into full ownership of the Dallas, Tex., exchange formerly controlled by E. H. Hulsey interests. Official announcement is made by the company of the completion of all negotiations by which Metro takes over this exchange that reaches virtually the entire southwestern motion picture territory.

Absorption of the Dallas exchange, following Metro's purchase of its New Jersey exchange from Herman Jans, leaves only two offices among those handling Metro pictures in the United States still under independent management. These are in Boston and Philadelphia.

Metro's southern district manager is L. L. Dent. He makes his headquarters in the Dallas office. With the acquisition of the exchange, Metro plans to place L. Bickel again in charge as branch manager. The present offices of the exchange, at 1924 Main street, will be retained.

District Manager Dent has supervision over the extensive territory embracing Texas, Oklahoma and Arkansas. Systematic absorption of its exchanges has been done over a period of two years, until now only two out of a total of twenty-six exchanges remain outside the Metro fold.

Boston Exchange Moves

The Hatch Photoplay Service, Boston, has moved its exchange from 39 Church street to 42 Melrose street.

Frankie Mann, who is co-starring with Stuart Holmes in "Trailed by Three," the Eagle series, published by Pathé, does a "Brodie" from a chimney into a net, just for practice.

and still retain it as a screen vehicle. The reason for such a move becomes apparent."

Policy for Coming Year

As to the production policy of Loew-Metro for the coming year, Mr. Roland says:

"We will make approximately fifty major releases during the ensuing year, beginning early in the fall. In the majority of the big special productions will be all-star cast pictures. We will, of course, retain our present stars; and we expect that the all-star productions will develop new screen players of outstanding merit, who, if they demonstrate their fitness and popularity, will be given early opportunity for further conquests as featured players with notable surrounding ensembles."

"In the making of our specials our studios in the east and west will be utilized. The western studios in Hollywood, California, will be in charge of Joseph W. Engel, as general manager. Our sixty-first street studios in New York will be under the watchful eye of Maxwell Karger, who as director general will personally supervise all production at these studios. Moreover we will erect new studios, somewhere in the close vicinity of New York; but our plans for this modern establishment, to rival any existing, are not now ready for announcement in detail."

To Announce New Star

"Before many days we expect to make known the name of an important addition to our list of stars. This player is an actor who occupies a position in the very forefront of the American stage. He has been approached by several companies with lavish offers for his services, but as yet has never appeared in motion pictures."
Universal Resumes Star Series Plan
With Its First Issue Coming in July
Six Players Will Produce Forty-Eight Pictures to Be Published Every Week—Managers
Believe Method Most Popular

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, announces that the star series plan is to be put into effect again.

The star series plan contemplates forty-eight pictures produced in rotation by six Universal stars. The first picture under this policy will be published the first week of July, with a production following every week.

Exhibitors Favor It

Mr. Laemmle was guided by the expressions of exhibitors and exchange managers, it is said. At conventions held in New York and Chicago two weeks ago, the unanimous opinion of exchange managers was to the effect that the star series plan was the most popular, and one which would enable any exhibitor to obtain high class Universal pictures suitable for his particular theatre and patrons.

The stars chosen for the series are Harry Carey, Edith Roberts, Carmel Myers, Frank Mayo, Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran (co-starring) and one other star not yet named. Each of these stars will make eight pictures during the ensuing year.

Better Service Expected

"I believe," said Mr. Laemmle, discussing the star series plan, "that Universal will be able to give the best possible service to the maximum number of exhibitors under this plan. We have taken into consideration that some of our stars draw better than others in certain localities. An exhibitor now will be able to book pictures by the stars he knows are popular with his patrons. He will have 'exclusives' of eight pictures by each of the stars he books. He will be insured against competition for an entire year.

"We are announcing this new series now so that our exhibitors will know that they can count on first class Universal pictures with which to fill their theatres during the hot summer months.

Care in Selecting Stories

"Every effort is being taken to make the star series the best all-around him product turned out in the business. Particular selection is being paid to the selection of stories. We have had experts analyzing the kind of pictures in which our stars have made the greatest appeal in all sections of the country.

"Those are the kinds of pictures our exhibitors want and those are the kinds we are going to get them. Already a number of popular magazine stories by well known authors, several original screen stories of unusual merit and the rights to several successful plays have been obtained.

"Douglas E. Day, known as one of the ablest fiction buyers and rewriters in the magazine world, and who at one time was the editor of Century Magazine, and later of Cosmopolitan, has been engaged to occupy a prominent post in the Universal scenario department. He has just arrived at Universal City, the Universal west coast studios.

"Care in Selecting Stars

"Lucien Hubbard, a New York newspaper man of wide experience and who recently was the chief scenario writer for the Vitagraph company, also has just arrived at Los Angeles, to take charge of the scenarios for the star series.

"The stars around whom the new series will be built are known wherever moving pictures are shown. Harry Carey is one of the most popular actors on the screen. In his two latest releases, 'Marked Men,' from a story by Peter B. Kyne, and 'Overland Red,' from the pen of H. H. Knibbs, Carey established his reputation beyond question. Among the other striking impressions he has given to the screen in recent months are 'The Rider of the Law,' 'The Ace of the Saddle,' and 'A Gun Fightin' Gentleman.' Two other Carey pictures will be released before he begins work on his Star Series of eight. They are 'Bullet Proof' and 'Human Stuff.'

What Exhibitors Are Saying About

EXHIBITORS HERALD

"I have watched with great interest the remarkable growth of your splendid paper. If you will glance back over your subscription files, you will find my name listed from the very first issue.

"I find your news columns conducted in a really newsy way. I like 'get-to-the-point idea' which predominates every story week in and week out, thereby eliminating superlatives and waste. Your stories are complete and thorough and just the kind of reading a busy exhibitor enjoys.

"A splendid and welcome addition to your growing paper has been the Exhibitors Advertising Section which has given such splendid service to the advertising end of the motion picture industry. This department has been conducted in a fair manner and the criticism of the various ads have been of real value to me in my advertising and exploitation campaigns."—Louis K. Sidney, William Fox, Washington Theatre, Detroit, Mich.

"We get more good out of 'Exhibitors Herald' than any paper we take."—Faul & Overton, Lyric Theatre, Winchester, Ill.

"'Exhibitors Herald' is absolutely the best trade paper for the exhibitor on the market."—H. B. Axline, Scope Theatre, Wenona, Ill.

"Enclosed find my check for $2.00 to cover my subscription to your valuable magazine. I surely am lucky to get it at this price."—Bert S. Lowell, Rex Theatre, Tripoli, Wis.
Productions Previously Booked Are Displaced by Louise Glau’s “Sex” W. W. Hodkinson Says Activities of Sales Force Demonstrate That J. Parker Read, Jr. Subject Is “Stampede Picture”

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces that the sales record being made by J. Parker Read, Jr., “Sex,” starring Louise Glau, demonstrates that the producer and the star have a "stampede picture"—one that everybody wants.

The announcement declares that the picture is displacing productions previously booked in many theatres, so that exhibitors can play it immediately on publication date.

Half Page Advertising

This is what Jacob Lourie, owner of the Modern, Beacon and Park theatres, Boston, did to start "Sex" playing on April 11, it is said. "Sex" goes into the Modern and Beacon, playing a full week day and a half-week house on its national publication date, and it is said to be the first production in months to open with half-page advertising announcements straight across the entire field of Boston daily newspapers.

In Springfield, Mass., Abe Goodside is operating a capital theatre, and "Sex" will be the second attraction to play there. Mr. Goodside also has booked "Sex" for his Empire theatre, Portland, Me.

Opens at Rose Theatre

Frank L. Newman and his manager, M. H. Field, displaced another picture, it is declared, to put "Sex" in the Newman theatre, Keokuk City, on its publication date as did Leo Landeau at his Butterfly theatre in Milwaukee.

After its first run under W. C. Dinen in the Harry Moir Rose theatre, Chicago, with two weeks' protection, "Sex" opens on April 25 in Chicago in the Lubliner & Tenenbaum chain and simultaneously in other neighborhood first-run houses in all sections of the city. On April 25 fifteen prints will be wearing day and in the future Chicago and all of these prints are booked solid from that date onward for sixty days there. To date 100 booking have Chicago have signed contracts for "Sex."

Skouras Books "Sex"

In Atlanta, Ga., the Tudor theatre booked "Sex," as did the Sypros Skouras chain of theatres in St. Louis, where there will be a full week first runs under the personal direction of Mr. Skouras, the new holder of the Missouri franchise of First National.

Finkelstein & Ruben booked "Sex" for Minneapolis, St. Paul and Duluth first runs; in Pittsburgh the Blackstone has signed for the downtown first run; in Flint, Mich., Charles Garfield's Orpheum plays on publication date, and in Texas Southwestern, Houston, has booked "Sex" right across its entire booking membership through John C. Shannon, the Hodkinson manager for Texas, with headquarters in Dallas. This booking includes Queen, Dallas; Liberty, Houston; Empire, San Antonio; Queen, Galveston; Lyric, San Angelo; RKO, Hildibrand; Crescent Temple; Opera House, Greenville; Star, Denison; Queen, Abilene; Empress, Wichita Falls; Washington, Waco.

Special Exploitation Planned

In Des Moines, B. I. Van Dyke, president of Globe Amusement Company, operating the Royal theatre, where two weeks ago "Desert Gold," distributed by Hodkinson, established new house records for the theatre, booked "Sex" and will open the house back with special exploitation and advertising of the most extensive sort.

Among other important first runs that have signed contracts for "Sex" are: Rialto, Newport News, Va.; Capitol, Elizabeth, N. J.; Marion, Marion, Ind.; Royal, New Castle, Ind.; American, Potts-

Typhoon Company Moves

New York Headquarters

According to announcement from the Typhoon Fan Company, the New York offices of that concern will be moved to the new headquarters from 241 Lexington Ave., to new and spacious quarters at 343-347 West 39th St., in the same building with the Typhoon factory.

This is the second time within the past two years that the company has found it necessary to move, owing to the rapid growth and expansion of business. The entire second floor of the factory building will be devoted exclusively to the general offices and the engineering department.

Hatch Feature Service

Is New Boston Exchange

Announcement has been received that Charles L. Hatch, theatre owner of Boston, Mass., has entered the field of independent exchanges and has formed the Hatch Feature Service of Boston, Mass.

According to Mr. Hatch it is the purpose of this new concern to handle the independent exchange of national features and up-to-date specials for the New England States. The offices have been opened recently but they are, according to Mr. Hatch, "too new because they realize the field in this section of the country for the proper distribution of big independent productions.

Carpentier Is Scheduled to Speak
At American Legion Benefit in N. Y.

Georges Carpentier, heavyweight title holder of Europe, hero of the world war and one of the most interesting figures before the eyes of the sporting world, will speak to the American Legion from the stage of the New Amsterdam theatre, at the benefit scheduled for Sunday evening, April 11.

On that date, the S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340 of the Legion will hold its all-star benefit for the purpose of raising funds with which to build a post gymnasium in the heart of the theatre district. The post is composed of men of the theatrical and motion picture fields who saw service during the war, and in the post itself are many well-known producers, publicity men, directors and players.

Great Crowd Expected
Carpentier, in the uniform of France, will be introduced to the audience, together with his manager, M. Deschamps. The French fighter then will deliver to his American "buddies" a message from France to the American Legion through his personal interpreter. Jack F. Rielley, representative of the American motion picture producers to whom Carpentier is under contract to star, has made all arrangements to have the Frenchman at the New Amsterdam that night, and it is expected that great crowds of his admirers will be in the audience.

The all-star bill to be offered is headed by the three Barrymores—Ethel, John and Lionel. This accomplishment alone, on the part of the members of the Drew Post, is worthy of note. With the first announcement through the columns of the press that the Barrymores would be present, the seat sale for the performance jumped to extraordinary figures.

Broadway Stars to Appear
Many other Broadway stars also will appear, and it is understood that some distinct surprises have been planned by the enterprising post. The names of Jack Wilson, James J. Corbett, Raymond Hitchcock and others, it is rumored, are among those who will contribute to the success of the affair, and all Broadway is awaiting the event with eager interest.

EXHIBITORS HERALD
William Faversham Signed With Selznick to Make Star Productions
Noted Stage Actor Now Adapting His First Picture
“Who’s Who In the Theatre” — Mrs. De Wolf Hopper Is Supporting Him

William Faversham, one of the most noted of American actors, has been engaged by Myron Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures, to appear in star productions.

Supported by Mrs. De Wolf Hopper, the eminent actor is adapting “The Man Who Lost Himself” from the story by Ernest Stackpole. George D. Baker is directing the production.

Expect Further Announcement
It is promised by the Selznick organization that the stories in which Mr. Faversham will star following “The Man Who Lost Himself” will be of the highest dramatic order. Announcements are expected shortly.

The initial Faversham subject for Selznick is described as an absorbing drama with comedy touches. It concerns an American man who finds himself stranded in England, dejected and unknown. The manner in which he extricates himself from his predicament is said to afford Mr. Faversham a splendid opportunity for an appealing characterization.

The work he does in “The Man Who Lost Himself” is announced as similar in character and treatment to that which he gave the theatregoers of this country in “Lord and Lady Algyl.” As an exponent of high-class, refined drawing-room comedy, Mr. Faversham’s work is finished and appealing.

Was Born in London
A brief resume of William Faversham’s career shows that he was born in London. Before taking up his work in the theatre he was in the Yeomanry Cavalry Regiment of Warwickshire. He made his first appearance on the New York stage at the Union Square in “Pen and Ink.” Among his later successes are “The Highest Bidder,” “The Wife” with Mrs. Fiske, “Sweet Lavender,” “The Open Gate,” “All the Comforts of Home,” “The Squaw Man,” “The World and His Wife” and “The Barber of Orleans.”

His record of successes in “Who’s Who In the Theatre” occupies two full columns, and the favorable criticisms of productions in which he has appeared have filled many hundreds of columns in the press of this country and abroad.

Subject Near Completion
Selznick considers the acquisition of the services of Mr. Faversham as the answer to the queries made by newspaper editors in their papers as to whether the artistic and histrionic appeal of the screen could continue to crowd the speaking stage for favor among the masses and the classes.

It is announced that “The Man Who Lost Himself” is well on its way to completion.

Star to Begin Work
Leah Baird will begin work in two weeks at Los Angeles on her next picture, the title of which will be announced by Arthur F. Beck, president of Gibraltar Pictures, on his return from California. Mr. Beck has completed studio arrangements and within a short time both Gibraltar studios, the one in Los Angeles and the Leah Baird studio at Chatside, N. J., will be running full blast. The latter is now being used by Director William Worthington, who is making interiors of “The Silent Barrier,” first of the Louis Tracy productions there.

Canadian Exhibitors Buy Sterling Films, Ltd., and Franchises

Phil Hazza, manager of the Canadian Universal Film Company, Ltd., office in Montreal, has resigned to become managing director of the Amalgamated Exhibitors Circuit, Limited, a distributing company in which many Canadian exhibitors are interested.

The new company has purchased outright the Sterling Films, Limited, having offices in Toronto, Ont., Montreal, P. Q., and St. John, N. B., and holding the Pioneer and Hallmark franchises. They have also purchased rights to four Olive Thomas specials and also the Facts and Follies Series for Canada.

Exhibitors, allied with the company, claim that it was necessary for them to take this step to protect their interests as most of the various releasing organizations now in Canada are either interested in or own theatres.

Enlarged Program of Operation for National Film Announced by Brandt

Joe Brandt, director general of National Film Corporation, has announced that an extended production program is under way at the National studios in Hollywood, Cal. Both National and Marion H. Kohn Productions are working at full speed to catch up with the growing demand for their product, it is said.

Marion H. Kohn is concentrating his efforts on two-reel subjects, while Harry M. Rubey, president of National, is keeping his forces busy on feature productions. As a result of this activity, Joe Brandt has announced a number of publications ready for state rights sale.

Productions Are Listed

Among the productions listed by him, including both finished pictures and some now being filmed, are: Twenty-six two-part Marion H. Kohn comedies featuring Polly Moran; Grace Cunard in a series of twenty-six two-reel serio-comic westerns; twenty-six single-reel "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies; twenty-six single-reel issues of the widely heralded Will Rogers "Iliterate Digest."

In addition to these, two National feature productions are ready for issuing. "Nobody's Girl," a five-reel little girl drama starring Billie Rhodes, and "Parted Curtains," a seven-reel feature in which Henry B. Walthall plays the leading role. "The Valley of Silence," a five-reel western comedy in which Betty Bryce is starred, also appears on the list.

Disposing of Territory

While the re-editing of the Norma Talmadge film, "Captivating Mary Carter," has not been completed, Mr. Brandt already is disposing of territory on this reissue.

As an indication of the ready sale of National productions, George H. Davis advises that "Confession" has broken all records for speedy sales. The entire United States and Canadian territory, with the exception of Ohio, Kentucky and Tennessee, has been disposed of. The only remaining foreign territory un-sold is Continental Europe, which Davis says will be contracted for soon.

Ethel Clayton Is Retained

By Famous Players-Lasky

Announcement is made by Jesse L. Lasky, vice president of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, that Ethel Clayton has signed another long-term contract to appear in Paramount Artcraft pictures.

In October Miss Clayton will go to London to make two photoplays. At present she is engaged under the direction of Paul Powell in making "All in a Night."

Flanagan and Edwards

Comedy Series Ready

The first four of a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies featuring Eddie Flanagan and George Edwards are ready for a sales preview, according to National Film Corporation of America advice.

Although a number of bids for the comedies have been received, it is said, no plan of distribution has been definitely decided upon and it may develop that the series will be distributed by the producing organization.

Constance Talmadge Busy

On Emerson-Loos Picture

Joseph M. Schenck has purchased "The Perfect Woman" from John Emerson and Anita Loos for the next Constance Talmadge production, which will be the sixth of her First National pictures. Miss Talmadge, who has been confined to her bed since her return from Palm Beach, returned to the studio to begin work on her new picture on April 4. David Kirkland is directing.

"Mollycoddle" Being Finished By Fairbanks

Star Promises New Stunts In His Next Issue For United Artists

Many new stunts are promised by Douglas Fairbanks in his latest picture, "Mollycoddle," which is nearing completion at his Hollywood, Cal., studio.

Several weeks were spent last week by the star with the Hopi Indians, where many scenes were made. After returning to California from Polacco, Ariz., he sent several reels of film to the Indians, among which were some scenes taken in their community. With the pictures went an operator, a projection machine and the necessary electrical equipment.

He sent the pictures, he said, because he had promised the Indians to show them close-up views of some of the world's leading events and also to introduce them to something different from what they were accustomed to seeing all their lives in the Arizona desert.

Should the pictures remain in the hands of the producers for the first opportunity the Hopi Indians ever had of seeing themselves on the screen, and as the adjoining living figures on the silver sheet had recently died, the redskins were positive that the ghosts of yesterday had arisen and were paradiging in some mysterious fashion before them.

Hodkinson Films Get

Successful Bookings

Marx S. Nathan, Hodkinson New York manager, has completed arrangements with R. C. Miller, booking manager for S. Z. Poli's chain of Connecticut houses, whereby four of the current Hodkinson publications will be given immediate presentation in swift succession on the circuit, including the Poli theatres in Hartford, Bridgeport, New Haven and Waterbury.

The productions selected by Mr. Miller are Beuj, H. Hampton's Emerson Hough and Zane Grey pictures, "The Sagebrusher" and "Desert Gold," respectively; "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," "The Parker Read," "IV. Louise Glum production, and Joseph Lever- ing's vehicle, "His Temporary Wife," featuring Royce De Remer, Edmund Breese and Mary Boland.

Howells' Representative

Visits Rothacker Plant

Horace T. Clarke, David P. Howells' Far East representative, recently visited the Rothacker Chicago studio-laboratory before returning to the Orient.

Douglas D. Rothacker is spending several weeks in New York with J. Alexander Riggett, manager of the eastern industrial division of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. Edward O. Blackburn, director, and Oscar Ahbe, cameraman, took a company to Louis- ville, Ky., to make an industrial film. C. P. Tobin is on the trail of industrial contracts in Ohio.

Quimby and Cooper Confer

Neilan and Kaufman Producing
At the Same Studio in Hollywood
Form a Co-operative Alliance—Merge Producing, Technical and Executive Staffs—Have Separate Distribution Plans

A co-operative production alliance has just been formed between Marshall Neilan Productions and Albert A. Kaufman Productions at Hollywood, Cal. The details of this alliance, which is the result of a lasting friendship and the fulfillment of the mutual desires of the two well-known film men who now head their respective companies, have just been given out.

Mr. Kaufman recently severed his connection with Famous Players-Lasky and formed his own company. He has la-ready planned the erection of an independent studio, as announced in Exhibitors Herald, but in the meantime while the facilities at Mr. Neilan's command were such that they offered the two producers an opportunity to realize the ambitions of their early picture days, the co-operative alliance was quickly agreed upon.

The Neilan-Kaufman combine now consists of two separate units, each unit comprising a light and dark stage and set of individual dressing rooms.

Independent Distribution Plans
Although neither producer is financially interested in the other's company and while their methods of distribution have no connection, the results of the affiliation will be of material benefit to both.

The producing, technical and executive staffs have been merged into one and by carefully following a working schedule the different departments will be at the disposal of both companies.

Allen Holubar Directs
Mr. Neilan is a member of the Associated Producers, who when their pres-cent contracts expire will release their productions as of one organization. His current pictures are being distributed through the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Mr. Kaufman recently signed Allen
Holubar to direct a series of special productions starring Dorothy Phillips. He has not yet made known his plans for distribution, but announced that work on the first Holubar-Phillips feature will begin at the Neilan-Kaufman studio within a few days.

Five years ago Mr. Kaufman was studio manager of the Famous Players-Lasky Company and under his supervision were numbered the productions of such famous stars as Mary Pickford, Marguerite Clark, George M. Cohan, John Barrymore, Pauline Frederick and many others. At the same time Marshall Neilan was a leading man of considerable renown and most of his work was opposite the stars under Mr. Kaufman's charge. Mr. Neilan had previously shown directorial qualities and his ideas on production were very much in common with those of Mr. Kaufman, who shortly afterwards engaged him as director for Famous Players-Lasky.

Promotions came rapidly for both.
Mr. Kaufman became general manager of the Famous Players-Lasky studio in Hollywood and later filled the same position in that company's New York studio.
Mr. Neilan's worth became recognized more with each succeeding picture he directed until his achievements made him one of the most sought after directors in the country.

Then came the war. Mr. Kaufman put in two years as captain in Uncle Sam's army overseas. Upon his discharge he was entrusted with the work of organizing and building the Famous Players-Lasky studio in England. Mr. Kaufman then returned to this country to form his own producing organization.

Neilan's Many Successes
In the meantime Mr. Neilan had severed his connections with Famous Players-Lasky. He organized a producing staff and made many pictures for various companies, including such notable successes as "Daddy Long Legs," with Mary Pickford; "The Unpardonable Sin," with Blanche Sweet, and "In Old Kentucky," with Anita Stewart. Later he formed his own independent producing company, and the results so far achieved with his first picture, "The River's End," indicates that Marshall Neilan Productions is destined to take its place as one of the foremost producing organizations of its kind.

BIG STAGE BEING USED BY INDEPENDENT PRODUCERS

Jans Sells Territory in Middle West And New England for Tell Production

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., announces that additional territory, has been sold for his first production as an independent producer.

"Love Without Question," an adaptation of the novel "The Abandoned Room" by C. Wadsworth Camp, and starring Olive Tell, has been sold to A. H. Blank Enterprises of Des Moines, la., for the states of Iowa and Nebraska. The entire New England states have been disposed of to Hatch Photoplay Service of Boston, Mass.

Return From Trip

These two deals were consummated, Mr. Jans stated, upon the return to New York of F. E. Backer, general sales manager, and himself from an extensive trip throughout the United States in the interest of Jans Pictures' first production. According to his statement this closes out the majority of the territory consisting of the most important key cities in the United States. One morning recently the Strand theatre, New York, was well filled for the first public presentation of "Love Without Question."

Exhibitors, exchange men, critics of the trade press and newspapers, directors and people prominent in the motion picture industry made up the audience.

Received Enthusiastically

It is reported that the picture was received in an enthusiastic manner, and Jans' officials feel that this high praise along with the applause at the conclusion of the seven-reel feature stamps the production as a real box office attraction of undoubted merit.

Particularly praiseworthy, it is said, were the comments of the audience on the manner in which the story had been told, the playing of Miss Tell, the direction and the elaborate manner in which the production had been made.

Legotie Hoover Signs To Star for Wistaria

Thomas de Vassey, secretary of the Wistaria Company, claims a discovery in Legotie Hoover, the "perfect" girl of the Ziegfeld Follies. Miss Hoover was the selection among the three hundred Ziegfeld Beauties, of Ben Ali Haggin, Harrison Fisher, and Florence Ziegfeld, Jr., as the most perfectly formed girl on the Ziegfeld Roof.

Miss Hoover is a Hoosier girl, hailing from Indiana, and in addition to being one of the stars of the Follies she created a principal part in the legitimate production of "The Magic Melody" during its run in New York.

Mr. de Vassey, believing that Miss Hoover is a potential star, has engaged her for a long period to appear in Wistaria Production, and she will create one of the principal roles in the next feature produced by this company.

Sell Territory on Film

Alexander Film Corporation has sold "The Lone Hand," featuring Roy Steward, to Dave Warner Films of Cleveland for Ohio and Kentucky. Alexander Film's New York exchange is handling the Greater New York and Northern New Jersey territory.

Easter Publication of Initial Selznick News Has Interesting Items

On April 4 the Selznick News made its initial bow.

One day prior to that date Lewis J. Selznick announced the complete contents of the new publication and brought to light the consumption of three years of tireless effort to make the news reel original and removed from conventional sources.

Selznick News is edited to contain interesting live wire items that are of international importance, including a tornado that recently swept the South was contained in the initial issue.

Political magnates played a part in the reel. Ex-President William Howard Taft, Nathan Straus, and Senators Frelinghuyzen and Hitchcock were seen playing golf at Augusta, Ga.

President Wilson's summer White house at Woods Hole, Cape Cod, Mass., which is to be occupied by the presidential family, beginning on June 15, in addition to many scenes on and about the estate also was shown.

As light touch news, an appropriate thought for the Easter season was shown in a brief incidental bit of Easter lilies in bloom, followed by a basket of fuzzy puppies.

A Chinese funeral and its attendant ceremonies, Miss Josephine Van Til, a Denver debutante, and the gang- rade of Edith Cavell, a sporting person and why he is famous—all these and a little more give an insight to the contents of Selznick News.

Bars Sunday Amusement

MONTREAL—The provincial attorney general's department has issued an order closing all amusement places on Sunday that charge admissions.
BUILD YOUR OWN STARS

Despite frequently voiced exhibitorial objection to such a state of affairs, the American theatre-goer is influenced greatly in his selection of a given evening's entertainment by the comparative popularity of the several stars announced as then visible upon convenient screens.

Granted that competing theatres are of the same class, that the plays advertised are of equal drawing power, his evening will be spent at the Grand instead of the Rialto because Jennie Jones is rated a better actress than Sadie Smith.

Ask the theatre-goer where he learned of Miss Jones' superiority, who is responsible for the rating or upon what that rating is based and he will protest, "Why, everybody knows that."

He is half right. "Everybody" thinks he knows "that." Nobody goes deeply into the reasons for it.

Everybody realizes vaguely that he has seen Jennie Jones' name and photograph in a hundred public places—recommending toilet articles, endorsing ladies' apparel, approving automobiles, tonics, silver plate, what not?

Jennie Jones' superior rating is frequently simply superior publicity. It represents a huge cash investment.

Sadie Smith may be quite as pretty, quite as capable. It seldom is true that Jennie Jones' acting ability is as greatly superior as attendance figures indicate. Film history chronicles the rise of many a present-day Jennie Jones who was yesterday a Sadie Smith.

The making of a national Jennie Jones is a big undertaking.

The transforming of a national Sadie Smith into a local Jennie Jones is less difficult.

If you are an exhibitor in a city of 100,000 population or less and your competitor holds all of the Jennie Jones contracts, you should give serious thought to the matter of converting your Sadie Smith.

You can build your own stars.

It goes almost without saying that you are paying a good deal less for the Sadie Smith series than your competitor is paying for the Jennie Jones features. There is practically no other difference in operating expenses.

There is a great difference in gross receipts.

There is less difference in net profits, perhaps, because of the greater rental prices paid by your opponent, though it is reasonable to assume that his profit is the greater since he does not cancel his contracts.

Suppose you were to spend the amount of money which represents the difference in rental prices in advertising—this to be in addition to your regular appropriation.

More Advertising Pays

If this money is devoted strictly to elaboration upon your customary advertising—to the buying of greater newspaper space, more lithographs, window cards, etc—it is more than probable that your gross receipts will soon equal those of the theatre exhibiting the Jones productions.

If this course is followed consistently, persistently, your business will show at the end of the year as goodly a profit as does your competitor's.

But there is another method which many will believe the better.

Local Publicity Effective

Using the same amount of money, the difference in rentals, the exhibitor running the Sadie Smith series can conduct a local publicity campaign for Sadie Smith which will in time make her Jennie Jones' equal or superior in drawing power so far as your city is concerned.

When this plan is followed the exhibitor may make use of all the devices that have been used on a national scale for Jennie Jones—plus a number of enterprises that have not been and cannot be nationally employed.

House Organ Helpful

To the house organ attention should be directed at once. It will be found profitable to devote a considerable sum to the improving of that publication. House organs like the Saengerette, published by the Saenger theatres, the Squawk, circulated by J. C. Jenkins, Neligh, Neb., and other house organs that have been described in this department can be made powerful forces for the local exploitation of a star.

The newspaper may also be made a powerful aid. Howard G. Ramsay, of the Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan., has evolved a method of obtaining desirable publicity despite editorial objection to the printing of motion picture news. He buys a whole page when he wishes to use a half page for advertising purposes, supplying his own copy and setting it up in the other half as straight news matter. This plan may be elaborated upon at will.

Windows Hold Opportunity

Store windows may be employed with excellent results. Goods may be displayed over cutout figures of the star to be exploited. It may even be possible to convert dry goods store window figures into passing likenesses of the actress.

The automobile salesman, the insurance sale-man, the dealer in any product which is not sold by straight merchant methods, but by individual appeal may be influenced to incorporate mention of Sadie Smith into his talks.

Merchants may be provided with cuts suitable for individual advertisements, the same to be made from photographs or stills of the star in poses appropriate for the purpose. In this field it is not even necessary to get the name of the star into print, the mere placing of her face before the public being of great value.

By corresponding directly with the star, or with her representative, you will come into possession of many valuable bits of bona fide information that can be used with excellent results. Filing this for reference, it will be found a simple matter to develop innumerable exploitation angles that have not been touched upon.

All this, be it understood, to be in addition to the routine publicity which every good showman effects as a matter of course.

Both Plans Good

If the first plan is adopted, the simple elaboration upon customary advertising, it is more than probable that the increased patronage resulting will in time elevate Sadie Smith to a local popularity as great as that of Jennie Jones.

The second plan, however, will appeal to the more industrious showman because of the wide latitude for his genius that it offers. It has also the charm of the new and the untired, the element of chance that is closely allied with things theatrical.

In either case, the exhibitor who has not, for whatever reason, the Jennie Jones contract need not “give up” and content himself with “the leavings.” There is business enough for both Jennie Jones and Sadie Smith. He can get his share if he goes after it with the determination to win.

Randolph’s New Lobby Has Unusual Features

Despite all the very good things that are to be said regarding waiting lines as drawing factors, it remains true that two lounges are better than one, even though the second one does absorb some of the overflow from the first. It is an unquestionably profitable arrangement, especially when the entrances are on intersecting streets and widely separated. Where architectural construction will permit there is no possibility of doubt as to the value of the double entrance.

The Randolph theatre, Jones, Linick & Schaefer’s newest “loop” motion picture theatre, Chicago, was built with an entrance on Randolph Street. The lines in front of the box office at this theatre are familiar to all who traverse that popular thoroughfare of an evening.

Recently a new entrance and lobby was completed, this fronting on State Street. It is by far the better of the two lounges, more spacious, more artistically decorated and generally superior. Perfectly tied as to floor, its walls are of Italian marble extending fourteen feet in height, surmounted by panelled tapestry. In the center of the lobby is an artistically carved electric fountain. On either side of the lobby are found gorgeously hand-carved marble urns, settees and benches. Solid mahogany easels contain exquisite art work and oil paintings of the current and coming attractions. In fact, Messrs. Jones, Linick & Schaefer have spent an expense in creating an atmosphere of artistic elegance in their new State Street lobby.

Grand Theatre Card Scores Good Point

It is little wonder that the motion picture has superseded the stage and the printed word as the most popular form of American fiction. It is because of the progressive, energetic type of men that are engaged in the motion picture industry and in every department thereof.

The simple card throw-away which is reproduced herewith, circulated by the Grand theatre, DeQueen, Ark., during the exhibition of “The Cup of Fury,” the Goldwyn picturization of Rupert Hughes’ novel of the same name, is typical of the class of work done by American showmen.

By impressing upon the reading public the advantage of viewing the novel in ninety minutes upon the Grand screen instead of sitting up several nights to read the book the theatre management has advanced the standing of the motion picture in DeQueen as well as the box office record during the current engagement.
Baltimore Knew "Old Kentucky" Was in Town

Above are pictured a few of the stunts employed by the manager of the New Strand theatre, Baltimore, Md., when the First National Exhibitors Circuit attraction played that popular house. A half dozen girl jockies covered the business and residential districts; a brass band paraded the streets and gave daily concerts before the theatre entrance, and the lobby was designed to resemble the grandstand of a race track. A good natured "cop" was on hand at all times to keep the vast crowds in order.
Chambers Abandons Usual Style
In "Beloved Cheater" Campaign

Stanley Chambers, managing director of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kans., has won wide recognition for his generally high advertising standards and especially for his peculiarly individual ability in the science of layout. There are few advertisements in any field that compare with the Chambers product for readability and simplicity. There are none that maintain a high standard more consistently.

But style is style, and even Shakespeare becomes tedious to the too-devoted reader. It is excellent steady diet, but occasional refreshment lends it added charm.

Mr. Chambers is too close a student of mankind not to realize that his established style of advertisement can become less effectual and lose its edge, if maintained without interruption over too long a period. Accordingly, and wisely, he occasionally makes a change that gives Wichita readers the necessary refreshment, bringing them back to the standardized Chambers style ready to apply themselves more earnestly to its perusal.

When "The Beloved Cheater" was booked for a run at the Palace, Chambers deemed it wise to stage one of his periodical changes of pace. The occasion was fitting.

LeW Cody, whose previous villainies had attracted considerable attention, had been promoted to stardom. The reception that his picture was to be accorded was naturally somewhat doubtful. It was as reasonable to suppose that the public would acclaim it a success as a failure.

Mr. Chambers, a thinking showman, realized that the logical way to present the picture, essentially an experiment, was with the most substantial support that could be given it. He realized that a good picture would be considered the better if a capacity attendance were brought to its premiere. He knew that a poor picture would be better received by a crowded house than otherwise.

Accordingly, he broke his established custom and constructed advertisements of a type wholly in keeping with the somewhat elaborative, fanciful nature of the picture. Some of those advertisements are reproduced herewith.

Readers of this department, to whom the advertising of Mr. Chambers is very familiar, will at once appreciate the change of style that was made.

No report has come to hand regarding the manner in which the Palace patronage received the production. It is not an essential matter, however, as the quality of the picture doubtless figured largely in the determination of that reception.

It is sufficient to know that the engagement was handled in the best possible manner. If the picture did not "go over," as the saying has it, it was wholly the fault of the picture, not the fault of the showman.

The advertisements used to exploit the picture prove two very important facts regarding the Palace management, Stanley Chambers.

They prove him a showman in the true sense. They prove that he doesn't permit custom to interfere when originality or variety will serve the immediate occasion the better.

They prove him versatile, and advertising men can have no better quality than versatility. It is the faculty that distinguishes the hack from the artisan, the progressive from the reactionary.

Chambers is without question a progressive.

He has put Wichita, Kansas, on the map, in a theatre sense. In this comparatively small city of the Middle West, the most progressive and productive sec-

Psychology

Mention psychology to the average showman and he smiles a bit condescendingly, tolerantly, dismissing the suggestion as unworthy of serious thought.

In nine cases out of ten the showman who scoffs at the word is the same man who employs it most effectively in his advertising.

Common sense is a much better term for practical use.

Advertising psychology consists essentially of the exhibitor's ability to place himself in the position of the man who reads his advertisements.

On that basis it may be stated without fear of contradiction that every good advertiser is a psychologist—and a common bugaboo is evaporated.

Ye Towne Band

The moral of Maeterlinck's "The Blue Bird" might be applied to the exhibitor in his exploitation. It is human to look far afield for that which lies close at hand.

James Carrier, exploitation representative of the Selznick Pictures Corporation in Cincinnati, O., has made arrangements with the forty-two piece town band at Maysville, Ky., to participate in parades exploiting Selznick attractions exhibited at theatres in the Ohio territory.

The "opry house" used the town band frequently in the days before the screen had developed to its present state.

The idea is still good.
A SUNDAY morning concert given by an orchestra of fifty pieces, the concert lasting an hour and a half and followed by motion pictures shown at the right, numbered three thousand according to the management, to the California theatre, San Francisco. At the left is shown one of the window displays used to announce the fashion show which is an annual event at the California.

Sunday Morning Concert Feature
Has Excellent Advertising Angle

An unusual event, a popular event, and an event that should make something more than interesting reading for practical showmen everywhere, was the Sunday morning concert recently inaugurated by the management of the California theatre, San Francisco, one of the notably progressive theatres of the West Coast.

In cold figures, it is set forth that over three thousand persons attended the concert at an increase of 10 per cent over usual admission prices, breaking all previous box office records at the California.

There were forty pieces in the orchestra that gave the concert, Herman Heller, leader of the house orchestra, directing. The concert lasted an hour and a half and was followed by the regular motion picture program.

As a special feature the event is remarkable.

As a solution of a well-known difficulty, the bringing of patrons to the theatre at the odd hours when theatres are not filled under normal conditions, it is of inestimable value.

This difficulty has long puzzled expert showmen, as well as the less skilled members of the profession. It has frequently been argued that bigger and better programs could be offered if there were some method by which the theatre could be filled during the hours when business is naturally light.

Many exhibitors loth to raise their admission prices as a means of meeting the increased cost of operation have made serious and more or less successful attempts to persuade patrons who normally attended the evening performance to come in the afternoon. In some cases this matter has been handled so adroitly as to have excellent effect.

The method suggested by the Sunday morning concert staged by Directors Roth and Partington of the California is, however, vastly superior to any mere shifting of patrons' plans and a distinct advance for the theatre at the same time.

The early hours on Sunday are valuable hours. Frequently, however, they are hours when most theatres are running to a sparsely populated auditorium, with empty seats gained from the merit of the performance as empty seats invariably do.

The concert solution offers a sure means of bringing patrons to the theatre at this time. Further than that, because it allows for an increase in admission rate, it adds to the profit that would have resulted had the device merely effected the filling of the auditorium.

To go still further into cause and effect, it prepares the public for any increase in admission that may be made in the future, and it is generally conceded that an eventual increase is inevitable.

It might also be well to suggest that the public which responds to the announcement of such a concert by paying for admission tickets and getting to the theatre at the hour for which it is scheduled is a mighty desirable public. It is a public that is obviously deeply in sympathy with the theatre and the things for which the theatre stands.

It is a public that will support the theatre when the theatre most needs support. It is a public of the better class, for the estate of the screen is raised from year to year and from month to month, the theatre depends more and more upon the better class of patronage.

The crowds coming to the California, one photograph of which is reproduced herewith, observed as they stood in line the specially arranged window announcement of the fashion show which is an annual feature at the California.

The fashion show has come to be an expected event. It is said that the 1920 version, which will presently be described in these columns, embraces the use of eighty costumes and special sets, lighting, mural, etc., of suitable nature. It goes without saying that the account will read as favorably as have all other accounts of California theatre activities, for Roth and Partington do things in the properly elaborate and technically excellent manner.

Rentals asked for films are a sure guide to the drawing power of the production, if they are being handled by established distributors, in the opinion of J. J. McGuiness, general director of the Gordon string of motion picture theatres in Massachusetts. He believes that the established distributor has better means of judging the drawing powers of a production than an exhibitor ever could acquire and that the rental of a film truly reflects the real value of it. Consider his views. They are interesting.

"States rights and other wildcatting provide no guide to the exhibitor," says Mr. McGuiness, "but the firm that wants to do business with you week after week does not want to sting you on a matter of rental, and therefore places the price he asks at a figure where the best information that can be obtained indicates that you will make money. The producer or distributing concern that has been in business for some time has every means of learning whether the production appeals to the public or not. If not, he will book it at a price that will make it attractive because it is low, and a low price on an expensive production is a frank admission that it has not the drawing power it was expected to have. Practically every feature of note has a pre-release showing in some big theatre which furnishes a mighty good basis upon which to judge its drawing power, and these pre-releases indicate to the producer the rental which can be asked without being a disappointment to the booking.

"In the producing companies themselves there are many men who know the exhibiting game, either through experience or observation, and they are good judges of a film. First National has an ideal arrangement for those actual exhibitors pass on productions before they are accepted for distribution."

"That is why I regard rentals as a guide to the real value. They reflect the honest opinion of men who know how to exhibit pictures, and I accept the price of a booking as a better guide than all the salesman's talk. It was the rental that decided me that I wanted "Back to God's Country," featuring Nell Shipman. Frankly, I had been doubtful about it. It was unusual and I had no way of judging if it would appeal to our patrons. When I heard the rental, I decided that it was an exceptional attraction, and I booked it for a week at Gordon's Olympia in Boston. I advertised it in the way the rental indicated it was worth. Used 50 line teasers in all the papers for a week prior to the showing, a 250-line display the Sunday before the opening, and 140 lines on the Monday and Wednesday of the run.

"It did the business I expected from the rental I was paying for it. Packed houses at every performance. On closing it at the Gordon's Olympia, I put it in the following week at the Scollay Square Olympia, and did capacity business there for another week on nothing but announcements of the change of location, and a lobby display."

The lobby display designed by Mr. McCollum was an effective one. Two cut-outs of the large bear from 24 sheets were used as stands at the front of the theatre, and the entire canvas was utilized by an announce-combination cut-outs and painted signs cleverly blended.

Grauman's Pullman Act Is High Class Feature

A presentation feature that serves the purpose of a prologue without seeming to have been improvised for that purpose, putting the audience into the proper receptive frame of mind without apparent design, is of doubtful value. It has the value of the prologue, plus the value of the independent stage number. Such a feature was recently staged at Grauman's Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles.

Sid Grauman took his patrons on a very pleasant journey. That is he took them at the rate of about 2,500 at each performance on a delightful Pullman car excursion which lasted some twenty minutes. Using the multiplication table, Grauman's playing to 46 shows a week, 105,800 folks got aboard the Sid Grauman Special.

play opens with a scene on a train depicting the honeymoon suite of Marguerite Clark and Harrison Ford. And so Sid Grauman was inspired to his "Close-Box" prologue, which revealed, with the parting of the velvet curtains, a Pullman car, wheels revolving, sparks flying, on shiny tracks, while overhead the clouds raced by.

The side of the car facing the audience was torn away to show the interior and make the musical numbers possible. The act opened with the conductor walking through and punching the tickets. Then a couple of young girls and a young chap with them at one end of the car began humming a song, accompanied by guitar and ukulele. As they stopped, a young fellow who, with three companions, was evidently indulging in that great American indoor pastime, poker, leaped to his feet and told the girls to "keep it up," adding that they had the right idea of sociability, etc. The girls next did an eccentric dance in the aisle.

Following this, the four poker players, excellently selected travel types, sang very harmoniously a couple of jazzy songs, which prompted a little ten-year-old girl, who had brought her doll to sing "The Vamp." This she did with a sweet little voice and manerisms that quite captivated the audience.

After taking quite a round of applause, she encored with a sympathetic ballad, "Wonderful Pal."

After she took her seat, a peanut and candy vendor did some remarkably eccentric dancing, which gave opportunity for one of the poker "Quartette" to glance into the aisle, where his boyish glances were arrested by a pretty girl in another seat. As soon as "the coast was clear," the ardent youth approached the pretty damsel, asking her the old question regarding their having "met before."

She said her name was "Peggy," which inspired the flirtatious one to sing "Peggy," the girl harmonizing in the refrain.

Then a baby started to cry and the porter walked in, announcing that he would sing a lullaby. With that, everybody, except the porter, gradually each sought a berth, and as the colored porter's lullaby finished the curtains closed to great applause.

Then came in one of Sid Grauman's truly human touches, for the curtains parted again, the train stood still, the stars twinkled in the sky, and a slight, cringing figure—a hobo—came from beneath the car and limped away.

Contrasted with the sumptuousness of the Pullman car, this anti-climax actually brought tears to many eyes.

The entire act was handled with Sid Grauman's usual fine artistry, for when the curtains closed the final time, the whistle blew, the bell rang, the wheels were heard to turn, the engine to puff, and then—

The curtains parted upon the opening scene of "Easy to Get," and the audience was in the aisle, the management having invited three thousand husbands inviting them to meet "Elsie" at a given corner, precaution being taken that the wives received the messages.

A life-size cutout of the star was mounted at the corner designated. Box office records at the Imperial tell the story of the stunt's success.

Subtle Stuff

When "A Regular Girl" played the Imperial theatre, Montreal, the management feigned telegrams to three thousand husbands inviting them to meet "Elsie" at a given corner, precaution being taken that the wives received the messages.

A life-size cutout of the star was mounted at the corner designated. Box office records at the Imperial tell the story of the stunt's success.

The Morgue

Every exhibitor who advertises intelligently should keep a morgue, putting into it the good ideas that he comes across from time to time, the good layouts, copy styles, etc., that he finds in every periodical that comes to his attention.

For "steal thunder" is not the purpose of the morgue. But to profit by the experience of others is the best of business doctrines.

Experience is as great a teacher as the proverb says it is. But the proverb does not specify that each individual must undergo the experience.
A small but highly effective Sidney design used for the Washington theatre, Detroit. It has the punch that rightly belongs in an advertisement for a Tom Mix picture.

ST. LOUIS' LOSS IS DETROIT'S GAIN

When Louis K. Sidney, formerly managing director of the Kings, Pershing, Juanita, Shenandoah, Grand-Floris-sant and Lindell theatres, St. Louis, took over the management of William Fox's Washington theatre, Detroit, that city gained a newspaper advertising man of the highest order. Readers of this department, familiar with his past work, will be interested in comparing it with his Detroit product.

Since Louis K. Sidney, familiar to readers of this department by reason of his many excellent advertisements for the St. Louis theatres which he directed, assumed the managing directorship of William Fox's Washington theatre, Detroit, Mich., he has introduced to that city the type of advertising that was used successfully in St. Louis. The page-wide specimen above is a fair sample of his work under the new arrangement.
Finkelstein and Ruben Managers Individually Responsible for Ads

The name of J. L. Johnston, advertising director for the Finkelstein & Ruben theatres in Minneapolis and neighboring cities, has become familiar to readers of this department because of the numerous reproductions that have been made of advertisements used in his half of these theatres. They were good advertisements in every instance, distinctly serviceable and universally adaptable. And Mr. Johnston has been given credit for all of them.

In giving this credit we were forced to comment upon the remarkable ability of a man who could oversee, much less execute, the volume of work that must be done daily and weekly for this number of theatres. Even to oversee and direct in a general sense this amount of advertising is a task demanding the willingness to work and the ability to think quickly and logically.

Mr. Johnston, though we are now informed that he does not actually execute every Finkelstein & Ruben advertisement, should be given none the less credit for his work. It is work that must take the energies of even the industrious Mr. Johnston, who has demonstrated his ability to manage it.

Mr. Johnston is something more than an advertising man, however. He is a manager of men as well. And he knows full well the value of keeping those under his direction “with him” instead of “against him.”

The praise that has been given him in this department might have been accepted by a less scrupulous man with a word or two of thanks, perhaps, and certainly without objection. Laudatory phrases have been used frequently. Most men, whether or not they deserved them, would have accepted them in silence.

Not so J. L. Johnston.

It is Mr. Johnston’s desire that every member of the force which he heads be given individual credit for the advertisements which they prepare. Accordingly, he has provided the following list of names of Finkelstein & Ruben theatres and managers. The student of advertising, in his perusal of the papers which carry Finkelstein & Ruben advertisements, papers that are very much worth perusing, will find it serviceable.

Uniformity in the placing of units, together with the orderliness of the specified rule, employed, gives weight to Johnston’s “Eyes of Youth” layout.

Trade Marks

It is futile to argue that trade marks are without value. The staple articles of merchandise that are known from coast to coast by trade name exclusively are tangible contradictions of the fallacy of that statement.

The exhibitor should concern himself with one trade mark especially. That trade mark is the name of his theatre—and he should keep it constantly before the public.

Superstition

If the motion picture theatre had done no other thing of note, and it has, it should go down in history as the instrument which knocked into the stereotyped cocked hat at least one hoary superstition.

“Eight hours for work, eight hours for sleep, eight hours for recreation,” was drummed into most of us in copybook days. The exhibitor who follows that rule today is not an exhibitor for very long.

The exhibitor who makes the attempt is ill advised.

To the exhibitor who makes of his advertising the comprehensive, many-sided force for increased attendance that it should be the “dead line” is the only division between working days.
Springfield Campaign Develops Cooperative Spread Substitute

Thinking showmen everywhere have speculated as to the advertising device which will be developed to replace the page or double-page co-operative spread which is currently popular. That such a substitute must be found is rather generally conceded, especially by those who have found it difficult to persuade newspapers hampered by the shortage of paper to participate in such campaigns.

There is little reason to believe that this serious shortage will be relieved in the immediate future. And in the announcements from all sections of the country to the effect that advertising must be curtailed, with which are linked notices of increased newspaper prices, is seen by many an indication that the shortage will become even more serious.

"Everywoman," was the photoplay on exhibition at the Home theatre, Springfield, O., when the idea which prompts this article was developed.

The exploitation man from the Cincinnati office of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation worked out a plan of selling individual co-operative ads instead of a page group. A two-column cut, taken from a feature story run in another paper and showing Violet Heming looking into a vase of flowers, formed the basis for a florist ad; a smiling portrait of the motion picture star also cut from the same lay-out, was the idea for a dentist ad. Three other ads, running to three and four columns, were linked up individually on the strength of the pretty, showy cuts. A page of space was thus secured, but scattered through the papers.

Every downtown druggist made a display of the article, and a beauty articles, tying in with "Everywoman." Stills enhanced the beauty of the displays. The Home Sotre, leading drug store, reproduced the figures of "Youth," "Beauty," "Modesty" and "Everywoman" with wax figures, changing the window several times during the week's showing of the picture, making the costumes and the posing of the figures each time conform as nearly as possible to "stills" used in the window to explain the settings.

The Sun put on a special "Everywoman Limerick Contest" in connection with the limericks it is featuring.

House Manager William Shultes of the Majestic theatre, where "Everywoman" played an engagement, had his lobby decked out with hand-painted cards, embellished with still photographs. They were the cards used by the Grand theatre, Columbus, O., for the world premiere of "Everywoman." The exchange of this special material between first-class theatres is proving beneficial, making possible artistic displays at little expense. As the cards are kept under glass, they are in good shape for second and third showings.

The most important phase of the Springfield campaign is, of course, the working out of the plan for using cuts with individual merchant advertisements instead of grouping them all on one or two pages.

There are as many reasons for believing that this plan is even better than the co-operative plan as there are to believe that it is merely "just as good." That practically every advertising exhibitor will grant the "just as good" statement is almost a certainty.

Newspapers, whatever lengths they are forced to, will not eliminate advertising entirely. It follows that the best way for the exhibitor to assure himself of representation is to link himself with merchants and other advertisers at once.

Several newspapers have limited theatre advertisements to what seem unfair measurements. Many of them have eliminated theatre advertising altogether from several editions. It is not improbable that these limitations will be made even more stringent.

The Springfield idea is one of the best to combat this influence that has been suggested.

 Ramsey Buys Space For Own Publicity

The last few months has seen a marked change in the national editorial attitude toward motion picture news—publicity as the common term is applied. It is a change for the better. Yet there are still numerous instances where the news columns are held inviolate so far as theatre publicity is concerned. And an exhibitor has found a way to overcome this difficulty in at least one instance.

Howard G. Ramsey, of the Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan., buys space in quantity. He realizes the importance of advertising in the exhibitor's scheme of things and does not skimp at whatever provocation.

Accompanying this article will be found a reproduction of a page deep display recently used by Mr. Ramsey. The upper portion of it is straight theatre advertising. It is the lower portion that commands attention.

Here, in space bought and paid for and clearly indicated as such by the border which encloses the entire display, Mr. Ramsey prints his own copy, well-written, newsy notes about motion picture people and activities.

The space is well utilized. At a stroke, Mr. Ramsey has provided the publicity that the paper would not donate and has bettered his advertising materially by making it the only place where readers of that newspaper can find the news they like to read regarding the motion picture industry and those concerned in its activities.

Mr. Ramsey's solution of a common problem is one of the best that has been offered.

Volplaning Around N'Yawk

With J. B.

The Esoteric Affinity of Scribes and Elders met at the Cafe Boulevard last Thursday for the first of the most successful luncheons of the season. The Manhattan Cheese Club was invited to join the A. M. P. A. on this occasion and for the first time in its history the luncheon was graced by the presence of the fair sex. Nelson Granlund, of the Marcus Loew forces, was the man of the hour, both by acclamation and in spirit. Nelson introduced Doraldina, the premiere danseuse of the Loew Circuit, who in turn introduced "Johnnie Walker" and "Three Star Hennessy," together with their relatives, about ninety proof and twenty-six bottles strong. Doraldina instantly became the prime favorite of the press representatives. A wise one remarked that in olden times it was "Wine, Woman and Song," but now-a-days it is "Bevo, Chicken and Jazz." However, Doraldina's latest dance, the "Malaria shiver," had the boys up on their toes all the time. Several of Loew's warblers entertained with song, and "Johnnie Walker" demonstrated that it was possible to commisserate with departed spirits. Everyone enjoyed themselves to the full. About 130 answered the roll call.

Roo La Rocque, who has just completed the leading role in "The Garter Girl," has been engaged by Burton King to play opposite June Caprice, the new Burton King star, in "The Hidden Path," Mr. King's second independent production. Mr. La Rocque is among the most popular leading men on the screen today. He has wide experience on the stage, both in vaudeville and in stock, and has been seen with Madge Kennedy, Mabel Normand, Constance Binney, Mae Marsh and other well-known stars of the screen. Production was begun this week on "The Hidden Path," Mr. La Rocque's new feature, at his studios in New York. The story, which was written especially for Miss Caprice, is said to be a compelling drama that is admirably suited to her talents.

Ed Rosenbaum, Jr., writes from Los Angeles that "Tay Martiz" is the latest brand of comedies to be produced by Los Angeles capitalists. It takes a capitalist to look at a tailor in New York, and there is no comedy in that.

The Motion Picture Directors' Association Ball will be held at the Baltimore Hotel on Saturday, April 10. If you have a sufficient number of kopeks in your possession don't fail to buy a ticket. Fifteen dollars will cost and the entertainment committee promises the surprise of the season. The plans are a dark secret to all but the members of the committee on arrangements.

George Blagden, of the Conto-Zan Films Company of Cape Town, South Africa, is in New York. Mr. Blagden arrived on the S. S. Natal on April 2 and expects to remain in New York for the next two weeks.

A great deal has been said about the party of motion picture artists who took a trip south to be "among those present at the opening of the Loew theatres in Nashville and Knoxville, Tenn., and Atlanta, Ga. However, the real surprise of the heralded event was the exhibition dancing in which Anne Luther, with her partner, Jack Clifford, registered a decided hit in aesthetic dancing. That Anne Luther can act and that her titian blonde curls mark her as decidedly 'different' is a well-known fact in motion picture circles, but that she could hold her own in a most difficult exhibition of dancing has added another laurel to her crown. Miss Luther was recently starred in the Wistaria production of "Why Women Sin."

In order that Pearl White, star of "The Tiger's Cub," Fox feature production, and her husband, the noted director, John Guy, may appear in the full light of publicity, arrangements have been made with the N.Y. Daily News to have an exclusive picture of the couple. It is understood that the picture will be run in the newspaper, and that it will be the first in a series of exclusive pictures that will be published in the New York papers.

Mr. Miller stated one of the best cures for unfriendly argument he ever knew was listening to the howling of the wolves in the north woods, when snow and ice make short their rations."

S. S. Cassard reports that business is booming in the projection business to such an extent that it is keeping the Nicholas Power Company working a twenty-four-hour shift in order to meet the demand. Mr. Cassard has just completed a coast-to-coast survey of the field and is greatly elated over present and future conditions.

The S. Rankin Drew Post of World's War veterans, composed of men and women from the theatrical and film profession, will give a barnstorming review at the New Amsterdam theatre on Sunday, April 11. The three headliners of the bill will be the Brothers John and Lionel. This will be the first time that the three ever appeared on the same bill. Other stars are listed, such as Sam Bernard, Irene Ford, Clifton Crawford, Ernest Trues, Richard Travers, Adel Rowland, James J. Corbett and Jack Wilson.

Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation has moved to its new offices in the National Bank Bldg., 25 West 43rd street. The young corporation has had its temporary quarters in the Knox building at 40th street and Fifth avenue. The new home into which Arthur S. Kane, president, and General Manager J. C. Ragland, took their cohorts is four times the size of their previous location, and is so situated, it is announced that the requirements for continued expansion can be immediately satisfied.

DIGEST OF PICTURES OF THE WEEK

IX offering Comedyart productions to the trade the Special Pictures Corporation has rendered a genuine service. It has created a novelty, and the motion picture screen thrives upon novelty.

The two reels which compose each Comedyart unit are devoted to comedy, travel and polite burlesque. The first publication included a comedy in which the action was almost entirely portrayed in scenes showing only the feet of the actors, a stretch of Western scenery finely photographed, and a brief sketch bearing upon the matter of prohibition.

It is less the content body of the productions than their novel preparation that makes them valuable. The theatre where people first meet with screen innovations gains prestige. It should be the aim of every exhibitor to obtain the Comedyart product before his competitor. Then, whether or not the novelty proves permanent, he will have impressed his patronage with his progressiveness—which spells prestige.

"THOU ART THE MAN" (Paramount Arcoraft) is a better vehicle for Robert Warwick than was "Jack Straw." The locale of the story is South Africa and the theme develops around incidents in the diamond mines. The picture is very satisfying and should give followers of Warwick and others pleasant diversion.

"THE WHITE DOVE" (Robertson Colc) presents H. B. Warner in a finely produced drama worthy of his talents. The Jesse D. Hampton studios have seldom turned out a more polished production. It is serious drama, purposeful drama, a photoplay which should be presented intelligently and confidently.

"THE IMP" (Selznick) will doubtless be received more warmly than was "A Regular Girl," the first Elsie Janis vehicle. It is by far the better of the two productions. A not wholly unfamiliar plot is handled with Selznick care as to development and amid the typically excellent Selznick settings.

"THROUGH EYES OF MEN" (Radin) tells a story of the circus lot and high society that offers good opportunities for the exploitation man. Frank Mayo, recently advanced materially in popularity, does well with the leading role, supported by a well-balanced cast.

"MOLLY AND I" (Fox) should strengthen winsome Shirley Mason's hold on universal popularity. The story abounds in heart interest and enhanced by the star's clever portrayal it should prove of value at the box office. A commendable cast supports.

"OVERLAND RED" (Universal) is a fascinating Western that is more than a display of skill in horsemanship. The story itself is gratifying, and is told by a cast of popular players. Harry Carey, the star, is presented in a role which he handles with adroitness.

"THE COST" (Paramount Artcraft) is not as convincing in picture form as it was in fiction. David Graham Phillips' clever dialogue is missed, and confusion is felt in following the production. Many scenes in which the star, Violet Heming, plays are well done, however, and others in the cast do creditable work.

"THE IDOL DANCER" (First National) is Griffith amid new surroundings with the exotic beauty of the tropics as his background. While the basic plot is not new, the unique handling of the various characters, the particularly clear photography and general completeness of the whole makes this a very acceptable feature. Clarine Seymour, as the little dancer, is a treat and she is ably supported by Richard Barthelmess and Creighton Hale. Barthelmess gives an especially pleasing performance.

"LOVE WITHOUT QUESTION" (Jans) is one of those mystery stories that hold the spectator's attention from the beginning to the end by reason of its complexities. Olive Tell has the leading role and makes an excellent impression. If succeeding Jans pictures maintain the standard set by "Love Without Question" exhibitors need have no fear booking them for the present feature should prove satisfactory.

"THE TATTLERS" (Fox) is a melodramatic bit of life taken from Henry Clifford Colwell's novel, and pictures in a vivid manner the harm that can be inflicted upon innocent victims by idle gossip. Madlaine Traverse appears to advantage in the role of Bess Rutherford, a society matron, married to an unscrupulous and whisky-imbibing clubman. The picture has many dramatic moments.
Shirley Mason in

MOLLY AND I

Five-part comedy-drama; Fox. Directed by Howard Mitchell. Published in March.

OPINION: Perhaps the most fortunate acquisition made recently by Fox is Shirley Mason, the winsome little player whose talent and frank abandon made "Her Elephant Man" one of the most delightful and gratifying pictures produced thus far this year.

If, in her future productions, Miss Mason is given the same opportunity to display her histrionic ability as has been given her in the first two of her starring vehicles there seems to be no doubt but that she will become one of the most prominent screen stars in point of popularity.

Both "Her Elephant Man" and "Molly and I" offered the proper environment for the star's particular style of clever characterization. As a sweet and unpretentious girl, she becomes so absorbed in the roles that her appeal is lasting, not only during the screening of pictures, but thereafter.

While her latest vehicle does not hold the big exploitation possibilities as did her first, exhibitors should not hesitate to book this picture, for it is a type that contains a universality of appeal. The comedy phase of the subject is clean and wholesome, whereas the romantic aspect at no time becomes maudlin.

Use of the animated subtitles while unnecessary, the success of the picture, adds to the humor that prevails throughout.

Three factors will stand out in making "Molly and I" a successful picture. First, the star, if she already has not done so, will win a place in the hearts of fans. Second, the theme is involving, and third, the cheerfulness will remain after the showing.

Giving complaisant support to Miss Mason are Albert Roscoe, Harry Dunkinson and Lilie Leslie. Frank R. Adams wrote the story.

SYNOPSIS: Shirley Brown, known as Molly, proposes to wed Philip Smith, an author who is almost blind, so that she may receive a legacy of $10,000 and finance his trip to Italy to regain his sight. On his return to America, the papers picture him as intimate with Marion Sutherland, a member of the art colony. Molly, wishing to learn whether or not he loves Marion, applies at his apartment for the job as cook and maidservant. Confronted with the needed smatterings of French, and while endeavoring to teach her English, Smith falls in love with her. An automobile accident puts him in a hospital, and Marion, jealous of his attentions to Molly, discharges the latter on the assumption that Smith has deserted her. Molly, broken-hearted, returns the ring. Finding that he still loves Molly, Marion tells of her intriguing and Molly and Smith are reunited.

Elise Janis in

THE IMP

Five-part drama; Selznick. Directed by Robert Ellis. Published in March.

OPINION: Aphasia, long a favorite plot ingredient, is given an unusual and rather refreshing treatment in Elise Janis' second Selznick production. As a result, the popular rating will doubtless place "The Imp" above "A Regular Girl," her initial vehicle.

In "The Imp" the star's activities abroad during the war, activities which have resulted in her stage production now playing an engagement at a Chicago theatre, is not permitted to intrude. No reference is made to the conflict and none of the characters are returned fighting men, nurses or welfare workers.

The star is pictured as a daughter of wealth who is deeply interested in the study of criminology. When she is struck by a golf ball she regains consciousness to imagine herself a notorious woman criminal who lived twenty years before. In the effecting of a cure by a young doctor who uses unique methods, and in the working out of their romance, lies the body of the story.

Joe King, a leading man of many years' experience, plays an excellent male lead. The star finds her role congenial and discloses ability which won her friends at the picture's Chicago premiere.

The mechanical equipment is typical of the Selznick organization, which is to say excellent.

SYNOPSIS: Jane Morgan, deeply interested in criminology, regains consciousness following a blow upon the head and imagines herself "The Imp," a notorious woman criminal who lived twenty years before. Under this delusion she dons boy's clothing and goes out into the night. Dr. Ferguson, a young specialist, disguises himself as "The Leopard," a crook, and meets her in a dark street. They form an alliance and takes her to Chinatown where her sex is discovered. But the alliance is continued and a big robbery is staged in which he kills a butler. When she leaves her job as the police take him away to prison, she is carried to bed. Recovering, it is found that the delusion has been overcome and the happy ending is a matter of course.

Violet Heming in

THE COST

Six-part drama; Paramount Artcraft. Directed by Harley Knoles. Published in April.

OPINION: Lacking the clever dialogue as written by its author, David Graham Phillips, "The Cost," as a picture, is without the convincing characteristics predominating in the great novel. This is due, perhaps, to more than one factor.

To a person who is attentive as a picture is screened, the patron of the theatre, several faults will be noticeable. The nature of the story, in the first place, makes it difficult of adaptation, the action being centered in widely different locales and requiring so many changes that it becomes confusing.

Again, the director has overlooked one factor that weakens the effectiveness to a great extent. At the opening of the story Pauline Gardner, played by Violet Heming, is a girl seventeen years of age. The six parts carry the action through a period of seven or eight years, during which time many trying circumstances fall to the lot of Pauline. But in Miss Heming's portrayal of Pauline, some passes without any convincing change in appearance.

On the other hand, there are many interesting moments in the picture, the dramatic scenes being particularly well handled. In these, Ralph Kellard gives commendable support. Among the cast are Edwin Mordant, Mrs. Jane Jennings, Ed Arnold, Clifford Gray, Carlotta Monterey, Aileen Savage, Warburton Gamble, Florence McGuire and Mrs. Julia Hurley.

SYNOPSIS: Pauline Gardner, against the wishes of her parents, marries John Dumont, son of a wealthy family but irresponsible. She keeps the marriage a secret during her first year at college, and then on the advice of Hampden Scarborough, a professor who has fallen in love with her, she tells her father and mother. In the meanwhile, John has met with a financial setback in New York and Pauline goes to make a home for him. She learns that he is faithless and returns to her parents, and the child is born. Again she goes to New York, only to find that John is infatuated with another woman. Again she returns home determined to get a divorce. But John is ruined in Wall Street and becomes very sick. She returns to him but his death follows after he has regained his wealth. Pauline goes back home and marries the professor of her school days and now governor.

SHIRLEY MASON

And support in a scene from "MOLLY AND I."
Harry Carey in

OVERLAND RED

Five-part drama; Universal. Directed by Lynn F. Reynolds. Published in March.

OPINION: An engaging romantic story is told here in the atmosphere of the West, but without the introduction of superfluous "stunts" which serve only to detract from the story's aim to exhibit the skill of somee horseman. It is not to be inferred, however, that the picture is wholly lacking in lively action. Every reel moves forward with rapidity and at the final "fade out" a person can not help feeling satisfaction with the hour spent in viewing a good Western.

Harry Carey needs no introduction to patrons of theatres, and his portrayal of a vagabond in this subject is very commendable. Though reserved in his actions, his facial expressions are such that his characterization is very convincing. Many touches of human interest are occasioned in the activities between Carey and his "pard" of the road, Collie, which is played by Harold Goodwin.

Supporting Carey in this enjoyable Western is Orla Valet, Charles McAmy, Dave B. Gally, C. Anderson and Joe Harris. The comportment of all is creditable.

The picture as a whole, a good adaptation has been given the story by H. K. Knibbs. It should hold interest throughout to the extent that it will be classed as one of the pleasing Westerns.

SYNOPSIS: Overland Red, a "knight of the road," and his young pal, Collie, set off on a trip in the desert. On his body they discover papers locating a gold mine. The sheriff of a western town and his unscrupulous accomplices a vagabond in this situation. Overland and Collie are arrested but no plans are found on them. The sheriff then has to charge Overland with murder, hoping that the folk will disclose the location. The two "knights of the road" escape, however, and next are found on the Ala- cala ranch, whose homestead they had seen in the observation car of a train. Collie is in love with Louise and at her suggestion he remains on the ranch. Overland, by the sheriff's orders, evades him until one day Collie is shot by the sheriff's accomplices. A fight ensues, the sheriff is killed and Collie and Louise are happy in their love. Overland departs, happy that he has brought the two together.

H. B. Warner in

THE WHITE DOVE

Six-part drama; Jesse D. Hampton. Directed by Henry King. Published by Robertson-Cole.

OPINION: William J. Locke's forceful tragedy, which has thrilled Broadway and given film form by the Jesse D. Hampton producing staff without loss of power. No doubt many will say that it has gained power in the translation.

H. B. Warner, star of the piece, is one of the few screen actors who can give a stern, dominant character convincing portrayal. His Sylvester Lanyon in the original production is a man of high ideals, great and tender emotions, of his convictions, a man such as is seldom found except between hook books. Yet Warner's Lanyon is a living person.

Olive Tell in

LOVE WITHOUT QUESTION

Six-part drama; Jans Pictures, Inc. Directed by B. A. Rolfe. Published state rights.

OPINION: Based on a novel by C. Wadsworth Camp, "Love Without Question," the first of the Jans productions starring Olive Tell, holds promise of many excellent state rights features to come if successful dramas are as carefully done as this one.

Although from the title one would be led to believe it is a love story, such is not the case. It is a deep and stirring mystery story with the mystery element brought to the mhb power and well sustained throughout.

The mystery is based upon the murder of an old man, who elects to occupy a lonely bedroom in the wing of his home that has been untenanted for years. One suspects almost every character in the cast before the final reel and then discovers that all of his suppositions were wrong.

B. A. Rolfe played up the spookiness of the story of "The Abandoned Room" in a manner that is calculated to make the chills run up and down your spine and aside from a slight dragness in the early part where a number of unnecessary close-ups are given of Miss Tell, the story moves along smoothly to a satisfactory climax.

Olive Tell, looking more charming than ever, appears to excellent advantage in the role of Katherine, the ward of old man Blackburn, while James Morrison as the weak grandson, excites one's sympathy from the first. A cast of well trained actors, who have made their marks in picturdom, appear in support.

SYNOPSIS: Silas Blackburn, wealthy ranch owner, is found murdered. The police declare his intention to cut his grandson, Robert, off without a cent. The next morning Blackburn is found dead in bed, having been fully murdered during the night. Robert is suspected of the crime, although he can remember nothing of what happened the night previous. A search is made of the house, which sleeps in the abandoned room and is murdered also. Katherine believes Robert, but the sales following the burial of Blackburn the household is surprised to find old Silas sitting before the fireside. He declares he has been visiting. It then develops that during a quarrel between Silas and his twin brother over the distribution of money, the latter is killed, and when confronted by the brother's daughter, Silas kills himself, leaving his fortune to Robert and Katherine.

Unusual Titling in New Vitagraph-Stewart Film

Vitagraph announces that shortly it will present "The More Excellent Way," a picture which features Anita Stewart and which possesses subtleties that exhaust the language of epigram.

Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester, whose film direction is declared to be very unusual editing and title writing. It is said that throughout the subject, which is an epigrammatic story, the characters are couched in vivid and forceful terms.
Robert Warwick in

THOU ART THE MAN

Five-part drama; Paramount Artcraft. Directed by Thomas Hefron. Published in April.

OPINION: Give to Robert Warwick a role typifying a man of chivalrous and fearless characteristics and his portrayal is unlabored and refreshing. The part assigned to him in his latest picture is just such a type, and as the courageous hero his work is credible, as is the whole subject.

Interest is not dependent alone on the star, however. A very deserving cast aids in telling this story of adventure and romance. Among the most prominent of the players are Lois Wilson, whose pleasing personality and striking features always are an asset to a picture, Clarence Burton, C. H. Geldhart, Lorenzo Lazzarini and J. D. Dumont.

The story is the work of F. E. Mills-Younghusband with the locale in South Africa. Intriguing by diamond smugglers and the consequent complications offer favorable opportunity for an adaptation that may be a pleasant diversion.

"Thou Art the Man" is a much better picture than was "Jack Straw," for it places the featured player in a more suitable role than has been carved for him many followers. His portrayals are more natural when he depicts the rugged type man when cast in a society play.

Others in the cast are Harry Carter, Jane Wolfe, Dorothy Rosher, Viora Daniel, Richard Wayne, Lilian Leigh, and Sylvia Ashton.

SYNOPSIS: Myles Calthorpe, a soldier of fortune, is discharged from the service and goes to Brummage; diamond smugglers who are operating under the guise of feather merchants. He starts for Cape Town in South Africa, but is robbed of his money. Penniless and hungry, he stops at the home of Joan Farrant to beg a bite to eat. Joan obtains a position for him with her brother, an agent of the smugglers. He is given what are supposed to be legal papers to deliver to Cape Town, but on the boat going there, he search his stateroom and find that the package contains diamonds. Refusing to tell the identity of the person who gave them to him, he is sentenced to seven years in prison. On his release, however, he proves his innocence, the smugglers are apprehended and Joan and Myles live happily.

Madaline Traverse in

THE TATTLERS

Five-part drama; Fox. Directed by Howard Mitchell. Published in April.

OPINION: The truth of the adage, "The evil men do lives after them," was never more forcibly presented than in "The Tattlers," Madaline Traverse's latest vehicle. How telling tongues, spreading vicious gossip, can ruin a woman's reputation, wreck young people's lives and bring death and disgrace upon innocent ones is pictured in a vivid and convincing manner.

The play was written from Henry Clifford Colwell's story and has received careful handling at the hands of Director Mitchell. Miss Traverse wears some stunning gowns and gives a fine portrayal of the role of Bess Rutherford. Howard Scott appears as Charles Rutherford, her husband; Jack Rollens as her son and Ben Deely as James Carpenter.

SYNOPSIS: Bess Rutherford, unable to live with her drunken husband, determines to divorce him and marry James Carpenter. Carpenter is a daily caller upon her but keeps postponing the wedding. Jack, in love with Gladys Dexter, proposes and is accepted, although Carpenter has been paying marked attention to her also. Gladys' mother learns of Carpenter's relations with Mrs. Rutherford and tells Jack he cannot marry her daughter. Jack in a rage confronts his mother and learns the truth when Carpenter enters the house with his pass key. He is about to shoot Carpenter, when Mrs. Rutherford grabs the revolver and kills him. She then takes poison and dies. Awakening, she discovers that it is all a dream and she exacts a promise from her husband that he drink no more.

Special Pictures presents

UNEASY FEET

Two-part comedy: Comedyart. Directed by Ward Lascelle. Published in March.

OPINION: Special Pictures Corporation's publication of its Comedyart feature was presented at the Casino theatre, a downtown Chicago house, during the week of March 28. The two reels combine comedy, scenic and a sketch.

The comedy, "Uneasy Feet," which is given a majority of the footage, presents an unique method of pictorial story telling. By showing only the feet of the players, the director has accomplished very gratifying results, the idea at all times being very clearly conveyed to the public.

The Casino, being within the "loop" district, plays to a cosmopolitan audience. The comedy evoked much laughter from this representative congregation, and if this is any criterion of success such comedy portrayal should find a ready welcome in other localities.

The scenic phase of the feature is done in colors and in this first edition pictures the rugged country in the West. The short sketch presented is called "Memories," and is more or less of a burlesque on the prohibition question.

The comedy aspect of Comedyart especially will bear watching, for the first endeavor of Mr. Lascelle in this type of portrayal is very commendatory.

Frank Mayo in

THROUGH EYES OF MEN

Five-part drama; Radin. Directed by C. A. Taylor. Published as a special.

OPINION: Eye-pleasing and excellently photographed settings go a great way toward atoning for such slight faults as exist in "Through Eyes of Men." It is more than probable that the general reception accorded the photoplay will be materially bettered by reason of this aspect.

Frank Mayo, whose standing in the public estimation has risen noticeably in the last few months, does highly creditable work as the star. He makes capital of the opportunities provided and will doubtless please generally.

A story of the circus, ample scope is given Prudence Lyde, the feminine lead, for the display of her beauty and talent.

In view of the great advances in exploitation that have been made in connection with circus pictures during the past year, there should be little difficulty in bringing to the theatre exhibiting the picture attendance in numbers.

The play contains a sensational race finish and other phases that have been found capital ingredients in productions of the type. The persons who are drawn to the theatre by this type of advertising are the persons who like this sort of entertainment.

SYNOPSIS: Franklyn Allen, son of wealth, does not fall readily into line with his mother's wishes that he marry Alice Weston, a girl of their set, because he does not love her. A young lady circus performer attracts his attention and mutual love develops, but an Arab who owns the circus exerts a sinister influence over Leila, the girl, and will not permit the consummation of their happiness. It is developed that Leila's sister has been executed for interference with political factions in their native country. Leila taking her sister's child and escaping with the circus. When this knowledge is gained by Franklyn he disposes of the Arab in summary fashion and the happy ending follows.

Clarine Seymour in
THE IDOL DANCER
Six-part drama; First National
Directed by D. W. Griffith
Published April.

OPINION: D. W. Griffith's latest production, "The Idol Dancer," is a distinctly departure from his normal efforts. Although he has chosen a tropical isle as the background for his story in plot development it follows the lines of numberless other plays that depend upon the eternal angle for a backbone. The unique Griffith touches, however, are there and the unusual handling of the beautiful Clarine Seymour, more fascinating than ever, would put the picture over there less plot material than there is. Then, too, that Klieg Hathorne makes "Chink" in "Broken Blossoms" marked him for stellar honors ere the picture had played half the country. In the un rout, gin-drinking beachcomber, we have another splendid characterization and his delineation of Dan McGuire is the outstanding feature of "The Idol Dancer." Dan Hale, as Walter Kineaid, a tuberculous sufferer, is the other point in the triangle.

SYNOPSIS: Mary, daughter of a fisherman and queen of the native dancers of a South Sea Island, finds Dan McGuire upon the beach, drunk and near the incoming tide. She takes him to her father's cabin, where they decide to keep him rather than drown him. To the island comes Walter Kineaid to visit his sister, a missionary stationed there. Mary is undecided which she loves the most, Dan or Walter, the consumptive. Walter prevails upon Mary to discard the idiom before the tide dances daily. While the male inhabitants, with the exception of Walter, are off on a fishing expedition, savages from a neighboring island attack the village with the intention of carrying off Mary and the women. Kineaid gives warning on a native war drum, which brings the fishermen home in time to rescue the women, but he dies from a severe blow upon the head inflicted by a savage. Mary declares her love for Dan and he swears liquor forever.

Second Jans-Tell
Picture Being Cut
And Assembled

The second production of Jans Pictures, Inc., starring Olive Tell, has been completed under the supervision of B. A. Rolfe. It is an adaption of "Nothing a Year," the novel by Charles Belmont Davis. The photodramatic version will be called "A Woman's Business." The feature is being cut and assembled and made ready for public presentation.

The star's supporting cast includes Edward Lowe, who plays opposite Miss Tell, and Lucille Lee Stewart.

Monahan Is New Owner
VALPARAISO, IND.—George Monahan has purchased the local motion picture interests of Fred Perry. Perry is seeking a location in another city.

"Parted Curtains" with Walthall to Be Published in April by National

"Parted Curtains," the newest feature production filmed by the National Film Corporation of America soon will be ready for publication. A print of the picture has been received at the New York office and is now in the finishing stages.

Henry B. Walthall, who starred in "Confession" and Griffith's "The Birth of a Nation," plays the leading part in this production, taking the role of an outcast who is falsely accused of crime and is fighting to regain his place in society.

Story Written By Hall

"Parted Curtains" is from the story of the same name which was written by Franklin Hall, whose stories have appeared in the leading magazines. It deals with the struggles of a criminal to live down the stigma of the prison stamp. Walthall, in the role of Jenkins, serves a long prison sentence because of a false accusation. When he is released no one believes his story and he is buffeted around from place to place in a vain search for work. When even a prominent citizen intercedes for his release and is reprieved for it, Jenkins' hope fails him.

At the crucial moment a woman befriends him and through sympathy and love points out the way to hope and happiness again. Through a peculiar twist of the story, are those who previously shunned him. When his benefactor's happiness is later threatened by the schemings of a man whose mistress she formerly was, Jenkins steps into the breach and repays his debt by preventing the disruption of her social position and family.

Bracken Directed

Bertram Bracken, who produced "Confession," "The Eternal Sappho," "East Lynne" and other successful photodramas also is responsible for the "Parted Curtains." He has brought out the big points of the story in an intensely dramatic manner, it is said, and has set a fitting background for Walthall's screen talent.

Mary Alden tops the all-star supporting cast. She will be remembered for her emotional portrayal of the "Wicked Sin," "Common Clay," and other pictures. Included in the cast is William H. Clifford, who played the part of the Canadian in the Griffith production "Latigo." Margaret Landis is cast in the role of Jenkins' sweetheart.

Joe Brace, eastern representative of the National Film Corporation, has announced that the picture will be sold to state rights buyers and that it will be published in the early part of April.

Texas Guinan Finishes Reelcraft Production
Billy West Also Announces That His First Picture Has Been Completed

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has received word from the Los Angeles studio, that Texas Guinan has completed her fourth Reelcraft feature for publication on the Reelcraft program. The title of the picture is "Fighting the Vigilantes."

Billy West also announced the completion of his first picture for Reelcraft, titled "The Artist." This picture was produced at the Reelcraft Hollywood studio by Mr. West's own producing company, headed by himself and Ethel Gibson, who has played leads opposite him in all of his pictures.

Mr. Cropper and Milton Cohen, general sales manager, are working on a selling plan that will be nation-wide in scope, establishing practically a Reelcraft exchange in every important city of the country.

Mr. Cropper also has announced the following exchange managers for the branches already established: Julius Singer for New York city; Carl Harthill for Chicago; Geo. W. Wilson for Indianapolis; Geo. W. Stiles for Milwaukee and Harry L. Muir for Minneapolis.

BLOOMINGTON, ILL.—Gus Schade, manager of the Majestic theatre, has announced plans for remodeling which involve the expenditure of $75,000. Additional seating capacity will be gained by the changes to be made.
ROBERT BRUNTON'S UNIT STUDIOS

Hollywood Plant Has Twenty-Seven Permanent Buildings — Independent Producer Is Given Chance to Produce Without Own Equipment

EXHIBITORS Herald last week published a descriptive article about Robert Brunton's first unit studio. In the following discourse are given the details of the second such plant being constructed at Hollywood, Cal., by Mr. Brunton.

By FLORENCE PORTER PARKS

The second Unit Studio in the country is now being built by Robt. Brunton at Santa Monica boulevard and Seward street, Hollywood, Cal., about seven miles from the business district of Los Angeles. It is called the Hollywood Studios, Inc. The executive heads are C. E. Toebeman, president; John Jasper, vice president, and general manager, and C. W. Bradford, treasurer.

There are to be four units, each having separate property rooms, vaults, cut-out scene rooms, projection rooms. These projection rooms are 35 by 15 feet and are like theatres, with a stage at one end and with the sides facing it. Ventilators keep the air cool and carry away the smoke which always is heavy in the average projection room.

Dressing Room Arrangements

Each unit also is supplied with star dressing rooms in ivory and gold, and a set of dressing apartments for the extras. Little distinction is made in the two sets of apartments as it is the intention of the company to provide as handsomely for the extra as for the stars.

In the administration building there are specially arranged casting rooms which enable those in charge to dispose of the employed and the unemployed with the greatest facility. A room for the extras opens off of these rooms. The business offices are modern and have many new features which make for easier work. All executive offices are to be furnished in solid mahogany. The halls have the curved archways and are Spanish, making one think of the runways in the Riverside Mission Inn at Riverside, Cal.

Size of the Stage

The four stages will be fifty feet apart, and are 120 by 71 by 37 feet high, having a floor space of 8,500 square feet with canvas sides in detachable frames. The stages are laid out in the shape of the letter H, and an electrical power plant forms the crossbar of the H. This power house contains transformers that weigh two tons each, and cables carrying 33,000 voltage will supply all four units. Cooper-Hewitt lights will be furnished each stage, and there will be plenty of direct current from the power house.

The stages can be made dark or light by combination diffusers. It is so arranged that sets will not have to be moved to catch the light. A machine shop, 80 by 40 feet, is filled with modern machinery, and will give service to all four units.

Hollow Tile Construction

All stages except the stages are of hollow tile, and made of Spanish architecture. The color scheme is light coral with green trimmings. The dull red tile hoods over the doorways lend a quaint attractiveness.

A retaining wall will semi-circle the studio in front and across the sides, and several acres will be converted into sunken gardens, patios, arbors and wide cement drives.

The policy of Hollywood Studios, Inc., and the Brunton studio differs in this respect. The latter leases space, and whatever property is required in the making of a picture is checked in and out to that company. The former leases a stage and all accompanying buildings, each unit is complete in itself, and is entirely independent of the other units for the length of the lease. Each unit is under its own management.

N. Y. Exhibitors Seek Law That Will Open Theatres to Kiddies

ALBANY, N. Y.—Efforts are being made to have the legislature pass a bill during the present session permitting the admission of minors to motion picture theatres outside of school hours, and providing reservation in a part of the house for these children to be in charge of a matron.

Assemblyman George E. D. Brady of Buffalo has been requested by J. H. Michaels, executive chairman of the New York State Motion Picture Exhibitors' League, to introduce a bill to accomplish this purpose.

Mr. Michaels says that at the convention of the State Motion Picture League of Utica, March 9-10, the opinion was expressed that a law of the character should be enacted. The proposition has been indorsed by Sophie Irene Loeb, head of the Federation of Women's Clubs of New York.

Christian Science Productions Planned

LOS ANGELES, April 6.—Christian Science photoplays, with the teachings and not the organization of the church featured will be produced soon, according to Frank Lanning, an actor. The pictures are to be general in their dramatic treatment and appeal. According to Lanning, no financial profit is contemplated by those behind the project.

GENERAL VIEW OF BRUNTON STUDIOS

This photo, taken from the roof of Douglas Fairbanks' studio, gives a fair idea of the beauty and scope of the Robert Brunton plant.

It is also said that Senator George F. Thompson of Buffalo and Senator James J. Walker of New York will advocate the passage of such a bill.

Assemblyman Brady will decide in a few days if he will consent to father the proposed bill.

Pauline Frederick Is Chosen Pageant Queen

Invitation is Extended By Committee of Business Men of Fresno

Pauline Frederick, Goldwyn star, has been chosen queen of the California raisin carnival which will be held at Fresno on April 30.

This annual affair is known as the Carnival of the Sun-Maid. Miss Frederick accepted the honor offered by a committee of prominent citizens from Fresno, who waited upon her at the Goldwyn studio. She will make her triumphant entry into the city of Fresno at the head of a stupendous raisin pageant. After the coronation ceremony she will be escorted to the queen's box at the automobile races, where she will bestow the prizes on the winners of several speed events. In the evening she will reign at the ball.

The committee that extended the invitation to Miss Frederick was composed of M. H. Possoms, chairman of the board of directors of the Sun-Maid Welfare League; G. E. Leonard of the Fresno chamber of commerce, and George F. Sharpe, manager of the Liberty and Strand theatres of Fresno.
Nicholas Power Co., Inc.,
90 Gold Street,
New York, N. Y.

Gentlemen:

Replying to your inquiry of recent date, please be advised that our entire battery of 14 projecting machines is comprised of Power's Cameragraphs, both #6A and #6B models.

After rather exhaustive tests, we have concluded that the Power Cameragraph is the most satisfactory machine for the projection of unwaxed film and best suited to all-around studio requirements including laboratory inspection.

Very truly yours,

VERDICTS ON FILMS IN LANGUAGE OF EXHIBITOR

First National

In Old Kentucky, with Anita Stewart.

- Played to capacity and stood them up.
- More favorable comments from patrons than on any feature I have ever run before. This is the real thing. — T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Neb.—Small town patronage.

“Two Weeks,” with Constance Talmadge.—Our patrons said this was the best-of-her pictures. Advertise it strong and charge extra admission price. —Stettmünd, Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.

Heart of the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—It pleased even better than The Hoodlum, also outdrew The Hoodlum.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Greatest Question, a D. W. Griffith production.—A very poor picture. Pleased those that saw it, but Griffith does not draw here. Lost money on same.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—Good. First National pictures are getting me the money. Good house. Everybody well pleased.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

In Wrong, with Jack Pickford.—Common program picture, and although I pushed it it did not make me any money.—Dr. C. J. Graf, Princess theatre, Stuart, la.—Small town patronage.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita Stewart.—Billy can say this is the best picture I ever ran from any angle. Anita Stewart spells capacity for me.—W. R. Champion, Opera House, Hazel Green, Wis.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—This was one of the best pictures that I ever ran. Ran two nights to packed house. Patrons went away asking for more of the same kind.—G. M. Le Monnier, Majestic theatre, Liberal, Kans.—Transient patronage.

Choosing a Wife, with a special cast.—The poorest picture we have received from First National. Pleased some patrons but more did not like it.—Murphy & Hanson, Memorial Hour theatre, Brookings, S. D.—General patronage.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—Drew very well and picture well liked. Mary Pickford always draws here. Some liked this better than Daddy Long Legs.—W. R. Champion, Opera House, Hazel Green, Wis.—General patronage.

A Day’s Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—Not better than Sunlight Ride. Charlie can’t beat his last two I think he had better quit.—J. F. Alfred, Lyric theatre, Pryor, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—Everyone delighted with this picture. Only for bad weather would have broken house record.—W. R. Champion, Opera House, Hazel Green, Wis.—General patronage.

The Mind the Paint Girl, with Anita Stewart.—Just a program picture. Didn’t see much of a story to it. Fair crowd. —G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

A Twilight Baby, with a special cast.—We ran this with a Sennett comedy. This combination got more laughs than anything we have run in a long time. Everyone more than pleased.—H. G. Stettmünd, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita Stewart.—This is an excellent feature. Drew well and at a small advance in prices. It is rather deep, but will hold attention. People came to me to tell how pleasing the show was. Attendance good.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Midnight Romance, with Anita Stewart.—Not enough action to suit the element that likes a lot of pep, but suited those who do not care for a lot of excitement. Will appeal to the society element.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

The Greatest Question, a D. W. Griffith production.—A good picture, but not as good as our patrons expected from Griffith. We made a mistake in raising prices.—Murphy & Hanson, Okla. Trading Hour theatre, Brookings, S. D.—General patronage.

A Day’s Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—A very poor comedy, but it drew good house for it was first time star had been shown in six months.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—This is the kind of picture the public want. A dandy comedy will get the business.—G. O. Monroe, Gilbert theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.—Down-town patronage.

The Mind the Paint Girl, with Anita Stewart.—Void of entertainment.—P. E. Morris, Regent theatre, Cleveland, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—A good picture, but not the puller as was Daddy Long Legs.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Raffles, with John Barrymore.—Say, Booth here is a winner. Buy book and boost it.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarvale, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Auction of Souls, with Aurora Mardigan.—A splendid picture and one that ought to please all except those who want to be amused only.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Excellent. Two days of big business. They came for miles to see this one through blustery weather.—Peters & Johnson, Liberty theatre, Milligan, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

A Day’s Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—Patrons disgusted with this. Nothing to it. Chaplin about down and out here.—Teufel & Fletcher, Isis theatre, Roseville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Auction of Souls, with Aurora Mardigan.—We played this picture in the face of the Flu scare which cut the patronage 75%. The production is wonderful and everyone who saw it praised it very highly.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedarvale, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.
Fox

Rough Riding Romance, with Tom Mix.—A real good Mix picture that we can't be afraid to advertise it.—Jos. Heins, Empress theatre, Verdigris, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Girl of the Buck Jones.—Well liked. Business fair.—Jean Dagle, Hippodrome theatre, Murphysboro, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Treat 'em Rough, with Tom Mix.—Excellent. Wish we could do as well with every star. Sure goes here. Boost him hard, you can't go too strong on this one.—Dr. C. J. Graf, Princess theatre, Stuart, la.—Small town patronage.

The Rebellious Bride, with Peggy Hyland.—A good comedy-drama that will please a mixed class.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

The Lincoln Highwayman, with William Farnum.—Excellent program release.—Teufel & Pitcher, Isis theatre, Roseville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marriages Are Made, with Peggy Hyland.—A pleasing picture and very good business.—Alice F. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

The Last of the Duanes, with William Farnum.—Best Western we ever exhibited. Raise your price and advertise it big. Did not make much money on it on account of bad weather and roads.—Jos. Hulin, Empress theatre, Verdigris, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

"Aladdin and the Wonderful Lamp" and "Jack and the Bean Stalk," Fox special productions.—I showed the first the day after Xmas and was surprised at the large attendance of both grownups and children. Monday, March 1, I showed the second. Monday as a rule is my dullest day, but the crowd that turned out was bigger than to some of the big specials. There were about as many grown-ups as children, and I used only slides to advertise it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.

Fighting for Gold, with Tom Mix.—Tom Mix has no equal as a Westerner. Fighting for Gold, as all of his pictures gives entire satisfaction.—S. C. Hogan, Palace theatre, Mound City, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Forbidden Room, with Gladys Brockwell.—This is not a good picture for small towns. Do not know why they send such pictures to small towns. Dissatisfied.—J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Beresford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Broken Commandments, with Gladys Brockwell.—Not fit to be shown if you want to hold your young patronage.—Frank Peck, Tokio theatre, Greenwood, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Checkers, with Special cast.—Excellent. Broke all house records for two nights. If you have not played it yet, it is a sure money-getter.—H. C. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Woman There Was, with Theda Bara.—Comments very unfavorable. Bara has lost her following here.—D. J. Kulaszewicz, Rex theatre, Bessemer, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lone Is Los, with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.—Just an ordinary picture that will mildly please a not too particular audience.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

"Aladin and the Wonderful Lamp" and "Jack and the Bean Stalk," Fox special productions. I showed the first the day after Christmas and was surprised at the large attendance of both grownups and children. Monday, March 1, I showed the second. Monday as a rule is my dullest day, but the crowd that turned out was bigger than to some of the big specials. There were about as many grown-ups as children, and I used only slides to advertise it.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.

The Winning Stroke, with George Walsh.—A fine picture. Our community thinks Walsh is great. The story is a clever one and acting is splendid.—Evelin M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Speed Maniac, with Tom Mix.—One of the best Mix pictures we have ever seen. Business good.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Fallen Idol, with Evelyn Nesbit.—A very good picture and one that will be sure to please the average audience.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Be a Little Sport, with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.—A good comedy-drama. My patrons like the stars greatly.—Evelin M. Huber, Opera House, Camp Point, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Help! Help! Police! with George Walsh.—A good Walsh comedy-drama. The kind our patrons like.—L. C. Farquhar, Opera House, Guide Rock, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Goldwyn

The Crimson Gardenia, with Owen Moore.—99½% liked this picture. Big business.—Eugene Saunders, Saunders theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The City of Comrades, with Tom Moore.—Very good picture. Took well with patrons.—H. M. Suckstorf, Orpheum theatre, Wildrose, N. D.—General patronage.

Flame of the Desert, with Geraldine Farrar.—A good picture that did not pull for us.—D. J. Kulaszewicz, Rex theatre, Bessemer, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers.—Rogers a comer with us. A couple more pictures like this and he will be a leading man.—Pfeifer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Road Called Straight, with Louis B. Mayer.—The kind of picture that all classes will find something in to please them. One of Bennison's best.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

The Turn of the Wheel, with Geraldine Farrar.—This is a good picture. Wonderful plot and fine photography. Please all.—L. H. Hasse, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

The Fear Woman, with Pauline Frederick.—Go the limit on this. The best Frederick picture for some time. Many compliments from our patrons.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Pinocchio, with Mabel Normand.—Great. Also a big puller.—H. J. Thatcher, Strand theatre, Salina, Kans.—General patronage.

A Perfect Lady," with Madge Kennedy.—If you haven't shown this one, get it. Then ask the performers of your city to come and see it. It will do them good.—J. P. Allred, Lyric theatre, Pryor, Okla.

One of the Finest, with Tom Moore.—The plot is simple, but the star is very popular. Light stuff pleases better than the heavy pictures here. This is the first of our Tom Moore pictures, and everyone is waiting for the next one.—A. C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Auction Block, with a special cast.—One of the best eight reel programs I've put on this year. Took well.—H. M. Suckstorf, Orpheum theatre, Wildrose, N. D.—General patronage.

The City of Comrades, with Tom Moore.—A very good drama that will appeal strongly to the best educated classes, but will not suit those who do not appreciate a bit of class. With a good moral.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

A Misfit Earl, with Louis Bennison.—A dandy comedy-drama. Do not be afraid to book this series. They are all good.—Wm. Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

Hodkinson

$30,000, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Nice little picture that will please the average audience and help our locality. We were very much satisfied with it.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sagebrusher, with Roy Stewart.—Most pleasing picture of the year. Big crowds.—M. L. Levine, Ideal theatre, Cortland, Tex.—General patronage.

The Lord Loves the Irish, with J. Warren Kerrigan.—Played to a packed house, and Kerrigan surely made a lot of new friends with this picture.—W. A. Saunders, Sanders theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The Westerners, with a special cast.—Absolutely the best Western picture
FIRST RUN exhibitors have within their grasp the most powerful implement for the betterment of production.

REPORTS from first run exhibitors determine in every case the success or failure of productions offered.

LOYALTY to exhibitor interests is essential. The man who misuses this power is beneath contempt. The men who use it wisely, faithfully, can mold future production to meet exhibitor requirements and thereby render the industry as a unit the greatest possible service.

EXHIBITORS

EXHIBITORS have the greatest good ever made for patrons. Without advertising it’s all there.—R. W. Wigley, Majestic theatre, Willmar, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

Some Bride, with Viola Dana.—Best comedy-drama ever used. Patrons declared it excellent. Fair and Warmer, a special run the week before. Wish all pictures gave that satisfaction.—I. J. Kuchta, the theatre, Stanton, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Good as the best. Picture is a delightful comedy.—W. T. Hayes, Dreamland theatre, Providence, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Easy to Make Money, with Bert Lytell.—Just a swell little picture that will please any audience.—Chas. Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—I was disappointed and so were my patrons. If you are to big as it’s all don’t say much about it.—T. C. Shipley, Ebassee theatre, Russellville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

False Evidence, with Viola Dana.—Good acting, but the star acted more than she ought to. No end to the picture.—Albert Korenowski, A-Muz-U theatre, Wittsburg, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Favor to a Friend, with Emmy Wehlen.—Everyone delighted. This star is a drawing card. She is good in all her pictures. Don’t fail to book this one. Patrons leave smiling.—Miss B. Hallis, Liberty theatre, Magnolia, Miss.—General patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Very good. Please everyone. Don’t fail to use it.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Gold Cure, with Viola Dana.—Certainly a very fine comedy-drama. Support and star good.—S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

"Fair and Warmer," with May Allison.—Absolutely one of the best comedy-dramas ever produced. We ran it at advanced prices and some of our patrons said it was worth more than we charged for it. Good, clean, laughable comedy. Give us more like it. Please more than 100%, if that is possible.—C. H. Powers, Auditorium theatre, Dunsmuir, Cal.

Lombardi, Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Very good for high class audience. Other classes call it poor.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Eye For Eye, with Nazimeva.—A wonderful improvement after the disappointment of the play. This is my second picture starring this lady. Fair house. Satisfied the most of them.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Peggy Does Her Darndest, with May Allison.—One of the very best comedy-dramas I ever ran in my house and thought it better than some of the big comedy-drama specials that I have played.—Harold Darst, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

No Man’s Land, with Bert Lytell.—If your patrons like Lytell they will like this. Please for me.—S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

In His Brother’s Place, with Hale Hamilton.—One of. if not the best, of the Hamilton pictures we have shown. Hamilton is not only a winner in this but has a strong support. A picture with a strong moral and an excellent sermon. Book it for the good of the community. It is relieved by enough comedy to make it true to life.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mont.—General patronage.

Easy Money, with Bert Lytell.—A good comedy. As good as the special. Can’t see why some of them are called specials and this is no special.—G. O. Monroe, Gilbert theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.—Downtown patronage.

The Far, Far Romance, with Harold Lockwood.—Fine. Drew well and nearly everyone liked it.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining Camp patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Viola Dana herself is good and the settings are beautiful, but there is not enough of the footage.—Harold Darst, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blackie’s Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—Fine. This is one that keeps you wondering what is going to happen next. It is good. Get it.—C. H. Powers, Auditorium theatre, Dunsmuir, Cal.—General patronage.

Lombardi, Ltd., with Bert Lytell.—Only a picture. That’s all. Showed it at advanced prices and was very sorry that I did. Nothing to it.—Ed. S. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Jet, Ia.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—It’s a bear. Best comedy I have ran since Daddy Long Legs. Eugene Palette deserves credit as much as May Allison for this success.—G. O. Monroe, Gilbert theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.—Downtown patronage.

Blackie’s Defense, with Bert Lytell.—Lytell is with you with the goods every time. In my opinion one of the strongest stars appearing on the screen today.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

The Uplifters, with May Allison.—About the weakest Metro I ever used. Not much to it.—J. M. Bailey, Gem theatre, Waverly, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Spender, with Bert Lytell.—Good. Classy. Good business and up to date.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—The poorest picture we have had in our house. Absolutely nothing to do it. Over a third of our patrons walked out.—Ed. S. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Jet, Ia.

Paramount Artcraft

The Misleading Widow, with Billie Burke.—A good light comedy-drama which everyone will enjoy.—Leo Petersen, Ritz theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Transient patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—A peach. His best since The Roaring Twenties.—H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

The Valley of Giants, with Wallace Reid.—Good. A genuine man-woman picture. Pictures like this are better, but this better picture campaign seems bunt to me.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

ALICE LAKE

the Metro star in a “Maude Muller” make-up looks quite as fetching as in a seal-skin capote. Miss Lake’s stock is going up by leaps and bounds.
Little Women, with a special cast. — A dandy good picture. Get your school to help advertise this one, and you will do some business and please your patrons. — J. F. Alfred, Lyric theatre, Pryor, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Market of Souls, with Dorothy Dalton. — A very good Dalton subject. One of the few better pictures. Better than On With the Dance, and other so-called specials. — Leo Peterson, Iris theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Transplant patronage.

A Girl Named Mary, with Marguerite Clark. — This attraction went big for me. Kathryn Williams should share 30-50 with Clark in this picture. — Chas. Dahler, Bijou theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Firing Line, with Irene Castle. — Very ordinary picture. Second day's business fell away short. Title does not help picture, and star has little drawing power. — Murphy & Hanson, Pleasant Hour theatre, Brookings, S. D.—General patronage.

Here Comes the Bride, with John Barrymore. — This is the second picture we have shown of this star. Opinion of patrons, fine picture. — H. G. Stettmund, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Oh You Women, with a special cast. — This picture drew well, but gave poor satisfaction. You will be disappointed if you book it. —J. L. Stubbfield, Pasktime theatre, Estancia, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

False Faces, with Henry Walthall. — This is a real picture with a kick and sends them away talking. — Clifford Nillis, Grand theatre, Anamosa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Kneckerbocker Buckaroo, with Douglas Fairbanks. — This is an extra good Fairbanks picture. Old Doug is sure there when it comes to making them laugh. — Waldo B. Nelson, Liberty theatre, Fosston, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The 13th Commandment, with Ethel Clayton. — Let's get more pictures like this and then the game will be a pleasure instead of what it is. — Chas. Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Secret Garden, with Lila Lee. — The book has been well read. Do special advertising and you will get the business. The picture will please them. — H. G. Stettmund, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Venus in the East, with Bryant Washburn. — Did not take very well, yet it may be classed as good. The writer viewed it as being very good. The majority audience differed with me. — J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

La Apache, with Dorothy Dalton. — Fair. — Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Why Smith Left Home, with Bryant Washburn. — This surely was a picture that pleased them all. Get this one and go the limit on it. This is the kind our patrons like. — J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Beresford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Captain Kid, Jr., with Mary Pickford. — Not her best outing yet. — Jack Carus, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman in the Suit Case, with Betty Bennett. — This star always good, and brings me me more money. — Chas. Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Thou Gavest Me, with Katherine MacDonald. — This is a sweet picture. Boost it and raise your admission price. — Murphy & Hanson, Pleasant Hour theatre, Brookings, S. D.—General patronage.

Fuss and Feathers, with Emid Bennett. — Class A picture. One that will please any audience. Miss Bennett has a big boost in Fuss and Feathers. — J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

The Girl Dodger, with Charles Ray. — A regular Ray picture and a pleased house. — Clifford Nillis, Grand theatre, Anamosa, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wolves of the Rail, with William S. Hart. —This is a great picture. Don't be afraid to book and advertise. If they like Hart this will please. He is one of the few drawing cards. — R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

What Every Woman Learns, with Florence Lawrence. — Excellent. — Williams Fair, Fair business. — Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pathe

Impossible Catherine, with Virginia Pearson. — Beautiful picture, but the star out of her element in a picture of this kind. — T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

My Husband's Other Wife, with a special cast. — Picture is wonderful. Big business for two days. — J. C. Lamont-tin, American theatre, Breckenridge, Tex.—Transplant patronage.

Dawn, with Sylvia Breamer. — People walked out on it. No more of this. — V. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The World Aflame, with Frank Keenan. — This is one of the best pictures we ever had. Showed it with A Day's Pleasure to big business. — L. A. Haase, Majestic theatre, Mauston, Wis.

RealArt

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter. — It sure pleased everyone. Played to extra big business. — Eugene Saunders, Saunders theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

Judy of Rogues' Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter. — This is a dandy. You cannot make a mistake in booking this picture. Everybody was satisfied and raised my prices on this and everyone was well pleased. Book it. — A. C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Erstwhile Susan, with Constance Biney. — Good picture, but business very poor. Star unknown. — W. H. Creal, Odeon theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Judy of Rogues' Harbor, with Mary

THE THIRD DEGREE THING FOR DOROTHY

Scene from "Mary Ellen Comes to Town," a Paramount Artcraft picture, directed by Elmer Clifton in which Dorothy Gish stars.
Miles Minter.—Realart is over-estimating their pictures. No better than any others. Only ordinary program picture.

—W. R. Hayes, Dreamland theatre, Providence, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Fear Market, with Alice Brady.—This picture is not as good as the rest of Realart's pictures. Alice Brady looks old and tired in this picture. The story is good for a high class audience.—A. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Judy of Rogues' Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Much better than the criticisms from reviewers would indicate. Splendid cast and acting. Overdone and exaggerated story.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Republic

Mandarin's Gold, with Kitty Gordon.—Very good. First time star appeared here, but had many comments. Photograph excellently—Chas. R. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Rough Neck, with Montagu Love.—Very good picture that will please most any audience. Good story and support good. Business fair.—Charles Guizetti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Three Green Eyes, with a special cast.—Picture very satisfactory. Received comments on it.—L. R. Ledon, Larabee Opera House, Isabel, Kans.—Small town patronage.

The American Way, with Arthur Ashley.—Quite a bit of action in this picture. Gave general satisfaction.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Grouch, with Montagu Love.—Average program picture.—Chas. R. Rhoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Mandarin's Gold, with Kitty Gordon.—This gave poor satisfaction here.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

When Bear Cat Went Dry, with a special cast.—Business good, but patrons disappointed. This picture is nothing but an ordinary program picture. Do not raise admission on this one.—Robert Home, Peacock, Mystic theatre, Stafford, Kans.

Crook of Dreams, with Louise Huff.—This is a picture of the crooks of New York. Will please most everyone who likes this class of picture.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sea Wolf, with Louise Huff.—This certainly is a very good picture and liked by all my patrons. Had very good house and satisfied all of them. Book it.—Charles Guizetti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Devil's Trail, with George Larkin.—Northern pictures are all good. They get the money.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Robertson-Cole

Better Times, with ZaSu Pitts.—One of the best we have had in a long time. Wish there were more like it.—S. I. Heinz, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

The Luck of Geraldine Laird, with Bessie Barriscale.—Just an ordinary picture.—Jean Dagle, Hippodrome theatre, Murphyboro, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man Beneath, with Sessue Hayakawa.—First showing of this star here, and pleased me.—Belt, Bennington theatre, Bennington, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Married.—We say this is some picture from any angle.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Better Times, with ZaSu Pitts.—Good program picture. Used it two days, but lost money on it. Don't call it a special.—Jos. Heins, Empress theatre, Verdigris, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Other Hall, with ZaSu Pitts.—A very good Sunday picture. A picture every objector should see. It would do them all good.—Dr. C. J. Graf, Princess theatre, Stuart, Ia.—Small town patronage.

The Pagan God, with H. B. Warner.—Why do they put such a good actor in such poor pictures. Not one spot in it to show his ability. Photography very poor.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Gray Wolf's Ghost, with H. B. Warner.—Good. Pleasing program picture.—B. A. Belt, Bennington theatre, Bennington, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Life's a Funny Proposition, with William Desmond.—Excellent comedy that pleased everyone. Only fair in drawing pictures.—Pleasant opera, Empress theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

Select

LILIAN HALL miniature ingenue, playing the leading role in the Rex Beach production, "Golightly Some," to be published by Goldwyn.

"SNOW STUFF"

A snapshot of Zena Keefe, Selznick 1920 star, who is heading the cast with Ralph fiance in "Out of the Snows." She seems to like her snowshoe costume and the warm mufflers.

Out Yonder, with Olive Thomas.—Should please all classes.—G. W. Yeaton, lolka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Only Way, with Norma Talmadge.—A fine picture that will please the majority. Has a climax that makes them set up and take notice.—H. G. Stettmum, Jr., Odson theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Business good due to good title and a star who photographs well and is not afraid to work in a picture with a little spice to it. Story deals with stage life and has society atmosphere. Star is a good looking girl.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Broken Melody, with Eugene O'Brien.—A fair picture. Will please some. Needs a good comedy to brighten up the evening show.—Leo Peterson, his theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Transient patronage.

The Country Cousin, with Elaine Hammerstein.—Good little picture. Pleased a fair audience.—Rex theatre, Bessemer, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Children of Banishment, with Mitchell Lewis.—Some said it was splendid. A few walked out. Personal opinion good program picture, better than the average.—S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Best picture to our notion that she has appeared in yet. Business good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Greater Than Fame, with Elaine Hammerstein.—This is not as good a picture as we expected although it will pass. Just a fair program picture.—J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Beresford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.
Elinor Faire is “the girl” in this Universal production starring Frank Mayo. Harry Hilliard is also a member of the cast.

The Undercurrent, with Guy Empey. Good picture. I have run several of Select’s features and all were good. No kick on Select.—L. R. Ledon, Larabee Opera House, Isabel, Kans.—Small town patronage.

She Loves and Lies, with Norma Talmadge.—Norma Talmadge wonderful. Raised prices. Ladies liked picture. Men did not.—M. L. Levine, Ideal theatre, Corsicana, Tex.—General patronage.

Hidden Truth, with Anna Case.—Splendid picture. Star unknown here, but very fine. Both star and support good, and photography. Excellent story.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Just ordinary. Several un-called for scenes showing her undressed and some with little on. Some will object, as it was not necessary to story, and does no one concerned any good.—Leo V. Peterson, Iris theatre, Belle Fourche, S. D.—Transient patronage.

Faith of the Strong, with Mitchell Lewis.—An excellent Northern story. Well produced.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Children of Banishment, with Mitchell Lewis.—Poorest Mitchell Lewis I ever saw. Good photography. Too much fake in the real part of the picture.—J. J. Kualauk, Swan theatre, Swanton, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Perfect Lover, with Eugene O’Brien.—Too much loving and spooning. Slow and draggy. Nothing to it.—J. W. Baird, Crystal theatre, Pattonsburg, Mo.

The Common Law, with Clara Kimball Young.—This is the third time we have played this picture and we were not disappointed on the business done. You all know it is a good picture, and a repeat is worth trying.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Only Way, with Norma Talmadge.—Fine picture. Everyone pleased.

Star well liked.—George Owens, Stanford Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Glorious Lady, with Olive Thomas.—Very ordinary. Star is pretty all you can say for her. Story old and unattractive.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Scream in the Night, with a special cast.—Good picture.—Chas. Dahler, Abingdon theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Red Head, with Alice Brady.—Good.—A. Giluth, Strand theatre, Doland, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Way of a Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Good, and good business.—Rae Peacock, Mystic theatre, Stafford, Kans.

The Indestructible Wife, with Alice Brady.—It seemed to satisfy a good crowd.—S. I. Haney, Liberty theatre, Des Moines, N. M.—Small town patronage.

United Picture Theatres

The Clodhopper, with Charles Ray.—Went over as good as his new ones.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, Ia.

The Pretender, with William Desmond.—Not a big one, but good. Will please nearly all. Did a good business on this one.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Regular Fellow, with Taylor Holmes.—A weak-kneed layout that is positively silly. Drew fair business, but everybody knocked this one. Most of Holmes’ plays have been good, but here’s hoping there is no more like this.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Patriot, with William S. Hart.—Good picture. It’s a reissue, but the Hart fans will come anyway. Good house.—G. F. Rediske, Star theatre, Rye-gate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

Upside Down, with Taylor Holmes.—Star is all right but it’s a picture that was not as good.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Day She Paid, with Francella Billington.—A good supporting cast. Society atmosphere. Contains a fashion display. A good title and a good picture. Don’t hesitate to book it if the opportunity presents itself. It is one of the last group of twelve pictures Universal has published. It is not a special.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Great Air Robbery, with Harold Locklear.—Used aeroplane on bicycle and hung aeroplanes in lobby. Raised my price and stood them up. Picture fair.—M. L. Levine, Ideal theatre, Corsicana, Tex.—General patronage.

Lasca, with Edith Roberts.—Not as good as expected. Not enough action for this type of picture.—W. H. Creal, theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Am I Bid? with Mae Murray.—Mae Murray is surely very clever and this picture went over good. My patrons are still talking about this one, and want more of her. Don’t be afraid to book it.—V. R. Champion, Opera House, Hazel Green, Wis.—General patronage.

Lasca, with Edith Roberts.—Well produced picture of the Mexican border country following very closely the “red poem.” The film Roberts does fine and has good support. Pleased capacity crowds for Sunday.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lasca, with Edith Roberts.—Cannot say much for this one although it was recommended to me. Very poor.—G. O. Monroe, Gilbert theatre, Beatrice, Nebr.—Downtown patronage.

Bonnie Bonnie Lassie, with Mary MacLaren.—This is one of the best we have had for some time. Good business.—Will F. Krahm, Lorin theatre, Bekeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lasca, with Edith Roberts.—This is a very special picture and I will hold it up for me three days at advanced prices. Universal pictures spell success.—Fred McCoy, Empire theatre, Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Gun Fightin’ Gentleman, with Harry Carey.—A clean-cut Western comedy-drama that drew capacity crowds and pleased 100%. Heard many favorable comments. One of Carey’s best.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitaphot

The Wolf, with Earle Williams.—This is the kind of a picture the patrons like. A Northern Canadian scene, and a dandy good story. Plenty of action. Play it.—J. F. Alford, Lyric theatre, Pryor, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.
The Cambric Mask, with Alice Joyce.——A very poor program picture. No action.——'(a) Forest theatre, Forest City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Cambric Mask, with Alice Joyce.——This star does not get us the money. Night riders' scenes are good.—H. E. Thompson, Temple Hall, Boulder, Mont.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Midnight Bride, with Gladys Leslie.——Splendid picture and very good support, but star does not draw for me.——'(a) Specials—Mass.

The Wolf, with Earle Williams.——(b) This is a good story, but people all seemed to think it excellent. It is a day show and will stand boosting. Earle Williams filled the bill as a star fan fine picture. Attendance fair.——H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts of Men, with George Beban.——Very fine picture. Don't be afraid to run this. It will never grow old.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts of the World, a D. W. Griffith production.——Drew one of the largest house's history at advanced prices and pleased all but a few who do not like any kind of war picture.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Beyond the Law, with Emmett Dalton.——Drew good business, but picture lacks finish in direction and many scenes are extremely amateurish and remind one of the old times of eight or ten years ago.—T. C. Shipley, Essenass theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

The Long Arm of Mannonster, with Henry B. Walthall.——An excellent picture that everyone liked. Should be well advertised in order to and asked for.—H. G. Stettmunden, Jr., Odeon theatre, Chandler, Okla.—General patronage.

Mickey, with Mabel Normand.——Best picture this year.——'(a) Drawing card.—G. Rediske, Star theatre, Ryegate, Mont.—Small town patronage.

The Boomerang, with Henry B. Walthall.——Play this picture. It is timely and well liked by all my audience. Big business.—Eugene Saunders, Saunders theatre, Harvard, Ill.—General patronage.

The Unpardonable Sin, with Blanche Sweet.——A splendid picture with enough variety to please all classes. Drew a big house and the last reel brought the crowd to its feet with a roar of applause.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

The House of Intrigue, with Peggy May.——Very poor. Absolutely nothing to it. Keep away from this one. People were out and asked for their money.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

Beyond the Law, with Emmett Dalton.——A good average picture.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Mickey, with Mabel Normand.——Failed to draw on audiences for conditions. A good comedy-drama, but not what it is cracked up to be. Do not consider a specialty.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Passions, with Lottie Tifflord.——Good picture chuck full of action. Sensational. Patrons more than pleased. 100% picture.—W. Wozniak, Alma theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Long Arm of Mannonster, with Henry B. Walthall.——Far better than the average. Don't be afraid to push it.—G. W. Yeaton, Ioka theatre, Exeter, N. H.—Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Lightning Bryce, (Arrow) with Ann Little and Jack Hoxie.——Holding up well. Fair serial. Plenty of action.—S. Harris, Halfil field theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Invisible Hand, (Vitagraph) with Antonio Moreno.——This serial has action. In fact some that is exaggerated. A little too much blood and thunder, but if you want a thriller this will suit you. It is a regular hair-raising detective story.—H. J. Longaker, Howard theatre, Alexandria, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bound and Gagged, (Pathe) with George B. Seitz.——A dandy serial. It has been drawing better every week. Seitz is well liked here, and everyone hopes he will make another serial. You cannot make a mistake in booking it.—A. C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce, (Arrow) with Ann Little and Jack Hoxie.——This is a clever Western serial full of pep and plenty of swift action. Is going over fine for me, and seems to greatly please all the serial fans.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Elmo the Fearless, (Universal) with Elmo Lincoln.——We have been running this serial a week for over a year. Say, brothers, this one is just simply great. It has got them all beat.—Ed. S. Wegener, Lyric theatre, Valley Jct., 1a.

Daredevil Jack, (Pathe) with Jack Dempsey.——First four episodes good. Not playing to capacity, however.—R. B. Cox, Rex theatre, Batesville, Miss.—Neighborhood patronage.

Elmo the Mighty, (Universal) with Elmo Lincoln.——Funny. Even the kids made fun of it. —Rex theatre, Bessemer, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

T. Fatal Fortune, (Grossman) with Helen Holmes.——Poorest serial I ever ran. Nothing to it.—Wm. Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

William Farnum Completes His First Western of 1920 for April Issuance

William Farnum, under the direction of J. Gordon Edwards, has completed the first of his Fox productions to be made since his arrival on the Pacific Coast.

"The Orphan," a novel by Clarence E. Mulford, is the basis of the picture of the same title. Mulford has written many westerns. In "The Orphan" he has given William Farnum a vehicle in which there is said to be punch after punch. This production, according to the Fox advertising department, contains more than anything Mr. Farnum has done this season.

Unusual Photography

Mr. Edwards took the company to Palm Springs, Cal., near which beauty spot the exteriors for "The Orphan" were staged. The story called for many unusual long photographs, odd angles and quick gun-play.

Director Edwards and John Boyle, his photographer, obtained some beautiful backgrounds in this locality, it is said, and the projection on the screen will disclose new scenery. With Mr. Boyle were three other cameramen who handled the scenes from various angles, working under pistol signals from Mr. Edwards, who directed from horseback.

Louise Lovely Supports

Louise Lovely returned to the Fox fold to play opposite William Farnum in this his first western for the season of 1920. Miss Lovely plays the part of Helen Shields, sister of the sheriff and the cause of all the fun and trouble in the story.

In addition to Miss Lovely, the following players support the star: Henry J. Hebert, Earl Crains, G. Raymond Nye, George Nichols, Harry Devere, Al Fremont, Olive White and Carrie Clarke Ward.

The Mulford novel was adapted by Roy Somerville and is scheduled for publication during April.

Metro’s All-Star Picture

In Process of Production

The filming of "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," by Metro is under way. This comedy-drama by C. W. Bell and Mark Swan will be an all-star production with Ruth Stonehouse and Eugene Pallette in the principal roles. A. P. Younger is finishing the scenario. Edward Dillon will direct.

With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

SOPHIE KERR, author of the story, "Sitting on the World," is coming to southern California to attend the preview of the show by the same name, which is the first independent production of the D. N. Schwab Productions, Inc.

Max Roth, general manager of Sol Lesser enterprises, has returned to Los Angeles after a luring trip to all exchange centers west of Chicago.

As soon as he completes his work on "Civilian Clothes," the east, THOMAS MEIGHAN will return to the Hollywood studios of Famous Players-Lasky, where he will at once begin work in the leading role of William de Mille's special Paramount production, "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," by Leonard Merrick.

FRISCILLA DEAN has been missing from Universal City and from her Hollywood home for a week. Her director informed her that in her next production she would have to weigh at least eight pounds more than she did in "The Virgin of Stamboul," and that Miss de Mille realized that Friscilla was entirely too active under ordinary conditions, packed her off to a mountain resort where she will have nothing to do for ten days but eat, read and sleep.

HENRY MAZET, general secretary of the French high commission in the United States, while in Los Angeles, the western terminal of a special mission for his government, paused to visit the Metro studio.

CHARLES RAY had a birthday anniversary the other day which was celebrated with a dinner given in his honor at the Los Angeles Athletic Club by about twenty of his close friends. Of course he received several tokens of their personal adulation. By a coincidence the day marked the actual beginning of work on his first picture in his own studio from which will emanate all of his features hereafter. The first will be George M. Cohan's comedy, "13 Minutes from Broadway."

The new "Buddy" Post two-reel comedies, produced by the National, are to be released through the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation, according to an announcement from the National studios in Hollywood.

JACK R. PROCTOR, formerly connected with the Charles Dillingham musical comedies as an assistant stage manager and for the past eight months at Universal City, has been selected by Erich von Stroheim as his assistant on all future Universal productions.

The once-humble scenario writers are coming into their own, according to the most reliable signs of the time. Of course C. GARDNER SULLIVAN of the Thomas H. Ince forces, DENNISON CULT of Fox and the heads of Metro, Goldwyn, Lasky and other big studio scenario departments, have been rolling around in automobiles de luxe for years. But among the new school of writers we see startling signs of prosperity. J. BRIEN CHAPMAN of the Benjamin B. Hammon productions has chased a new Marmon coupe; SARAH Y. MAISON of Brentwood has a Stutz and its accompaniment of a negro chauffeur and a white. "هل أبي "estranged Lillian Thomas Wray was a Hudson limousine, and RENE R. RIVIERE of the Brunton staff sports a Stutz roadster.

ALEX CURTIS, one of the best known comedy directors, who began his screen career with Universal, and has since supervised many star films, among them some of Mack Sennett's comedies and Max Linden's, is back again at the Big "U" plant. He has been engaged to produce a series of single reel laugh geters, the first of which, "Three Pairs of Silk Stockings," is now in course of preparation.

A new Liberty airplane motor and two large generators, mounted permanently on a motor truck, have been purchased by Metro from the Crawford Airplane Company as a portable plant to furnish lighting power on location. This equipment will cost $15,000.

MALE KENNEDY has an aeroplane for her recreation hours, the gift of an admirer.

EVERETT C. MAXWELL, well known writer of short stories, is with National, writing continually. Maxwell will write a series of screen satires for the new National star.

An offer to produce a motion picture for the American Legion has been wired to FRANK BERGER, national commander of the world war veterans, by MARION H. Kohn, the Los Angeles producer of short subjects.

J. ROBERT RUBIN, secretary and general counsel of Metro, is in Los Angeles on his first visit to California. His wife, son and baby are with him.

"The Mutiny of Elsinore" will be the second Jack London story to be pictured under the direction of Edward Sedman for the Shurtleff company. Mitchell Lewis will be the star.

PAULINE FREDERICK has been chosen queen of the California raisin carnival, which will be held at Fresno April 30, the center of the immense industry that cures every year two hundred thousand tons of raisins.

POLLY MORAN, the Marion H. Kohn productions comedy star, has received an offer from her London agents to return to England for a tour of the music halls there. Before going into motion pictures, Polly Moran was a vaudeville favorite, both on the Orpheum time in America and Europe.

The National announces that it will make one serial a year hereafter with Jack Hoxie in the principal male role.

The first motion picture of its kind ever made, the photographing of an aviator transferring from the top wing of one plane to another in which the camera was stationed, is credited to Paul E. Eagles, head cinematographer for the Thomas H. Ince studios.

An elaborate duplication of the New York Winter Garden, undoubtedly the largest interior set ever designed for a motion picture, has been constructed at the Brunton studios for Betty Compson's initial production with her own company.

"Feed The Brutes"—Says Mary

Mary Miles Minter, the Resart star, knows how to get along with men, especially wild directors. She feeds Charles Maigne, her new director, every day at noon at "Andy's" wagon on the lot.
Lew Cody is expected to start work shortly on a new series of productions at the Brunswick studios. He will probably be affiliated with Sydney L. Coham, who is at present producing Mac Marsh and Dustin Farnum pictures.

Frances Guinan, former scenario editor for Sessue Hayakawa and author of numerous successes, among them "San Francisco," an Edgar Lewis special production, has been signed by Pathe to write the continuity of Ruth Roland's current serial, "Burnaby and Jil," from the book of Johnston McCulley. Miss Guinan, in addition, is working on a three-act play which is to be produced next season by a leading manager.

Walther Rienner, part owner of one of Norway's largest shipping concerns and well known in both Europe and America as a writer of economic articles, was the guest of J. Warren Kerrigan recently at the Brunswick studios.

Henry Christeen Warnack, erstwhile dramatic critic, has become supervising director of a company whose object is to film stories from the Bible.

John McCormick is now Annette Kellermann's press agent. No, the celebrated tenor is not going to sing the fair dining expert praises in war, nor is he going to forsake his chosen avocation. This is a different McCormick. He formerly was a San Francisco snowman and has joined the exploitation force of Paul Lesser enterprises.

Mary MacLaren is vacationing while she is making up her mind as to what film company she will become affiliated with.

Coast film circles received with interest the announcement that Carmel Myers, former Universal star, has been called into musical comedy in a new picture which is scheduled to report to the Metro studios and will immediately commence work interpreting his latest novel, "Kingdom of the Dust."

A tennis club exclusively for motion picture folk has been organized by Shirley Mason. She has built a handsome home near the Fox studio, which is the temporary headquarters of the organization. Prominent charter members of the club are Bert Lytell, Bernard Dunnin, Alice Lake, Viola Dana, Anna Q. Nilsson, Ward Crane, Philo McCullough, Buster Keaton and Rosemary Theby.

Tsuru Aoki has been commissioned by an American newspaper syndicate as special correspondent in Japan while she is on her trip.

Imported by Richard A. Rowland, president of Metro, to grace the American screen, Helen Raymond, acclaimed last year in Britain, Australia and New Zealand as the reigning American favorite of the English stage, has arrived in Los Angeles and will be a permanent member of the picture colony.

Bentamin B. Hampton, who is making special study of a group of the world's best known of the world's best known novelists, now has eighteen authors on his list and controls film rights of their works, written or yet to be written, which have not yet been filmed. This gives Hampton the rank of writer on the sale of a list of 354 novels and 481 short stories.

Ruth Clifford is again in Florida, where the final scenes of the Prohibition, "The Invisible Ray," are being taken.

Arrangements have been completed for the enlargement of the machine shop at the Thomas H. Ince studio. When completed it will be the largest and most modern department of its kind in any of the motion picture studios in California.

Through the office of Capt. H. C. Billings, representing the western district of the service and information bureau, Thomas H. Ince has been asked to donate a personally directed two-reel picture for government distribution in alleviating unrest and discontentment among ex-service men.

C. Gardner Sullivan, who left Los Angeles recently for his long-anticipated world-tour, was the guest of honor at an informal reception given by emps of the Thomas H. Ince studios before he departed.

Pauline Frederick has commenced work on "Madam X," under the direction of Frank Lloyd. William Courtleigh and Carson Ferguson are in the cast.

Mabel Normand has completed the "Slim Princess" under the direction of Victor Schertzinger.

H. M. (alias "Beanie") Walker, for many years sporting editor of Hearst's Los Angeles Examiner, is about to resign from his newspaper duties to go with Hal Roach as title writer for the Harold Lloyd comedies. In addition to being an acknowledged king pin sporting editor, Walker long has been recognized as a humorist who might have given some of the famous ha-ha boys a run for their coin had he landed on this earth a score of years sooner than he did.

In recognition and appreciation of Hobart Bosworth's masterful performance in the Thomas H. Ince production, "Behind the Door," Sid Grauman has presented Bosworth with a handsome gold watch, a new key set, and any drawing of the back of which is engraved: "A token of appreciation to Hobart Bosworth from Sid Grauman."

Bobbi Vernon entertained 300 kiddies at the Children's Home in Los Angeles recently. Recipient of the "Christie Special" comedy "Petticoats and Pants," in which Bobby is featured.

Luher B. Reed, one of the Thomas H. Ince staff of scenario writers, has returned from a fortnight's trip to Chicago, where he attended the first production of his new play, written in collaboration with Hale Hamilton, formerly a star at the Metro studio. Reed, owing to his success with "Dear Me," the musical version of which he feels another play "coming on" and has contracted to deliver it to Producer John Goldman about August 1.

Colin Campbell, who has directed over 500 pictures, among which are "Monte Carlo," "The Spirit of the Rosary," "The N'et De Well," "The Corsican Brothers," "The Garden of Allah," has adopted the phrase "A Colin Campbell directed Picture," which he expects to put on pictures and advertising matter connected with pictures directed by him. Capt. Walter H. Lytton, president of the Studio Publicists' Association and Campbell's personal p.a., proudly announces this fact.

According to reliable information, Willie Reid is to go on the speaking stage in New York, under the auspices of Jesse Lasky and Oliver Morosco. He will appear for several pictures before going to New York. Reid was once a newspaper reporter, then joined a barnstorming company and finally landed in pictures here after having come west to further his journalistic career.

Colleen Moore and two members of her family were near death recently when her automobile and a street car collided. The machine was badly damaged but no one was hurt.

Mrs. Sidney Drew is in Southern California for a vacation, where she expects to come out here again to make a couple of pictures if she can induce her leading man, John Cumberland, a New York legitimate actor as well as film player, to forego the stage long enough. She has contracted to make a series of five stories by Julian Street, entitled "After Thirty," which created something of a sensation when they appeared in a magazine.

Aileen Manning is now supporting ZaSu Pitts in her latest Brentwood production under the direction of Henry Kolker.

Mary Pickford's Latest United Artists Picture To be "Duchess of Suts" Hiram Abrams, president of United Artists Corporation, announced that Mary Pickford's second picture for publication by United will be "The Duchess of Suts." The picture will be ready for early January release. The picture is based upon Maude Adams' successful vehicle, "Op O' Me," and is adapted from the stage piece by Judge Meine and Richard Bryce. It is said that this story has offered Miss Pickford far more opportunities for the display of her ability than any of her previous pictures.
Circus Star Performs
In Mayflower Picture
Bird Millman is Working at Paragon Studios with
R. A. Walsh

Bird Millman, aerial performer, has been added to the list of international celebrities appearing in motion pictures. This circus star makes her screen debut in "The Deep Purple," R. A. Walsh's first independent production to be presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

Ever since she attained prominence as a star of the circus and vaudeville stage, Miss Millman has been sought by picture producers. Contracts calling for her appearance here and abroad have prevented her from engaging in film work.

Miss Millman lately starred in the Ziegfeld Follies. Her appearance in the Walsh production was made possible by the closing of the Ziegfeld show, two weeks before the opening of the circus season.

Miss Millman has commenced work at the Paragon studios, under Walsh's direction. She will appear as a tight-wire walker in an elaborate cabaret scene, performing many acrobatic feats.

Upon completing her work in "The Deep Purple," the aerial star will join the Barnum and Bailey circus which opens its season at Madison Square Garden, New York.

Elaborate Settings in Eugene O'Brien Vehicle

Eugene O'Brien's sixth Selznick vehicle, "The Figurehead," is said to be one of the most elaborate of any of the productions undertaken by Lewis J. Selznick, president of Selznick Pictures. It is being filmed at the West Coast studio.

Robert Ellis, director, is reported as having ordered three stupendous sets that will make the Ziegfeld Follies look out of date. The striking scenes of the story. In addition to these, it is said that the reproduction of a street in the lower tenement section of the city will be added. The western town will cost $15,000, and that several hundred persons will be used in the mob scenes.

Record Is Claimed For Pre-Publication Showing

Eighty-four days for pre-publication showing of a two-reel comedy in New York is a new record claimed by Educational Films Corporation for "Four Times Foiled," the first of the C. L. Chester comedies. Educational has just contracted with Mr. Chester for the production of thirteen of these comedies a year.

This record is followed by the announcement that "Four Times Foiled" has been booked for sixty days over the Loew metropolitan circuit, including every one of the Marcus Loew Boulevard houses and the principal ones through the city. This is a "limit" booking for the Loew circuit.

Musical Comedy Is Scheduled at Clune's

LOS ANGELES, April 6—It is understood musical comedy will be installed in Clune's auditorium, where some of the biggest pictures of the year have been shown at various times.

A scene from "Chang and the Law," the fourth of the thrilling detective series being distributed by the Republic Distributing Corporation, in which Herbert Rawlinson is starred.

Three Features, Two Dramas and One
Serial on Republic's April Schedule

A variety of subjects is to be found in the April publications of Republic Distributing Corporation. The list contains three feature productions, the issuance of the first two episodes of a new serial, and the continuance of the publication of short detective dramas.

The three features are "An Adventurer," "Common Sense" and "Children Not Wanted." The quality of these three productions, an announcement says, is up to the standard of Republic publications of the past.

First Serial Publication

April marks the issuance of the first Republic serial, namely, "The Whirlwind," featuring Charles Hutchinson. Although the step into the serial field is new to the Republic organization, Briton R. Busch, president, is authority for the statement that this serial has not only all the elements needed in a successful box office attraction, but that the Republic organization has undertaken the work of assisting the exhibitor in the successful running of the entire serial.

"The month of April," Mr. Busch said, "finds the Republic organization widening its scope to the field of serial distribution. We will release more serials and in view of the fact that we expect to sell a serial exhibitor, other serial productions, we have made it a point to assist him in making a success with the first one which we are releasing."

Two Flynn Dramas

Two more of the William Flynn detective dramas are included in the schedule for the month. They are "The Phantom Butler" and "The Kalda Ruby," the serial chief Herbert Rawlinson. The Republic offices are almost swamped with bookings of this series. It is said.

A letter from S. Barret McCormick, manager of the Circle Theatre in Indianapolis, to the Republic offices, commends highly the Flynn series.

The feature production, "The Adventures," stars Julian Eltinge, famous for his female impersonations. The Republic statement contends that Mr. Eltinge is one of the best drawing cards of the country.

The feature release for April 26 is "Common Sense." This production was directed by Lewis William Chaudet, and the featured players are Vola Vale and Ralph Lewis.

Edith Day, who is on route to London, where she will fill a stage engagement, is the star of "Children Not Wanted."

Binghamton Theatre
Screens Two Goldwyn
Pictures at Opening

Two current Goldwyn publications have been booked as opening attractions for the new Strand theatre in Binghamton, N. Y., a $500,000 house that is classed with the finest modern theatres in the city. The "Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come" was chosen by the management for the first half of the opening week, and "The Blooming Angel" for the remaining days.

Both of these productions, according to reports, have met with popular favor at the New York Strand and other leading theatres in the largest cities of the country, where they were given pre-publication showings. In "The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come," an adaptation of the novel by John Fox, Jr., Jack Pickford makes his first appearance as a Goldwyn star. "The Blooming Angel" is a Wallace Irwin Saturday Evening Post story, in which Madge Kennedy is starred.

Both of the Goldwyn pictures will be widely exploited in connection with the opening of the Strand.
United Artists Reports Receipt of Many "Down on Farm" Contracts

An "avalanche" of contracts have been received at the offices of Hiram Abrams of United Artists since the announcement of the publication in April of Mack Sennett's latest five-part comedy, "Down On The Farm," according to a statement issued by the "Big Four" executive.

This picture, which is reported as the greatest feature that ever has come from the studios of the comedy producer, took months to produce. The idea of the subject was suggested to Mr. Sennett, it is said, by certain humorous episodes that happened "down on the farm" at his estate in Los Angeles.

Farm Incidents Suggest It

In their leisure moments, the stars of the Sennett studios undertook to discourage the high cost of living and the re-establishment of relations between ham and eggs. Their efforts at feeding, milking and fattening the guy and festive porker were so fraught with elements of comedy that "Down On The Farm," it is said, "just naturally grew like Topsy and clamored for screen presentation."

Louise Fazenda in the role of the rustic maiden whose charms excite the romantic impulses of a large list of large hearted farm hand and whose prospective inheritance no less excites the desires of the village Shylock trying to act like a Don Juan, is easily in her very best characterization, it is declared.

The opening scenes reveal her at work in the early morning light. The charming rooster of the place has just put the sun on the job, too. The amorous farm hand appears and the romance begins. But the pretty girl's father is harassed by a mortgage of the stubborn kind known to melodrama of a couple of decades ago.

In the hands of the bank of the village the mortgage is a menace and may only be lifted if the father will give his daughter in marriage to the financial agent of domestic destruction. Just how witted this person has the distinction to be, is shown in an episode involving Marie Provost as wife of a poor villager, lien Turpin. Here is a scene that will develop a surprise, and out of it the faithful wife, through the timely efforts of her cross-eyed husband, emerges in tears and smiles. It is typical of the entire production, partaking the quality of travesty and the quality of legitimate appeal.

Others in Plot

In the picture also are John Henry, Jr., and his two friendly enemies, Teddy and Pepper. Teddy is the Great Duke of the Sennett studios. Pepper is the shrewd and clandestine inspector of cream and a tabby that acts as though she knew the camera and its ways. Thrills, laughter, suspense, travesty, satire, a tinge of the burlesque of high art, and spectacle are said to be combined in this comedy.

Has Device to Show Pictures In Daylight

LONDON.—A machine has been invented and patented for screening motion pictures in the daylight. The device will be tested soon at the Drury Lane theatre here, when six spotlight will be focussed on the screen. The inventor claims that excellent results may be obtained in the sunlight.

Litton Will Direct Tarkington's Series

LOS ANGELES, April 6.—Mason N. Litton, for the past year production manager at the Goldwyn Culver City studio, has been assigned to direct the Booth Tarkington "Edgar" series.

Contracts For Pathé Productions in Cuba

Selection Also Gets Rights for Porto Rico and San Domingo

Pathé Exchange announces that M. Ramírez Torres of Selection Film Service has contracted for the rights to all Pathé productions of 1920 and 1921 in Cuba, Porto Rico, and San Domingo. Selection Film Service is reported as supplying the largest theatres on the islands.

"The West Indies is the playground of the Western World," Mr. Torres said, "and in the next two years we will see an ever-growing demand for the very best motion pictures. In anticipation of this demand, I am making preparations and the closing of the contract with Pathé in line with this."

The motion picture theatre is coming into its own in Havana, according to Mr. Torres, and in the other communities where vacationists are seeking rest and diversion. A great new motion picture theatre is to be opened soon in Havana, he said. It is owned by Santos Artigas, a wealthy Cuban.

O. Henry Memorial Story

Is Miss Griffith's Vehicle

Corinne Griffith has just begun production of her next picture, "Gumshoes 4-B," an adaptation from the story by Frank C. early, "The Chatter Girl." This was one of the thirty stories which won prize awards in the recent O. Henry memorial contest conducted by the American Society of Arts and Sciences.

Miss Griffith's previous vehicle was an adaptation of the O. Henry story, "The Memento," which will be published soon under the title, "The Chatter Girl." The adaptation of "Gumshoes 4-B" was written by Lucien Hubbard. Edward H. Griffith will direct the picture. The cast are Alice Calhoun and George Fawcett.

Paramount Arranges to Produce Film in Chicago

J. N. Naulby, general manager of the Eastern studios of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has been in Chicago with John S. Robertson inspecting studio conditions. Mr. Robertson will direct his next picture in Chicago. Arrangements for the studio, lighting and necessary equipment are being made so that Mr. Robertson will be able to commence work immediately.
Joe Brandt Denies Rumors That He Is To Leave National

Joe Brandt has issued a denial of the rumors that he is to leave National Film Corporation of America, for which he is general representative in the East. These rumors started with the announcement of the resignation of I. Bernstein as production manager for National to take up duties supervising Locklear productions, coupled with the press notices that Brandt would head the new organization.

In a telegram, Brandt said: "I have not resigned from National. In fact, I expect to take a big part in the future developments of National."

This statement is taken by members of the trade to mean that the increased production program and general extension planned by the company will have Brandt's cooperation.

Three Metro Companies Reopen Eastern Studios

Starting with immediate production of three special feature pictures selected by all-star casts, Metro will re-open its New York studios, at No. 3 West Sixty-first street, the first week in April. Announcement to this effect, made officially from the Metro offices, contains the information that the entire activities of the eastern plant will be under the personal supervision of Maxwell Karger.

The trio of stories selected for the initial three productions are "Clothes," the society drama by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock, to which Metro recently acquired the screen rights, "The Marriages of Mayfair," by Cecil Raleigh, one of the five Drury Lane melodrama stories Metro's production list, and "The Tyranny of Weakness," a novel by Charles Neville Buck, just bought for the screen.

Buster Keaton to Star In Metro Two-Reelers

Buster Keaton will make two-reel comedies for Metro when he completes his work in the Winchell Smith production of "The New Henrietta," in which Keaton is to be co-starred with William H. Crane at the head of an all-star cast.

This became known at the Metro Studios in Hollywood when the existence of a contract signed in New York between Joseph M. Schenck and Metro Pictures Corporation was disclosed. The contract covers a period of years and calls for eight of the two-reelers annually, with Buster Keaton starred. The pictures are to be made at the Metro Studios and to be distributed by Metro. They will be produced under the management of Lou Anger.

Gets Foreign Distribution

"The Gift Supreme," the third of the productions made by C. R. McCauley's Piccadilly, Inc., has been acquired by Inter-Ocean Film Corporation for exclusive foreign distribution. This is the gist of an announcement issued from the New York offices of the Inter-Ocean Film Corporation.

Christie Buys Fifteen Acre Plot In Hollywood On Which to Build Studio

Enlargement Will Be Made Necessary by Entrance Of Film Company Into the Field of Bigger Productions

Charles H. Christie of Christie Film Company, Hollywood, Cal., announces that fifteen acres of the Bessemeyer tract there has been purchased by the organization. The ground was purchased last July, but announcement of it was not made until the return to Los Angeles of Mr. Christie.

Twenty acres of the tract was purchased by Al Kaufman, who is planning to build a big studio.

On Sunset Boulevard

The Bessemeyer tract, which may soon spring up with two large studio centers, lies on Sunset boulevard, between Western avenue and Gower street, the latter corner being the present site of the Christie studios.

Commenting on the land deal, Mr. Christie said: "We have long realized that when the time was ripe for our entry into the field of big productions we would eventually have to spread out beyond the limits of our block which we are building up within the boundaries of Sunset, Gower, El Centro and Salem streets. This property now is being built up continually and at this location we shall continue the production of our already established one and two-reel Christie comedies.

Quit Outside Production

"We have decided to cut all production of comedies other than those which carry our name. But the short subjects known as Christie comedies will require practically all of the space which we now have, with carpenter shops, dressing room buildings and open and closed stages now arranged for.

"The fact that we are going into feature productions on a big scale makes this enlargement necessary. We have always realized that the most successful way to produce big features is to have the sets well segregated and give plenty of space to each producing company. The features already arranged for and those which we are negotiating to secure will give us a program of production beginning in June with "So Long, Letty," which will require the best services of every part of our organization. So we must protect ourselves and have plenty of acreage on which to spread out when the necessity for additional buildings and stages requires our further building."

Polly Moran Comedies "Two Instead of One Reel"

Joe Brandt, eastern representative of Marion H. Kohn Productions, announces that because of the greater demand on the part of state right buyers for two-reel comedies, the Polly Moran "slap-stick" subjects will be in two reels instead of one as previously announced.

The Kohn projects have the financial support of several San Francisco capitalists. In addition to Grace Cunard, Polly Moran and "Smiling Bill" Jones, Mr. Kohn shortly will announce three additional comedy stars, which will come under his management within the next two months.

ONE OF THE LAUGHS FROM "THE VERY IDEA"

Kerrigan Essays a Different Role in "Dream Cheater" Brunton Production

The production is declared to reveal an entirely new phase of the star's artistry. As Brandon McShane, scholar, dreamer and philosopher, Kerrigan departs at times from light comedy and romance and gives the public a glimpse of his abilities as a dramatic actor.

McShane is a writer on social and economic problems. Upon the loss of his father and the family fortune, he becomes a wanderer of the streets, spending his nights in a cheap tenement apart from his friends. One day he meets a mysterious Persian prince, who gives him a magic talisman. Although this charm has the power to bring his owner anything he may wish for, McShane soon finds it an obsession. He becomes half crazed with dread of it. Finally a girl appears, who starts him on the road to happiness.

Unusual dramatic strength is obtained by sudden and striking contrasts in the production, it is said. The hero's happy boyhood stands out in relief against the tragedies which follow, his former wealth contrasts with his want, his superstition and fear give way to the light of truth and understanding, and his doubt in woman's loyalty is supplied by his love for a girl, a role essayed by Friizi Brunette.

Those In Support

Among the other players who support Kerrigan are: Sam Sothern, a brother of E. H., who does some splendid acting in the role of the poet father; Joseph J. Dowling, who played the Patriarch in "The Miracle Man." Aggie Hering and Thomas Guise have excellent character parts, and Alice Wilson is Mimi Gascoigne, an unscrupulous soebel climber.

Eugene Walter Joins Metro's Author Staff

Eugene Walter, author of "Paid in Full," "The Easiest Way," "Fine Feathers" and other notable stage successes, has joined Metro's staff of authors. The dramatist is already at work on a manuscript for the screen, according to the announcement from the Metro offices telling of his acquisition by that producing and distributing corporation.

Mr. Walter is the third playwright to become associated with Metro within the past few weeks. The other two are Bayard Veiller, author of "Within the Law," and "The Thirteenth Chair," and Winchell Smith, who wrote "The Fortune Hunter" and "Brewster's Millions," and was co-author of "Turn to the Right" and "Lightnin'."

Paramount Has Published "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde"

Famous Players-Lasky published Robert Louis Stevenson's "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" on March 28 instead of in June as had been planned. This John Barrymore vehicle opened an engagement at the Rivoli theatre in New York on that date.

S. R. Kent, sales manager, announced that the change of plans had been made in compliance with the desires of many exhibitors over the country who had asked for immediate issuance.

Spiritual Theme in Mayflower's Latest Title and Cast Has Not Been Announced—Picture Was Directed by Chautard

The production which Emile Chautard now is preparing at the Paragon studios, Fort Lee, N. J., is based on a widely known stage play dealing with life after death. Actual filming has been completed.

The director now is cutting and assembling the picture which will be presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation.

The title and cast of the picture are being withheld pending final completion of the production. It is hinted that an important role has been assigned to a noted spiritual medium.

The secrecy surrounding Chautard's recent activities at the studio has given rise to speculation in the trade. Mayflower's statement leads to the belief that the production will be the most ambitious undertaking of the director's career.

The arrival in this country of Sir Oliver Lodge, eminent British scientist has given impetus to interest in the supernatural with which the story is said to deal.

In its announcement, Mayflower particularly stresses the timeliness of the forthcoming Chautard production. Though totally dissimilar from "The Mystery of the Yellow Room," Chautard's previous picture which Mayflower presented through Realart, the director's new subject will contain an equal measure of dramatic force and suspense.

Newspaper Artist Is Appointed Art Chief of Select Department

George Willard Bonte, formerly manager of the art department of the New York Herald, has been appointed art director of the Select art department.

For many years Mr. Bonte has been recognized as one of the leading lights of his profession. When the Herald was combined with the New York Post, Bonte resigned and joined the Selznick organization.

The members of Mr. Bonte's staff are: William J. Montgomery, Omar E. Butler, James MacDonald and Carl Gross.

Trattner Stars Miss Hunt

David Trattner Production Company, operating at the Balboa studios at Long Beach, Cal., is presenting Irene Hunt, former Griffith star, in a series of two-reel comedy-dramas. These stories are adapted from "IA Yellow Journalist," by Miriam Michelson, author of "In the Bishop's Carriage," David Trattner is president of the new company; E. M. Rosenthal vice-president; Erwin Trattner, secretary and treasurer, and Shields Lawson, business manager.
EXHIBITORS

Goldwyn
Manager

One or two-page advertising tie-ups between theatres and merchants have ceased to be a novelty. But when a special section of a newspaper is devoted to a week's showing of pictures made by one company, it speaks well for the enterprise of the showmen concerned.

An edition of the Enterprise-Courier of Charleston, Mo., bears witness of what was accomplished by Manager McCutcheon of the American theatre and Harry Lorch, Goldwyn press and service representative for the St. Louis territory. Four of the sixteen pages in this sheet are devoted to advertising Goldwyn week at the American theatre, tied up with display announcements of the town's prominent merchants.

Get Lead Story

Then the leading first page story starts off with the head: "Unusual Advertising in This Week's Issue—Special Section of Four Pages Devoted to Opening Programs at the American Theatre." The story follows:

A series of advertising which is unusual both in local advertising annals and in importance to the theatre-going public of Charleston is carried this week in the Enterprise-Courier, on pages 9-4 of the second section. This advertising features a series of Goldwyn pictures which are to be shown next week at the American theatre to mark the reopening of this popular playhouse under the management of the McCutcheons of Campbell, Mo., who recently purchased the theatre from W. M. Woods.

Programs Given

"As will be noted, the center of each of the four pages named is given over to the advertising of the programs for each night of next week, with a Goldwyn special each night, and at the top and bottom of each page the local business houses have taken space to 'connect up' with the reopening of the theatre, thus showing that they realize the value of a good theatre in Charleston as a means of bringing trade from outside territory.

"During the present week the American has been closed for a thorough overhauling. The building is being thoroughly cleaned and repaired. Seats are being rearranged and reupholstered, and other steps taken toward making the theatre a more popular place, if possible, than it has ever been heretofore.

The new managers are experienced in the motion picture business, and are making plans which will result in bringing to this city each week popular features which will doubtless prove very attractive.

Four Pictures Shown

"On next week's program, according to Manager McCutcheon, are features which as yet have not been released even in the larger cities, obtained at great expense for the reopening of the American.

Ince Articles Syndicated

To Large Newspapers as Exploitation Proposition

Hunt Stromberg, director of publicity and advertising for Thomas H. Ince studios, Culver City, Cal., is syndicating to the metropolitan newspapers of the country a series of articles on Mr. Ince's methods of production as told in actual interview with the producer.

The production series embodies seven articles dealing with various "inside" phases of picture-making and studio activity. Managing editor and photoplay critics on many of the leading dailies requested the series in advance, it is announced, and agreed to publish on successive days the seven installments.

Latest reports from the Ince studios claim that twenty metropolitan newspapers, including among which are The Chicago Journal, the Kansas City Star, the New Orleans Item, the Los Angeles Herald, the Cleveland News-Leader, the Dallas Times-Herald, the Milwaukee Sentinel, are running the entire series. In addition, scores of smaller daily papers in practically every section of the United States and Canada, are "playing up" the series.

The entire series is copyrighted by Mr. Ince to prevent infringement by local or correspondence schools devoted to picture-loving.

From an exhibitor's viewpoint, the series carries added significance in that it will focus attention directly on Thomas H. Ince and exploit the production methods employed by him and strengthen the box office power of Ince productions.

Theatres in Forty Foreign Countries Use American Films

WASHINGTON.—Although less than a dozen foreign countries use American unexposed motion picture film, forty or more are using our films in their theatres, according to a report obtained by the Washington bureau of the Exhibitors Herald from the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. Our exports during January, as reported by the bureau, totaled 14,734,046 linear feet of unexposed film, worth $241,947, and 12,915,981 feet of exposed film, worth $833,389.

Our most promising customer for exposed film is Canada, which took more than 1,500,000 feet during the month. Although Argentina and Brazil are close followers, with some 1,300,000 feet apiece, England is our largest customer for unexposed film, but France is only about 100,000 feet a month behind.

EVIL IN FICTIONIZING PICTURES

Pittsburgh Exhibitor Declares That Motive Is Right But Misdirected—Would Not Publish Story Until After First Run of the Production

Publication by fan magazines of the story of a picture from three to six weeks before the subject is published is condemned by Peter Antonoplos, manager of the Olympic theatre, Pittsburgh, Pa., as an injustice to every exhibitor throughout the country who has booked the attraction or intends to do so.

In a statement he terms this practice of allowing such periodicals the fiction rights to productions so far in advance of publication as "acid that eats the interest out of the most enthusiastic theatre-goers and an unsurpassed way of discouraging the sale of tickets for a showing of the attraction fictionized."-

Bad Effects Experienced

Mr. Antonoplos admits that the practice is kept up with sufficient good intention, but states that its had effect on the motion picture exhibitor overbalances the "good intentions."

"There are many good reasons why this ill-managed practice either should be entirely abolished or systematized," he declares. "In the first place, practically every person who is a real fan reads two or three fan magazines. The motion picture public is no longer than the fan magazine public.

In every issue of every magazine there appears at least one—sometimes two or three—stories about motion picture feature attractions that will be released soon, and that have not as yet been thrown on any screen in any theatre in the country. You can hardly blame the fan for taking advantage of whatever fiction or story value there is. But in reading the advanced story the picture loses a great portion of its real value and in many cases the reader is prejudiced against the motion picture even before it has left the cutting room. In presenting these stories in detail the press agents are not accomplishing what they set out to accomplish. They are missing fire and instead of helping to sell their pictures they are making handicaps for the exhibitor."

Plan Is Misdirected

"We will all admit that the motive is right, but it is misdirected. The press agents send out the story, earnestly believing that it will stimulate business for the exhibitor. Their object is to get the name of their attraction, a story about it, a press notice, anything before the public so that the kind of publicity is good as long as it is publicity. One advance notice on an attraction on that does not exactly right with the reader, or one story on a coming attraction that leaves a dark brown taste in the mouth of the public will do more harm than can be righted by any honest avowals of the press on the real merits of the picture in question.

"In a general way I have outlined for my own benefit a counter scheme or revision of the old practice that will change the present aspect for all concerned. Instead of publishing the story before the attraction's release hold on to the story and have it printed after the picture has played in the majority of the cities. In this way the effect for the attraction will be postponed, but the slight delay will tend to create more interest and business for return showing of the attraction.

"It is a rule that can be made, with very little labor, to work both ways. It should be systematically reversed in order for exhibitors and producers, as with exchange men to make the best out of every attraction, that is worthy of being printed in a fan magazine. I had occasion to see the scheme work out.

Antonoplos' Observations

"The occasion was during my run of 'The Thunderbolt,' Katherine MacDon- ald's first starring vehicle through First National. I played the attraction several months ago, for the first time. At that date no 'fictionized' story had been given out. I was pleased to note that the picture had made excellent box office receipts for me. I saw Mr. Skirboll, manager of the local exchange, and arranged for a second showing two months later. About two months after the original release date I noticed a story of 'The Thunderbolt' in one of the leading screen magazines. It was a detailed story of the picture, well written and descriptive in every detail of the motion picture.

"When I played the picture for the second time, I was not surprised to find that the excellent business that I had experienced at the attraction's first visit to my theatre was repeating itself. I have no doubt that the story in this fan magazine helped to a great extent in my patronage. I give this system increased business for this particular attraction during rebooking over the entire country.

"The chief reason against story publication previous to the attraction's release is simple. Many fans knowing the plot of the story will not sit through the film. And besides, the story that is run prior to the release is usually taken from the original story version—provided that the attraction is dramatized from a story."

Record Year’s Output Planned by Vitagraph
President Smith Goes West to Arrange to Expand His Activities

A record year’s output for Vitograph is planned by Albert E. Smith, president, and with this prospect in view he has gone to the West Coast to study conditions at Hollywood, Cal., where he will confer with W. S. Smith, general manager in the West, and lay out a working schedule for 1920.

Mr. Smith has expressed it as his opinion that 1920 will create a record for the industry, and accordingly he has expanded his Hollywood studio grounds by ten acres and increased his activities there to ten units.

Vitagraph now has twenty acres in Hollywood. Its original site of ten acres has been utilized to capacity with stages, permanent sets, laboratories and offices. The additional ten acres will be occupied by more stages and permanent sets.

With two features and three serials included in the ten units at the studio, the magnitude of the production schedule has assumed unusual proportions. In addition there is constantly a regular star feature at work. The first feature to be published under the new schedule will be "The Courage of Marge O’Doone."

 Warns Distributors and Exhibitors to Securely Fasten Film Conveyors

A bulletin has just been sent to the officials of all film companies by P. H. Stilson, chairman of the transportation committee of the National Association of the Motion Picture Industry, calling attention to a recent order from the president’s office of the American Railway Express Company, which provides that covers of motion picture film conveyors shall be sealed or otherwise securely fastened so as to prevent the covers from becoming unfastened in transit.

Chairman Stilson urges that instructions be given to all employees handling film shipments to either seal or securely fasten their film containers.

The attention of exhibitors also is directed to the requirements of the order issued by the express company.

INCREASING DURABILITY OF FILM

Application of a Thin Coating of Wax Along The Perforations Relieves Unsteadiness and Premature Breakdowns in Projecting Positive

The difficulty sometimes experienced in projecting new film, frequently resulting in unsteadiness and premature breakdown, may be largely avoided by the application of a thin coating of wax along the perforations. Machines that do this work rapidly and inexpensively are now available at small cost.

In the making of the light sensitive emulsion of motion picture film one of the chief ingredients is gelatine, a gelatinous substance which readily absorbs from and gives off moisture to the air. In freshly developed film, the gelatine contains a considerably higher percentage of moisture than seasoned film, and when in this condition is easily affected by heat, tending to render it soft and tacky, particularly in moist atmosphere.

Cause of Trouble

As used in motion picture film, the first point at which the gelatine comes in contact with unusual temperature is at the aperture gate of the projection machine, where the light from the arc is concentrated, producing heat to a degree which softens the gelatine and causes it to collect on the tension springs or shoes where it rapidly dries and forms a flintlike deposit.

As the film passes through the projector, the hardened deposit of gelatine continues to accumulate and offers further resistance which produces deep scratches along the perforations with added possibility, as the resistance increases, of the teeth of the intermittent sprocket tearing and damaging the perforations, sometimes to an extent where injury to the print is irreparable.

Overcoming Difficulty

Careful waxing produces, under the action of heat, a smooth and polished surface on the gelatine along the perforations; provides against the liability of strain in the first projection of new prints; materially benefits successive runs, and greatly prolongs the commercial life of the prints.

In view of the benefits to be derived and of the comparative simplicity with which waxing can be accomplished, the advisability of its use will be readily understood.

Book Kremer’s Reissues

The third Chaplin comedy of the series now being distributed by Victor Kremer Film Features, has been booked by Hugo Reisenfeld, managing director of the Rialto and Rivoli theatre in New York, for the week of April 18 at the first named house. Following the engagement at the Rialto, first runs have been obtained in all of the leading theatres in New York and Northern Jersey, for these Chaplin comedies by New York Independent Masterfils, Inc., the local Kremer exchange, it is announced.

The various newspaper comments on the showings of the Chaplin-Kremer pictures, which thus far have been presented on Broadway, have been favorable.

Fire and Bomb Proof Vault Installed
At Rothacker’s Laboratory in Chicago

A fire, bomb and inspector proof vault now is ready at the Rothacker Chicago studio-laboratory to receive 6,000,000 feet of negatives. Engineers say that hardly anything short of a direct hit by a 16-inch shell could touch a Rothacker client’s negative once it is inside that vault.

It is really five vaults within a vault within a vault. First is an outer wall of reinforced, waterproof concrete and brick, twenty-four inches thick. Within this vault, inside a 6-inch “air cushion,” is another vault of similar construction. And within this second vault are built five vaults sealed with automatically closing steel doors.

Same Temperature Year ‘Round

The “air cushion” between the outer and second vaults is for ventilation and insulation. It will aid in keeping the heat out in the summer, the same temperature to be maintained inside the inner vaults the year around. A specially designed brick ventilation shaft, which rises about fifteen feet above the remainder of the vault, will permit the free passage of air currents into and out of the inner vaults. Thus there will be no chance for the accumulation of film fumes.

There are no electric switches inside the film vaults.

While the vault sits alongside the Diversey Parkway, Rothacker plant, there is no connecting passageway. To enter the vault one must leave the plant proper and walk across the Rothacker back yard. Only two persons will have keys and the right of entrance to the film vaults—the vault tender and Mr. Rothacker.

To Build Other Vaults

For its size this vault is the most costly piece of construction Mr. Rothacker ever contracted for. He said that he wanted clients to be able to send in negative and then feel secure that no fire, earthquake, burglar or anything else could touch it. The film vault at the Rothacker plant which is being built in Los Angeles will be patterned after this one. So will the vaults of the laboratories which are to be erected in New York and London.

This vault makes the third at the Rothacker Chicago headquarters. There is one on the first floor of the laboratory which is used for raw stock storage and another on the second floor which is for “live” negatives and positive prints, with the new vault the Rothacker plant has a total fireproof storage capacity of 7,000,000 feet of film.

Shirley Mason to Play in “The Little Pagan”

A third story written by Pearl Doles Bell, the well known author, has been purchased by William Fox as a vehicle for Shirley Mason. “The Little Pagan” is the title of the book.

“Her Elephant Man,” came from the pen of Mrs. Bell and constituted Miss Mason’s first starring vehicle under the Fox banner. Her second production, recently completed at the Hollywood studios, was “Molly and I,” adapted from the book by Frank R. Adams. For her third Fox film the little actress returned to Mrs. Bell for material and is now engaged making “Love’s Harvest.”

CONSUMERS BUILDING GREATER STARS PRODUCTIONS CHICAGO INC.
With the anticipated return of the two "prodigals" to the fold of Jones, Linick & Schaefer enterprises, Aaron Jones tendered a banquet to his staff of executives at the Hotel Sisson last Friday, April 3. Those present were: Samuel I. Levin, Ralph T. Kettering, Norman E. Field, J. C. Matthews, Thomas Bushnell, Louis J. Jones, John J. Jones, Emil Mayer, and Sid Faller. With Aaron J. Jones the sole member of this enterprising combine constantly on the job during the lengthy winter session, his two partners, Ad Linick and Pete Schaefer, sojourning in California, it looks to us as though "A. J." is booked for a long stay from the environs of the Windy City upon the arrival of his partners.

The exchange of the Celebrated Players was thrown into a furor last week during the visit of a comely Gypsy. Took her about ten minutes to analyze Johnnie Medwick with the result that John and the family were soon to total five. Now stands three. Never mind John. The old H.C.L. is bound to slip one or these days. St Geriyes, we understand is to be or has been, married thrice. At that you can't believe everything you hear, besides "Gypsy" are bug guesers. We'd say, Si?

I. Maynard Schwartz of the local First National exchange for the future will give all communiques a refreshed "Chicago manager of sales." Congrats Maynie. Keep the good work humming.

The tornado of last week come pretty near making a mermaid of Paul de Outo of the local Republic exchange. It seems Paul's home is rather close to the shore line of Lake Michigan, at Wilmette, and while he was inhaling the ozone, the tempestuous blow struck him and after a few moments of rough handling, finally delivering him to a watery embrace of the big drink.

H. L. Hempeler is another new face to be seen about the local Republic exchange and will call upon the exhibitors of the Illinois territory.

Abe Powell, better known as the Shakespeare of the Southside, again bursts forth in our midst with another literary squawk. Men—Tenton. Steady there. Let's go. For some girls we'd climb a tree. Few know how high that tree might be. But the girl in mind is such a peach. We'd never ever could her reach. She is the "Celebrated" Sophie Lee. A.P. Abe reminds one muchly of the famous ring Lardner. They both use a pencil and paper.

With "Blondy" Derbin and his new "Detroit road cootey" and Sam Rimer behind the wheel of his 1932 Oakland speedster, Chicago boulevards are sure in for some thrillers this season.

Frank J. Flarethy, manager of the Unity Photoplays exchange, tells us his company is shortly to announce an offering of film subjects that'll bring blushes of envy to even the biggest national distributors of the nation. Must be some array, when Frank's natural modesty is taken no consideration.

CHICAGO TRADE EVENTS

Reported by "Mac"

Tom Deane, Omaha manager for Vitascope accompanied by his star salesman, H. Melchior, gave the boys of the Chicago branch a brief visit last week. With the roads in fair condition now, the chances are that these cornhuskers will arrive back in Omaha before the end of April. Yet the Oakland will now garage in Omaha for the future. Still Tom admits Chi has some motor roads than can't be found elsewhere.

Morris Hellman and one of his clever Universal salesmen, Harold Gollos were sighted the other day doing the Winter Garden show. If we had realized that the "shivery selection" was the cause of detainment we would have had Max arrange to put it on first. Apropos, the Gollos Overland car certainly can cover territory.

Sidney Smith, erstwhile United M. P. T. representative must have joined the Sun worshippers cult. Way out the other A. M. about three bells waiting for old Sol to come up over the Eastern horizon.

P. C. Havill, former "thirty-four" man of the local Robertson-Cole exchange has resigned to become affiliated with the local Pathé exchange and will handle their special features in this territory.

Ben Beafler, manager for the Select exchange, arranged for a U. S. Army truck to haul Eddie Silverman's wardrobe trunk to the Century, so that youngster would be properly cared for along sartorial lines while attending the big Selznick convention in New York.

With the approach of Spring, the Jones, Linick & Schaefer managers have become afflicted with motorists. Samuel I. Levin has just invested his dividends in a new Mitchell Sedan while Ralph T. Kettering has bought a Willys-Knight Sedan. Sid Faller has purchased a Mitchell touring car, Norman Field and John G. Burch have both invested in Moline-Knights. John J. Jones has a new Buick roadster. Looks like it has been a prosperous year for Jones, Linick & Schaefer and that their managers must be sharing in the profits. If they are not, they ought to be, for everybody is doing it these days.

Just recently the Stock Company at the Shubert theatre, Milwaukee, gave trial performances of "Rose O' Killarney," a new Irish play by Ralph Thomas Kettering. Each Spring Kettering brings us a bunch of new plays. The second one to reach production this Spring will be a farce comedy called "The Cheaters." This also will receive its premiere at the Shubert theatre, Milwaukee, within a few weeks. The third of the new Spring Kettering plays is called "Sins and Sable." It will get its trial down east, probably in Cleveland.

Willie Hersheberg of the local Metro office was formally introduced to the holdup fraternity last week. To make certain, the stick-up "gentleman" greeted Billiest in front of the Palace, accepting a contribution of a couple of hundred dollars, besides a neat diamond stick-pin and watch and chain. Just as soon as friend Bill can get moving his hands in a normal fashion we expect a detailed account.

Dez Goodman, W. W. Hodgkinson manager of the St. Louis branch, spent the week-end of April 3 in the city. Must be a profitable neighborhood, that St. Louis film sector. Del had a neat array of century bills manufactured by the U. S. mint with him.* * *

A special showing was given of the latest D. W. Griffith picture, "The Idol Dancer," at the Playhouse on Thursday morning by the local First National Exchange. The Riviera orchestra furnished the music and a large crowd of specially invited guests attended the showing which was raptly applauded at the finish.

Case Against Baggot
Finally Disposed of Star Arrested When Seeking Atmosphere For Serial
"Hawk's Trail"

Final disposition has just been made of the case against King Baggot, who was caught in a rain on a Chinese "fence," while working on his latest serial, "The Hawk's Trail," produced by Burston Films, Inc.

In one of the episodes of the picture, the star portrays the part of a Chinese merchant, and in order to get the proper atmosphere and feeling for his role, he had visited many Chinese shops and resorts. But one day he happened into a shop which was under the surveillance of the police.

The place was entered by the minions of the law, who arrested the shopkeeper on the charge of being a receiver of stolen goods, while King Baggot, with the rest of the customers, was hailed off to testify on the supposition that he had come there to dispose of stolen merchandise.

It took a great deal of explaining and many telegrams before the judge was convinced as to the identity of the star and he was released, and until just recently the case was still pending.

Membership Drive to Be Started at Dinner

Watterson R. Rothacker, president of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Co., has made plans for a dinner to be held about the middle of April, at which time a drive will be launched for members of the Chicago Cinema Post 494.

Mr. Rothacker has been the moving force in the organization of this organization since the idea was conceived, some weeks ago. It is planned to interest all Chicago veterans of the war who are in any way connected with the motion picture industry.

Russell Will Star in Ridgwell Culom Novel

Negotiations have been completed with those handling the literary works of Ridgwell Culom, whereby William Fox obtains the world motion picture rights to that author's western novel, "The Twins of Suffering Creek."

The story, while not the first work of the author to be pictured, is said to be one of his best efforts and well suited to picture purposes. William Russell will be starred in the production.

Ehlers Opens Playhouse

MILWAUKEE, WIS.—The Paris theatre has been opened by A. F. Ehlers after extensive alterations. The house has been dark for some time.

Mayflower Studios to Move to West Coast

The Mayflower Photoplay Corporation may possibly concentrate all its production forces on the Pacific Coast, according to a report emanating from the Paragon Studio in Hollywood, where Emile Chautard and R. A. Walsh are now making their productions.

It was learned at the studio that the Mayflower lease expires early in April and Isaac Wolper, president of the company, is seriously considering the advisability of sending both the Walsh and Chautard companies to Los Angeles, where Allan Dwan and Sidney A. Franklin are now working. This move would result in concentrating all the companies whose product is being presented by Mayflower. If it is decided that Walsh and Chautard are to go west, they will probably draw out of the Paragon Studio about the middle of April, when Walsh will have finished "The Deep Purple" and Chautard's production will also be complete.

Joins Humanity Company

Upon the completion of Anita Stew- art's latest picture, "The Yellow Ty- phon," J. H. McCluskey left the Louis B. Mayer studio to act in an exclusive capacity for the Humanity Producing Company, now filming an adaptation of "The Sowing of Alderson CREE.

Mr. McCluskey departs for Calistoga, a small town in the northern part of the state, a few days ago with Director Ollie L. Sellers and a company of thirty-five people to make a number of exterior scenes for the picture. The locale chosen is the same used in "When Bear Cat West Dry," a Humanity production on which Mr. McCluskey was engaged.

Valentine Opens

DEFIANCE, O.—W. A. Thomas and Harry Henry, both Auburn veterans, have opened the new Valentine theatre here, said to be one of the finest in Northwest Ohio. High class motion picture programs, with an occasional stage attraction, will be the order of things maintained.

THE NEW SCREEN

A picture of the much talked of telegraph screen used in six New York theatres and proving very successful in eliminating eye strain and distortion.

Burton King Completes
"The Road to Arcady"

Burton King, whose recent production of "Why Women Sit!" is now being sold to state right buyers, has completed the final scenes of "The Road to Arcady," his first independent production. Mr. King is now engaged in cutting and titling the film, and he expects to announce his plans for distribution soon.

"The Road to Arcady" was written for the screen by Lawrence McClosky and Harris Chandler of an Edith Sessions Tupper novel, which appeared recently in serial form in "The Ladies' Home Journal." The story is said to be a society drama which affords an opportunity for Mr. King to use elaborate and artistic settings.

The cast in support of Virginia Lee, who makes her debut as a star in this feature, includes Harry Benham, Julia Swany Gordon, Roger Lyttoun, Stephen Gratton, Hugh Huntley and Mildred Wayne.
H. A. Jones, the late manager of the Garden theatre, was seen last Saturday evening at the Goldwyn Exchange in Omaha, Neb., as director of publicity for that territory.

L. Natelson, manager of the Labliner and Trinz Wilson theatre, is putting up a very elaborate musical program with his nine-piece orchestra, under the able direction of Prof. David S. Mason. It is said that patrons from a couple of miles around have attended this spring's music. The Lost City is booked at this house for the week of April 29.

L. Beecro, manager of the Lincoln theatre, on Madison street, believes in good projection. He is installing 5 k. w. transmitter. Business at this house on Good Friday evening was practically capacity. Henri Dellman was seen putting over some good selling arguments before the good patrons who left before the finish. Do the Dead Talk? Well, we'll say Henri can talk.

Tom Murray, who runs the Thalia on Eighteenth street, and who has been in his show business in this neighborhood four years, plans to entirely remode the Thalia. He has just installed a 3 k. w. transverter.

"Lightning Bryce" is getting the money for E. M. Star, owner of the Overland theatre on Eighteenth street. E. M. stated that this is the best serial that has ever been shown in his seven years on this street. The Overland is just receiving its annual spring cleaning and a fresh coat of paint.

Joe Lazaroff is still handling the ducats at the Pershing on Twelfth street; also the fountain. He is told us that business was never better and that Lent had no terrors for him. The Pershing has just been remodeled at a cost of $5,000 and is now in a first-class condition.

F. O. Nelson has purchased the Logan Square theatre. George DuMont, formerly manager of the Kinema at Los Angeles, will manage this house. We can look for some big things from George, as his reputation as a showman in L. A. while at the Kinema was 100 per cent.

Fred Dix of Wayneville, Ill., was a visitor in the city last week. Fred, who operates the Dixie at Wayneville, advises us that he is now in a new location, the present site of the Dixie being in a better locality, and the remodeling of same cost him $3,000. Manager Dix stated that he was looking for a location in Chicago or in some town in Illinois of about 5,000 population.

O. F. Vonesh, manager of the Avers theatre on Twenty-sixth street, states that it is good to be alive these days, after the tornado last Sunday. With the storm he did not seriously damage the Avers, still it was a mighty close call. Manager Vonesh advises that he has just signed up for Paramount and Select service.

B. Polasky, owner of the Victoria, has just installed two new Simplex machines. Business is good at this theatre and Manager Polasky states the only trouble is that is house was too small. A new front will be put on this spring and improvements to cost $5,000 will be carried out.

Jack Buckie, manager of the Parkway theatre, on Twenty-second street, is back on the job after an absence of a few weeks spent with the dentist. Jack stated that aside from getting six teeth extracted and numerous blind abscesses treated, he is alright. Improvements to cost $21,000 are to be started on the Parkway early this spring. A new stage and balcony are to be built.

I. Teacher, owner of the Star theatre, Evanston, is missing these days. He has not been seen for a week. We could not learn the fortunate lady's name, but we do know that Manager Teacher was married last week and is now on his honeymoon. Congratulations, old man! Evidently you have paid no attention to First National's ad. that has appeared in the trade papers the last few weeks.

G. A. Ward & Son, of the Wabash theatre, plan a great many improvements for that popular house this spring. A large electric sign, the entire lobby remodeled, a new screen and various other installations.

H. Lutz can be seen in the lobby of the New Illinois theatre, on Wentworth avenue, looking the picture of health. Manager Lutz stated that he had about entirely recovered from his recent attack of rheumatism that compelled him to take a trip to Hot Springs for three months.

Lawrence Bachman, of the Bridgeport theatre, on Archer avenue, states that the charming lady exhibitor, Mrs. V. Jansen, should lay off his paper. The other night when Lawrence started to post his one's and three's, he found that someone had exchanged paper with him. Investigation brought out the fact that the Gem's fair owner had taken Lawrence's package by mistake.

Ralph Crocker, the live exhibitor that runs the Star at Elgin, stated that the recent tornado had left his house in darkness. The wires are all down in his city and in consequence there will be no theatre operating in Elgin for at least two weeks. Ralph stated that the first weekly camera man on the job at Elgin was the Gaumont, man, who came down in a special car from Chicago.

E. J. Arnold advises that he has installed a five-piece orchestra and a soloist. There are a great many large theatres on the South Side than the Harmony, but none are better equipped or conducted; that is the reason that this house plays to capacity business.

J. J. Parant, who modestly admits that he hails from New Orleans, stated that he is seriously considering doing away with the poster advertising for his lobby. The Express strike has made it difficult for the Pastime to receive posters, and signs have taken their place, with a large increase in attendance. Manager Parant will abandon the regular form of three sheet entirely, and only display photos.

W. N. Fay, of the Temple theatre, Elgin, was a visitor in the city last week, and was seen wielding a heavy fork at the Morrison Hotel.

R. E. Watson, formerly manager of the 20th Century theatre, has aligned himself with the Gumbiner Amusement Circuit, as the manager of the New Regent on Halstead. The program policy of the New Regent has been changed as well as various other changes in the theatre staff and under the able management of Mr. Watson, the New Regent should get its share of the business.

The Hillside theatre on 60th is giving its patrons the last word in perfect projection. E. J. Haley, who finds time aside from his insurance business to operate this theatre, stated that the Gold fiber screen just lately installed was one of the best investments he had ever made, and that the attendance had more than doubled.

D. E. Rice, who has managed the Columbus for the last four years, is certainly one of Englewood's town fathers. We make note of the other every time we visit with Manager Rice, in the lobby of the Columbus, that a theatre manager could be as well acquainted with its patrons. Mr. Rice certainly has the right system for a healthy box office, as he lives and trades in the neighborhood of his theatre, and knows every one by their first name. D. E. was formerly with Geo. K. Spoor and is now an officer in the West Englewood Business Men's Association.

H. M. Aaron, manager of the Crystal theatre on 63rd St., has just returned from a business trip to New York City. Herbert is busy completing the new lobby, or as the Crystal and redecorate. Dad Aaron can be seen any evening smiling on the Crystal patrons, strongly entrenched in the box office, and when Dad is in that position there is room for nothing else but the kale.

Thomas Johnson, who packs them in the Linden theatre on 63rd St., let us in on the secret that Lent has not the terror for the theatre that it has of yore. Thomas stated that he finds business just as good if not better. We scented a big story the other night when we gazed at Manager Johnson's hand; the sweep the thought was blood was only red paint.

C. Bebesch, manager of the Garfield on Halstead, advises that the Garfield will be entirely remodeled this Spring. Business is excellent at this theatre.

SAYS Motion Picture Journal: “This picture, before its appearance, was boomed and boosted to beat the band. And it does not disappoint—it surpasses expectations! Its success should be record-breaking. Let your patrons know that this picture has all the adventure, romance and rascality, enacted in spectacular settings, that the fascinating title suggests. The producers boosted this picture and delivered the goods. You can do the same, and the box-office will soon show you were right.”

Mr. J. S. Woody, Gen. Mgr.,
Realart Pictures Corporation,

New York City.

Dear Mr. Woody:

Having watched Miss Wanda Hawley's work in "Old Wives for New," "We Can't Have Everything," "For Better, For Worse" and especially as "Beauty" in "Everywoman," one could not help but comment upon her work, and I have often wondered why someone had not signed her up as a top-notchler.

When you announced that you had secured the services of Miss Hawley, I knew that you had picked a winner. I have booked Miss Wanda Hawley in her first picture, "Miss Hobbs," for a week's run in our Rose Theatre. You certainly have got to hand it to REALART and its POLICY. It is one that bespeaks confidence. Here you are releasing one of the most promising young actresses in the motion picture field, one who has proven herself a big leaguer, and you decline to book a series of her attractions. I have never heard of its equal in the history of the industry.

Another thing, I booked this attraction without a preview, which is rather unusual for us. However, REALART has made good on everything they have promised, and when one knows the integrity of the producer, the star, the story and the director, what more is there to do?

With best wishes for your continued success, I am

Yours very truly,

If his producers had given Mitchell Lewis regularly such stories as the powerful "King Spruce" and Rex Beach's "The Barrier" you would be paying more for his productions than you pay for any other male star. "King Spruce" puts Mitchell Lewis right where he belongs.

"King Spruce" is a story of the Big Outdoors. Full of the smell of the forests. Thrilling with the excitement of breaking a huge log-jam; smoky with the thrills of a vast forest fire. Aquiver with the leaping blood of battle. And never ignoring a tender, clean love story.

The Dream Cheater

By HONORE DE BALZAC Directed by ERNEST C. WARDE

A story famous for fifty years is the basis of “The Dream Cheater”—Honore Balzac’s story “The Magic Skin.” Countless people have read it and remember it. It has a ready-made world audience of old folk and youngsters.

This production has all of the fine technical resources of the Robert Brunton organization and spirited direction by Ernest Warde. You will find by looking through the trade paper reviews you are saving, that the critics like it.

Dear Sirs:

Received pamphlet containing subjects from April 1, 1918, to April 1, 1919. Worth ten times its price. Enclosed find check for $1.50 for lists for coming year and back catalogs.

Thanking you,

Respectfully,

COALVILLE OPERA HOUSE.

The above letter received from an exhibitor in a mining town is typical of letters from exhibitors everywhere who bought, last year, the Board's catalog of selected films. There is now ready for distribution a later issue of this catalog (which contains no advertising matter) entitled:

"A Garden of American Motion Pictures"
covering pictures seen by the Board, April 1, 1919-December 31, 1919.

Price 25 Cents

Previous issues of this catalog listing older pictures are also available; and monthly lists which serve to keep the "Garden" up to date may be had for an annual subscription of one dollar.

Both catalogs and monthly lists give release date (in many cases this year's), title, distributor, number of reels, "star," a brief characterization, and the source when drawn from standard or current literature. Special suitability for young people, aged 12-16, or of any age, is also indicated.

WHY NOT USE THE "GARDEN" AND BUILD UP AND HOLD A NEW AND DISCRIMINATING CLIENTELE?

When William Fox presented Tom Mix in "THE DAREDEVIL" there were enthusiasts who insisted that it would never be equalled as a production of action and thrill.

It is with pardonable pride, therefore, that Mr. Fox directs the attention of exhibitors everywhere to the newest and indeed the finest drama in all of Tom Mix's history.

This play, "DESERT LOVE," carries you with it, first inviting your interest, then seizing you and holding you by its extraordinary charm and power.
There have been several exceptional examples of the so-called "thrill pictures" which are worthy of long life but in "DESERT LOVE" the play, although abounding in the most amazing dare-deviltry, goes beyond mere stunts and crowns all the previous successes of Tom Mix with genuine drama.

This tale of the west was directed by Jacques Jaccard and it has been wonderfully contrived.

We commend this picture to you and ask only that you see it and form your own judgment of it.
In presenting Gladys Brockwell in a new play, "THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN," Mr. Fox has given this really great actress a vehicle which gives full opportunity for her genius to display itself. And, what is quite as important, Miss Brockwell has made the most of the chance afforded.

This story by Barbara LeMarr Deely is in all respects unusual and Edward LeSaint has superbly directed the production.
Mr. Fox takes this occasion to call attention to the richness and beauty of the background of this exciting and absorbing drama of Parisian high life.

In "THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN," it can safely be said, Gladys Brockwell is at her very best and the play itself has high quality and supreme power which makes it one of the greatest productions of the year in point of drama and box office values.
There is one publication in the motion picture trade which knows how to judge correctly the relative importance to exhibitors of trade news.

—which knows how to write news stories that exhibitors may read easily and quickly, because they are stripped of all puffery and go directly to the point.

—which has a policy which insures the printing every week of the whole truth and nothing but the truth on every important trade development.

Your Call To Battle

As an Independent Exhibitor you have got to add your voice to the demand we will make from the floor of our national mass meeting of Independent Theatre Owners to learn the truth about the practices, intentions and tactics behind the competition we are getting from the producers who are buying, building or leasing theatres next door or across the street from our houses.

My desk is covered with telegrams from Independent Exhibitors who will be in Chicago on Monday, April 26, to mix in this straight-hitting, all-cards-on-the-table show-down with the Producer-Exhibitors. We're going there for action, and we're going to get it.

Producers are stampeding their way into the theatre field by organized activity. Their agents stick together and work together. And you're the victim.

Now—we'll fight fire with fire. We're going to take organized Independent Exhibitor action and find out just how hard they are going to bite the hands that are feeding them with advance deposits and rental money.

An organization of fifty or one hundred Independent Exhibitors doesn't mean anything to them. We've got to be there by the thousands.

Don't depend on us to do your fighting for you. Be there yourself, bare-knuckled and ready to do your part. Come to Chicago! You're an almighty important part in this show-down.

You've got to be there—Hotel Congress, Chicago, early Monday morning, April 26

Wire me "I'll Be There".

"No small share of honor for the constant development of the motion picture is due Watterson R. Rothacker. No picture can be great unless it is consummated with the highest standard of printing artistry.

"Mr. Rothacker has taken film printing out of the common-place and made it an art: an art as necessary to great pictures as writing, acting, or directing. Without this art the greatest efforts of the others are colorless, lifeless, and drab."

"Famous" Stage Plays

The condition of auto-intoxication among producers on the subject of alleged Broadway stage successes for pictures continues to exist. The lament is now heard that the prices asked for this sort of material have advanced from the exorbitant and are now in the hold-up class.

The owners of much of this material doubtless feel that they are selling—to a large extent—merely "blue sky" and see no good reason why, if they find a susceptible buyer, they should even consider being sane about the price.

Even if a certain play is never given outside of a Broadway theatre, the mere fact that it has had a New York run doubtless makes it a piece of property of some value for picture purposes, providing it is a story that will pictureize. But the mere fact of a New York engagement certainly does not make a play tremendously valuable for the motion picture market.

During recent months the exhibitors of the country have had inflicted upon them a great number of pictures that came to them billed as being based upon Broadway successes and "from the famous stage play." etc.

As a matter of fact about one out of every hundred of these so-called famous stage plays was ever heard of by the motion picture patrons of America. The greater number opened and closed on Broadway and, except for the theatrically initiated about Times Square, they never existed.

In the majority of cases it is, of course, the supposed "advertising value" and not the worth of the play intrinsically that is commanding the hold-up prices. And—also in the majority of cases—the producer is simply buying something that isn't there.

As the producer should know this the seller of the fake success with phantom advertising value probably feels that he had better get all the traffic will bear before the producer wakes up. Hence the hold-up prices.

Price of Freedom

The projected meeting of exhibitors in Chicago to consider the circumstances surrounding the independent exhibitor opens an opportunity for a great deal of constructive work.

Events of the past few months have decided with considerable certainty the issue of any group "monopolizing" the film industry. It has become very evident that an independent exhibitor may remain just that: there are good grounds for a feeling of perfect security, he need not dash into any unwelcomed alliance; in his present situation he will be able to get all the good pictures he may require and he may continue to operate his theatre without molestation.

But it does not follow that the independent exhibitor should merely sit back and revel in this feeling of security, meanwhile allowing the agencies that are working against his independence to fortify themselves against the day when they may launch a new attack on his independence.

The price of freedom for the exhibitor involves his knowing what is going on in the industry—not superficially but fundamentally—in order that he may be able to face intelligently the constantly changing conditions of the industry.

The forthcoming meeting is scheduled for an opportune moment and it is to be hoped that a large number of exhibitors will be sufficiently impressed with its importance to be present.

A Fair Minimum

A minimum film rental, gauged with just as careful regard to the cost and earning power of a picture as the maximum rental, is a coming necessity of the business. A great step toward equalizing rentals for the satisfaction of the greatest number will be taken when a just minimum rental is arrived at. Under the present plan of operation producers add to the total of early rentals a sum which should be evenly distributed over a large number of later rentals, equalizing the burden of increased production costs.
HERMAN ROBBINS, assistant general manager of the Fox Film Corporation, spent several days in Chicago during the past week. He has returned to New York.

SIR. SCHLAGER, personal representative of J. Parker Read, Jr., is on his way to the West Coast, stopping at Kansas City and Denver, on route. He will return East to open offices in New York City.

H. H. Vox Loan, well-known scenario writer, who now makes Los Angeles his headquarters, is in New York to prepare a story for Norma Talmadge.

J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit, Inc., is expected in New York the latter part of the week after an extended visit to the West Coast.

Jesse L. Lasky, first vice president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, passed through Chicago April 10 on his way to New York.

Malcolm S. Boyle, director of publicity for the G. B. Samuelson Productions, severed his connection with the English producer when the latter left for London. He has associated himself with a Los Angeles press bureau.

J. H. Mayer, director of publicity for Universal, returned to New York April 9 after spending several days in Chicago.

Jake Wilk of New York, independent distributor, was among the film notables who visited Chicago during the past week.

W. E. Atkinson, general manager of Metro Pictures Corporation, is on his way to New York after a visit to the coast, and now Teddy Taylor, the busy publicity man, can stop work long enough to oil his newstyle.

Thomas A. Barret, whose pen name is Tom Bret, is now producing and editing a film of humorous sayings and clever bits from newspapers under the name of Topical Jazz. He formerly edited Topical Tips.

C. de Viral Hurd, well-known newspaper man, has been placed in charge of the foreign manuscript department at Universal City. Hurd is versed in many languages and will scour the untranslated European classics for possible screen vehicles for “Big U” stars.

William G. McCrea, former general counsel for the United Artists, is receiving the congratulations of his many friends in the industry on the arrival of a daughter April 7. Mrs. McCrea was Edna R. Wilson, the youngest daughter of President Wilson.

Charles Hutchison, who recently signed a contract with Pathé to star in serials, has arrived in Los Angeles. He will start work at the Robert Brunton studio April 15.

Major A. Hamilton Chase has been signed by William Fox to write special screen stories for the men stars of the Fox aggregation.

Lawrence Wehmeyer, former publicity director for Tally’s Broadway theatre, Los Angeles, has been appointed publicity director for J. Parker Read, Jr., succeeding Sig. Schlagner, who has been made sales representative of the organization.

A. W. Sampson has resigned as assistant treasurer of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation to re-enter the advertising field in which he was engaged prior to the war.

William P. McLauchlin, well-known newspaper writer and sport critic, has joined the exploitation department of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation. Under the pen name of “Warra Warra,” he conducted columns in several newspapers.

Frank Condon has signed with Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to write scenarios, his first task being the adapting of “The Translation of a Savage,” the Gilbert Parker story.

Thomas Meighan and Robert Harvon left for California together recently, the former to resume work in photoplays and the latter to visit his family.

W. G. McCoy, manager of the Arthur S. Haman Attractions, has closed his Chicago office and will make his headquarters in the Film building, Detroit, Mich.

William L. Sheely of the Sherry Service is spending several weeks in California. On his return to New York he will stop at several of the exchange centers.

THE RITCHIE LITHO. CORP. includes in its organization the greatest motion picture poster experts in the world. The entire efforts of the organization are focussed and directed toward one end—the production of perfect posters! It may fall short of that ideal, but it never falls short of producing the best poster that is humanly possible to execute!
Calls Exhibitors to Unite in Fight Against Producer-Owned Theatres

William C. Patterson Urges Independent Showmen to Meet in Chicago On April 26 to Organize League for Protection of Interests

Officials announce that present indications are that a score of representative theatre owners from practically every territory in the country will attend the annual convention of members of First National Exhibitors' Circuit at the Congress hotel in Chicago, beginning on April 26. Meetings, programmes and letters are received daily at headquarters in New York, it is said, seeking details of the sub-franchising plan coincident with the work of Associated First National Pictures.

Committee Perfects Details
It is toward the perfection of all conditions that doubles would locate that exhibitor sentiment throughout the country will manifest itself. It is announced that the relative territorial situations in so far as motion picture concerns are concerned, will be given the fullest discussion and it is more certain, it is said, that an index as to public attitude toward admission prices and the various types of productions will be gained.

Largest Gathering Predicted
Prospects are, it is said, that the convention will be the largest and one of the major events in the history of the organization. Every section of the United States will be represented by the motion picture interests and it is thought by officials that exhibitor sentiment throughout the country will manifest itself.

Make Important Announcement
Question as to whether the convention will be confined to franchise holders has been ended with the announcement that the gathering will be conducted after the same fashion that characterized the 1919 meeting in New York. Executives from every First National exchange will assemble to meet with a liberal consideration of exchange problems.

Exhibitors who have inquired as to whether the convention was entirely the interests of arriving at an equitable basis of sub-franchising the various territories have been informed that while this matter doubtless would loom up as a salient feature of the meeting, various other matters of vital import would play a larger part.

What is considered as one of the most

In a statement supplementing the call for the national meeting, Mr. Patterson said:

"Theatre competition from producers appears, from recent developments within the last three weeks, that it is time for a show down between the independent exhibitors and the producer factions which are competing with them in a small way, comparatively, and which have plans made definitely for very widespread and formidable opposition in every community of consequence in the country, to be a national menace reaching to the heart of every territory.

"Where are we as independent exhibitors? How long will it be until big producing units whose pictures we are showing today as independents, step into our lodges and announce that they have leased, bought or built a house across the street and that they need their own pictures for their own screens, and that we can go to the devil or anywhere else we please for a film service that will replace their productions on our independent and independently owned screens?"

"I am president of an organization with a membership of 375 independent exhibitors, and this is the condition and menace that confronts every one of them as something serious to be considered, discussed and settled. There is no longer any use in closing our eyes and saying that this producer movement of competition never can amount to anything of consequence. It is that attitude of passive resistance which is making the successful and unchallenged consumption of producer plans to force their way into every theatre community where present independent exhibitors operate at anything like a profit commensurate with their investment and abilities as showmen.

"So that there may be concerted action by the independent owners whose houses in the very near future will be in direct competition with producer-owned theatres, I have sent out a call to every exhibitor whose name I have obtained, to meet at the Congress hotel in Chicago, Monday, April 26, to organize an Exhibitors' Defense League, its equivalent, which shall have for its purpose the formulation of a definite means of learning from the several producing concerns already owning and operating theatres exactly what they intend for their future house acquisition plans, and to arrive at a specific understanding of what we, as independent exhibitors, can do to protect our personal and individual interests against their invasion.

"Producer units that are gaining ground in theatre representation, the ownership or purchase of controlling interests with every day that passes, in the aggregate have hundreds of thousands of dollars of independent exhibitors' money in their banks as advance deposits on rental contracts. Every week there is collected hundreds of thousands of dollars more for played and paid business. Our advance deposit money is our pledge of our true faith in our union and a certificate of our honesty of intent with the producers and distributors who depend upon us for their existence."

"We have a right to know the facts if this money or any part of the

it is being used by these producers and distributors to purchase theatre leases or the bricks and mortar with which to build theatres and to operate in competition with us as independent exhibitors who have no financial recourse but our own personal bank accounts, which, in strength, are as nothing compared to the funds available to this producer-distributor competition from its big deposits of advance money and rental payments from ourselves.

"We have a right to know whether the money with which we rent their films is being used for the same purpose. There is neither right nor justice to the independent exhibitor if this is the case. Nor is there any written or unwritten code of business conduct that compels an independent theatre owner to support his competition with rental money, especially when that competition is the man or concern from whom he buys his film service."

"If the producers are seriously intent upon becoming exhibitors and directing, controlling and operating theatres in which to show their own productions, then the independent exhibitor must realize immediately that he has to look to other sources for his pictures if his screen is not to be dark for all time."

"If the situation has come to this point, let us find it out at once, so that we can make our plans to continue our motion picture existence. We cannot go out and develop over-night public favoritism for new stars and new production brands, or for established stars and established production brands, whom fans are accustomed to seeing in other independent theatres. It must be realized, too, that it we, as independent exhibitors, lose one film service to producer competition, seek to take established independent stars and brands away from another independent exhibitor, we are going to face a desperate predicament. If we must look to other production sources, if we must go out and create public following anew, it is almost past the time that we knew it, and we cannot speed too fast toward the day when we shall understand, definitely, that this is the situation before us."
And Thus Passes the Star System

By Martin J. Quigley

The star system has passed; that extraordinary order of affairs in which a group of leading players substantially dictated the course of the industry has gone into the discard.

The so-called star is no longer the dominating figure in motion pictures.

Surprising as it may seem, it is nevertheless a fact that with the exception of a handful of stellar names any really good picture is severely handicapped when the player is featured over the production itself.

This is the public's answer to the system which players of accidental prominence forced upon the motion picture industry.

This is the public's answer to the shallow pretentions of players who insisted that stories be twisted and distorted to accommodate as far as possible their inordinate desire for a picture composed of five reels of close-ups with the main title carrying their names in letters a foot high.

This is the public's answer to the futile efforts that have been made to create stars with but little more than hope and ambition to work with.

* * *

The passing of the star system wipes clean from the industry one of the most unfortunate conditions with which it has had to contend; a condition in which the real brains and creative energy of the art-industry were made subservient to the whims, vagaries and shallow, unreasonable ambitions of players utterly devoid of a sense of responsibility and without even a trace of the quality of talent that might in a measure justify their temperamentalisms.

It was a system that was cramping and curbing the development of the motion picture. It was a system that drove real authors almost to the brink of madness when they saw their stories mutilated, aborted and blown up to satisfy a supposed demand for stellar prominence which they, as competent and intelligent observers of public opinion, knew did not exist. Under this system the director who is the most important factor in the making of a picture was submerged; whatever ability he possessed was handicapped by the limitations of the so-called star about whom he was compelled to build his story.

And the exhibitor, who cannot be held blameless in the creation of the system, has assumed an attitude—which is the reflection of his public's attitude—which has wiped it off the slate. The exhibitor had a hand in fostering and building up the system in many ways: In one conspicuous particular he practically compelled the producer to "star" someone because he pounded down the rental price to the last notch on any picture "without a star." In another—and a less culpable way—the exhibitor contributed by featuring in his advertising with compliment that he knew was not deserved and overlooking the really big points of a picture because they were a little more difficult to single out than the leading player's name.

The exhibitor fortunately has found himself in this matter and today willingly pays a bigger price for an "all star" or special production than for an alleged star whose mediocrity is known to himself and to his patrons.

* * *

The final test of the actual passing of the star system is to be found in the fact that the really successful pictures of the day for the producer and for the exhibitor are the "specials," the non-star productions that depend for their popularity upon some valid appeal of theme, treatment, characterization, atmosphere or some other essential of a good picture.

The pseudo star production, on the other hand, is damned from the start to a luke-warm reception by the public and consequently little or no profit to exhibitor or producer and nothing less than an extraordinarily good picture, aside from the presence of the star, will save it from this fate.

The handful of really legitimate stars are apart from this discussion, but even in their cases the condition is approaching, if not already here, where the glamor of their names on the boards and their figures on the screens does not suffice. Ample proof of the realization of this by at least one of the acknowledged stars may be had in the fact that for her latest production she paid $80,000 for a story which in all probability would have made a very successful picture even without her presence in it.

The exhibitor sealed the fate of the star system and marked a new advance for the industry when, prompted by his public, he fixed the highest value upon the non-star or special production.
4,000 Persons Dedicate New House
Built by Barbee in Chicago's Loop

Theatre Is One of the Most Picturesque in the City—Italian Style of Architecture and Decorations Is Carried Out

Barbee's Loop Theatre, Chicago's largest and most beautiful downtown playhouse, dedicated Saturday evening by pictures, opened on Saturday night, April 10. Over 4,000 persons attended the evening's performances, and several hundred were turned away from the box office.

William S. Barbee, Chicago businessman and a new entrant into the exhibitorial field, was the recipient during the day of hundreds of messages of felicitation. Associated with Mr. Barbee is Judge R. F. Robinson, Joseph Koppel, who has directed successfully the operations of several Chicago theatres and who recently was manager of Balaban & Katz's Riviera, has been chosen to conduct the affairs of the new house.

Seats 1,000 Persons

This new and attractive acquisition to Chicago's amusement life is located on the site of the old Columbia theatre, which had the distinction of being dedicated by Ellen Terry. A seating capacity of 1,000 is provided in an auditorium that is likened in architecture and decoration to a building in Milan, Italy.

The theatre, which is a remodelled structure, cost approximately $300,000. In style of architecture and in artistic embellishments, no motion picture house in Chicago is more picturesque. The auditorium decorations are of the Italian renaissance style, with futurist art and color presented in the designs. The allegorical style of painting keeps the lobby of the theatre in harmony with the interior. Three panel paintings represent art, drama and music.

Bennett Organ Installed

A $30,000 pipe organ of the Bennett type has been installed. This is the first of its kind in Chicago. Two simplex machines project the pictures, and a spacious room has been constructed for the operators. A Minusa screen is used. Modern methods of ventilation are used and the theatre is supplied with washed air, which will keep the interior at a 60-degree temperature during the summer months.

Elaborate lighting effects add to the splendid achievement of Mr. Barbee. Twenty-one different shades can be obtained. Special scenery for atmospheric presentation will be provided.

A twenty-piece orchestra is directed by George E. F. Koober, formerly conductor for D. W. Griffith. Special attention is given by the management to its musical program, which is arranged in advance for every scene and situation in a picture.

First Week's Program

Selznick News, Prizma Scenic, Literary Digest and the Gumps will be on the weekly programs. The feature for the opening performance was Norma Talmadge in "She Loves and Lies." Premier showings in Chicago of "Down on the Farm," "The River's End," "Romance," "Mollycoddle" and "The Duchess of Duds" will be given at the theatre. It is planned to give two-week showings to every picture after one week of the Norma Talmadge production.

Art work in the theatre was done by Gustave Brand & Co. The architects were Postle & Fisher.

Mr. Barbee was host to newspaper and trade press representatives at a luncheon in the Hamilton club on Friday.

Warren Leaves

W. W. Hodkinson

FREDERICK B. WARREN, vice-president in charge of sales and exploitation of the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation, resigned, effective Saturday, April 10.

While it is known that Mr. Warren has in contemplation certain enterprises of far-reaching scope, he has declined to give any intimation of his plans at this time.

Mr. Warren is acknowledged throughout the trade as one of the foremost experts in sales and exploitation. As one of the organizers of the Goldwyn Pictures Corporation he quickly established the product of that company in a manner that received wide commendation.

Since joining the Hodkinson organization several months ago, Mr. Warren has played a big part in the rapid advance of that company, which has made a sales record that has attracted widespread attention.

Mr. Warren was formerly publisher of the St. Louis Star.
Cooperation Is Keynote of Meeting
Selznick Managers in New York
Branch Officials Depart From Metropolis With Determination to Make 1920 Record
Year in the Industry

Co-operation marked the sessions of the second annual convention of Lewis J. Selznick Enterprises, including Select Pictures Corporation and Republic Distributing Corporation, which ended on April 9. The meetings, which were held at the Astor hotel in New York, were attended by more than seventy-five branch managers, exploitation men, representatives and executives of the home office.

For the first time following the close of the recent eight weeks' drive by the branches throughout the country in which 1,700 new accounts were added to the Selznick list, the men who accomplished this booking feat were afforded a chance to give each other pointers at first hand on how it was done.

Quality of Pictures Responsible

The consensus was that the general quality of the pictures offered was responsible for the big increase in bookings, which, it is said, never has been equaled by any other motion picture company in the space of six months, let alone the eight weeks in which the Selznick organization accomplished it.

Other high lights of the convention which indicate further, it is believed, that the burst of speed shown by Selznick at the beginning of the year will not lessen in degree during the coming months of 1920, included the showing on Wednesday, April 7, of "The New Butler," starring William Collier, long one of the most noted comedians of the American stage.

Following this screening, it was announced by Mr. Selznick that this production is to be distributed by Select, marking the entry of William Collier into the motion picture field. This followed closely the announcement a few days ago that William Faversham had joined the Selznick forces as a star. Mr. Faversham's first production for Selznick, "The Man Who Lost Himself," was shown to the convention on Thursday, April 8. Managers voiced the opinion that this picture would rate as one of the best dramatic subjects of 1920.

The convention also offered the opportunity for the Selznick branch men and representatives to welcome into the organization Hobart Henley, who is to direct big subjects for Lewis J. Selznick. Mr. Selznick asserted that the near future would bring even more proof of the strengthening of his organization as one of the leading producing and distributing units of the industry.

The members of the sales force agreed that they were returning to their individual sections imbued with the Selznick spirit of making 1920, the most significant year in motion picture history. An exhibitor can now book from the Selznick or Republic organization a show complete from overture to exit march and have it as evenly balanced, it is said, as if he had searched the entire output of all the producers in order to secure his program.

During the five days of the convention there were five business sessions, at which all matters pertaining to the plans for the future were thrashed out in full. Details of these meetings were not made public, with the exception of the opening day, when Lewis J. Selznick welcomed the members of the organization.

Upon Mr. Selznick's appearance at 11 o'clock on Monday morning, April 5, the assemblage greeted him with cheers and applause, after which he was introduced by Sam Morris, who presided. Mr. Selznick, in a brief talk, thanked the men of the organization for their loyalty and endeavor, saying: "I believe there is no body of men to be found in the entire industry so completely loyal and harmonious as those in the various branches of the Selznick Enterprises."

Herbert Kaufman Talks

Herbert Kaufman, widely known editorial writer whose editorials are being produced for the screen by Mr. Selznick, was next introduced. On the following days of the convention several of the Herbert Kaufman subjects were screened. They made a deep impression upon all, it is said. Upon roll call at the Tuesday afternoon session every branch manager said that these editorial features in pictures were the greatest short stuff he ever had seen.

Other addresses at the Monday business session were made by Briton N. Busch, president of Republic; Charles Rogers, director of sales for Select and Republic; Charles Pettjohn, assistant to Lewis J. Selznick; David Selznick, the youthful secretary of Selznick Pictures, and Assistant Treasurer of Select Warren W. Lewis, editor of "The Brain Exchange"; Lee Kugel, director of advertising and publicity; Randolph Bartlett of the editing department; Charles McClinton, exploitation director; V. L. Whitaker, recently appointed district manager for the Pacific Coast, and Phil Kauffman, general manager of the Canadian branches.

No Speeches Delivered

A luncheon followed the Monday morning session, at which representatives of the trade press were guests of honor. Precedents at this luncheon were

The social side of the day was not neglected, and was entered into with much spirit as were the business sessions. On the opening night of the meeting, the convention witnessed the performance of "My Lady Friends" at the Colony theatre. Tuesday night a double social program was scheduled, including "The Hottentot," starring William Collier at the George M. Cohan theatre, and the Ziegfeld Follies stop the New Amsterdam at midnight. "As You Were," a musical comedy, was witnessed on Wednesday night, bringing the theatre parties of the week to a fitting close.

Besides the Faversham, William Collier and Herbert Kautman productions, members of the convention were also shown "A Fool and His Money," starring Eugene O'Brien, and the first two issues of the Selznick News Reel.

Testimonial Signed by Employes to Be Presented to Lewis J. Selznick

An appreciation of loyalty and friendship in the form of an address on parchment and signed by every employe will be presented to Lewis J. Selznick in the near future. The parchment is a testimonial made by Sam E. Morris, vice president and general manager of Selznick Enterprises, at the Good Cheer dinner of the organization's co-workers at the Hotel Astor in New York on April 8.

The parchment will be sent to every Selznick office in the country to permit every individual connected with the organization to sign it. The address on the parchment will read:

"To Mr. Lewis Selznick: We who have served you, and in whom you have trusted, have come to you with a single voice to renew our pledge of loyalty."

"As we have found our service pleasant, we hope we have also justified your trust. For upon no other foundation can a successful and great enterprise be built than mutual confidence between the leader and his forces."

"The world has never needed anything but leaders. Tomorrow's truth is always waiting for the man who can see one day ahead. This vision alone makes leaders. You have proved that this vision is yours."

"Yet if the vision makes leaders, only justice can make that leadership just. You have been just to all, and so the passing years add strength to your arm."

"But if this were all, this pledge would have remained unvoiced. There have been other leaders of tomorrow's truth, who were just to all who served under them, but have not found you in another and a rarer trait."

"That trait is sympathy. We have learned that you know men and are as quick to forgive the occasional error as you are to appreciate the consistent success.

"And so as we renew our pledge of loyalty, we renew another title which we alone can confer, the title of friend."

It was suggested first at the convention that a silver tablet inscribed with the names of all branch managers be presented to Mr. Selznick. This was reconsidered, and the parchment plan was decided upon.

Kohn Negotiates to Buy News Weekly Enterprise

Marion H. Kohn Productions, which now controls several features, including the Grace Cumard westerns, the Polly Moran comedies, Will Rogers' "Illiberate Digest," and the "Smiling Bill" Jones comedies, is now planning to add another link to its production chain in the annexation of a news weekly.

Marion H. Kohn, president, announced that negotiations are under way to purchase the equipment, contracts, exchanges and current publications of one of the large producing and distributing news weekly organizations.

Los Angeles to Have New First-Run House

LOS ANGELES, April 13.—Sol Lester and Gore brothers are planning to build a new theatre here for the pre-release showing of First National pictures.

Novelty Screening of Musical Strains While Showing Comedyaart Production

The publication of the first Comedyaart creation, "Uneasy Feet," produced by Special Pictures Corporation of Los Angeles, has inspired a novel innovation in screen presentation.

In its showing at Goldwyn's California theatre in Los Angeles Robert Poole, managing director, took advantage of the fact that the upper half of the screen necessarily must be dark and that the film was devoid of subtitles. This inspired the idea of flashing on the screen in conjunction with the picture and the orchestra a series of titles of songs, marches and strains.

The song slide is flashed by means of triple exposure. The film is first exposed for the actual music notes, then for the words and then it is flashed upon the screen where the picture is being projected. The dissolving titles are controlled from the orchestra leader's seat so that the music on the screen and that furnished by the orchestra are synchronized perfectly.

The novelty met with such applause, it is said, that Mr. Poole re-run the picture to satisfy his audiences. The officials of Special Pictures Corporation have won the method of achieving the novelty to first-run picture palaces throughout the country, including the New York Radio, which has second week showing with option for a third, and the Rivoli, which also is giving it a holdover showing.

The Los Angeles headquarters of Special Pictures Corporation report heavy bookings from all of their twenty-two exchanges on the first Comedyaart. Their second Comedyaart production, "I'm a Vamp," was published on April 4.

Geraldine Farrar Signed by Quimby

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, April 13.—Geraldine Farrar, internationally famed opera and screen star, has signed a contract with the Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Production of the first picture will begin in New York as soon as important arrangements connected with the making of a truly big attraction have been completed.

The signing of Miss Farrar is the opening gun in the Associated Exhibitors' announced campaign of endeavor to furnish exhibitors, who are affiliates in the organization, motion pictures of such caliber as to assure the greater possible patronage.

Issue Regulations To Govern Rental Tax

Order Concerning Collection Of 5 Per Cent Fee Is Published by Myers

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

WASHINGTON, D. C., April 13.—Acting Commissioner of Internal Revenue, Myers, has issued regulations concerning the collection of the 5 per cent rental tax from exhibitors showing films owned by them, as follows:

The fair rental or license value of a film exhibited by an owner for profit shall be held to be represented by the gross profits he derives therefrom, which shall be determined by deducting from his gross receipts, his reasonable expense or allowances for service (but no deduction will be permitted for such items as expense of production, upkeep or replacement of films).

But should his return show that such receipts do not amount to 3½ per cent of his gross receipts, he shall accompany his return with a statement in detail showing the items entering into the expense and allowances charged against such receipts. This rule applied to cases where the owner exhibits or intends to exhibit the film over an extended period, as distinguished from a limited period in advertising and other purposes.

The fair rental of license value of a film exhibited by an owner for a limited period as a part of an advertising or other program intended to enhance the future rental or license value of the film shall be based on the actual rental period for the film at the expiration of that period by the owner or by the person purchasing the film or other territorial right therein. An owner-exhibitor under such circumstances shall accompany his return with a statement showing the actual amount paid for which the film was leased and in what city and community and at what theatre or theatres it is to be shown.

Corbett and Callaway Purchase Interest in Chicago Film Company

Well Known Exhibitor and World War Veteran Associated With Brockell and Elliott in Greater Stars Productions Exchange

W. E. Callaway and H. J. Corbett, well known among film men, have purchased a substantial interest in the Greater Stars Productions exchange, Chicago, and will take an active part in the operation of the company in association with Clyde Elliott and Floyd Brockell, managers.

The announcement of their entering the company follows closely the news that Lubliner & Trinz have retired from ownership.

Popular With Exhibitors

The two young men, who have become part owners of the exchange, are well known and popular throughout the trade, especially so with exhibitors.

Mr. Corbett was an exhibitor up to a few months ago and has had fifteen years' experience in the amusement field. He was treasurer of the Auditorium, Majestic and Garrick theatres for several years, prior to opening a theatre of his own in South Chicago.

Three years ago, he took over the management of the Harper theatre, 5236 Harper avenue, making it one of the best known of the outlying houses. He retired as an exhibitor last December and served as a salesman for Pathé while seeking an interest in an exchange for himself.

Callaway Is War Veteran

W. E. Callaway is one of the many film men who responded to the call for soldiers at the outbreak of the World War and returned to the trade after the close of hostilities. Prior to entering the service, he was a salesman in the Chicago office of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Last June, he doffed his uniform and became a salesman for the Greater Stars exchange. He resigned this position to become sales manager of the Chicago office of Robertson-Cole Company, returning to Greater Stars as part owner.

With four well known young men financially interested and devoting their entire time to the business, the Greater Stars Productions exchange expects to take its place among the largest independent exchanges of the United States during the next twelve months.

Vice-Presidency of Kane Corporation Is Held by J. C. Ragland

Directors of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation on April 8 elected John C. Ragland vice president. Mr. Ragland resigned as general sales manager of Realart Pictures Corporation several weeks ago to become general manager and director of the Kane corporation.

The meeting of the directors, which was held in the new offices of the concern at 25 West 43rd street, was called especially to inaugurate Mr. Ragland into his new post in conjunction with the formal opening of the permanent home of Arthur S. Kane Pictures Corporation.

Mr. Ragland, prior to his connection with Realart as general sales manager, was manager of the St. Louis office of that concern. He has had a long career in the theatrical and motion picture businesses and possesses a wide background of experience gained during a service which began in theatre management and progressed through sales activity to executive positions with Select and Realart Pictures.

Universal Shows Heavy Booking Schedule On “Virgin of Stamboul”

Exploitation Stunts Are Being Arranged in the Larger Cities—Berman Says Picture Has Proved to Be a Money Maker

First-run theatres in almost all of the principal cities already have booked “The Virgin of Stamboul,” featuring Priscilla Dean, according to Universal. In almost every city elaborate exploitation stunts are being arranged, it is said.

Harry M. Berman, general manager of exchanges, says the sales campaign is the biggest and fastest thing ever handled by that company.

“We did not get the prints into the hands of our branch exchanges until March 20,” he said. “In three weeks, leading theatres in 90 per cent of the big cities had contracted to run the picture, with play dates early in May.

Successful on Broadway

“The seventy-seven day booking over the Loew circuit in and around New York has been followed by a forty-seven day booking over the Fox circuit in the same territory. These two contracts alone, with the four weeks run at B. S. Moss’ Broadway theatre, will make one of the most complete New York City showings a Universal picture ever had.

“The showing at the Broadway theatre has been a great surprise. Instead of dropping off during the third and fourth weeks, the attendance actually increased. The picture is a money maker, even on Broadway.

“It has been shown already in several other theatres. In the Rialto theatre, Washington, it crowded the house for the week of April 5. Tom Moore, of the Rialto, gave it the most expensive staging and the biggest exploitation ever undertaken by him for any picture.

Record Maker at Butte

“Another early showing of the picture, in the Amorsa theatre, Butte, Mont. It broke all house records despite adverse conditions in that city.

“After several days of clever exploitation along the lines utilized in New York, William Cutts of the Kinema the-atre, Salt Lake City, packed his door during the week of April 5.

“Among the other houses in which

The Virgin of Stamboul” is booked for a six or seven-day run at early dates, are the Lubliner & Trinz and the Ascher Brothers circuits in Chicago; the Playhouse, Chicago; the Columbia, Pittsburgh; the Washington, Detroit; the Liberty, Denver; Sheia’s Hippodrome, Linfield; the Stillman, Cleveland; the Park, Boston; the Alhambra, Milwaukee, the Southern, Columbus; the Columbus, Dayton; the Walnut, Louisville; the Rivoli, Portland; Orpheum, Los Angeles; the Fox Terminal, Newark, the Clenmier, Spokane; the Pickwick, San Diego, Cal.; the Victor, McKees port, Pa.; the Lamb, Ranger, Texas, and also in Fort Worth.

“It looks as if Miss Dean’s big picture is going to set all time records by a wide margin. A lot of other records, too, I believe.”

Universal’s sales department is collecting records of attendance at each theatre showing “The Virgin of Stamboul.”

Washington Orders More Care for Film
Post Office Department to Give Special Attention to Pictures

WASHINGTON, D. C.—More care is to be exercised in the handling of motion picture films by postal employees, under orders which have just been personally issued by the Post Office Departments. Complaints that shows were missed, so that they do not arrive on time, have been frequent during the past few months, and the new orders are designed to secure better service for exhibitors.

The order issued by J. C. Koons, first assistant postmaster general, applies to all employees of the department, as follows:

Information has reached the department that a considerable number of shipments of moving-picture films in individual packages are missing, causing delay and serious inconvenience to both shippers and addressees. It will be understood that as a general rule these films are moving on a schedule from place to place for exhibition and display on previously arranged dates and it will be impossible for us to exercise greater care in distinguishing the address of the shipper or the address of the film.

“Postmasters and all other employees are requested to give special attention to this condition and to exercise greater care in distinguishing the address of the shipper with a view of reducing to a minimum the mis-sending and delay of these shipments.”

Beautiful Sets Built for Lifeograph-Keefe Picture

The second Lifeograph-Keefe comedy series being made at the Portland, Ore., studio of American Lifeograph Company is said to display some lavish and extravagant sets. An innovation is a woman’s den with striking bizarre and unusual features marks one of these sets, it is said.

W. H. McMonies, president of the company, announces that he is heartily pleased with the first subject produced under the direction of Bob Gray and supervised by W. E. Keefe, Walter McMonies, Jr., son of the president, has been appointed purchasing agent and superintendent of construction.
Harry M. Crandall Succeeds Kendall
As Associated Exhibitors' President
Well Known Washington Theatre Owner Is Honored
With Executive Position.—Change Will Not Affect Activity of Organization

Harry M. Crandall, of Washington, D. C., was elected president of Associated Exhibitors, Inc., during the course of a meeting of the Board of Directors held recently at the offices of the organization. Mr. Crandall succeeds Messmore Kendall, whose resignation as president was accepted by the Board in view of the fact that extreme pressure of other business made it impossible for him to continue in an executive capacity.

Mr. Crandall's office as treasurer is to be filled by H. H. Wellenbrink, who now is secretary and treasurer, as well as a member of the Board of Directors.

Important Negotiations Being Closed

The number of important negotiations virtually closed and the volume of business transacted during the two-day meeting are indications that the Associated Exhibitors, Inc., soon will become one of the most important units in the industry. After the meeting announcement was made by General Manager F. C. Quimby that, while arrangements for at least one major producer practically was completed, and while assurances of several other channels of ingress of big special productions were forthcoming, there still remain formal details to be gone through which make it inadvisable to make the arrangements public at the present moment.

Mr. Quimby stated that the changes in executive personnel would in no wise affect the workings of the organization. He is known to have been negotiating with many important individuals and firms in the industry during the past few weeks, and it is said that the Associated Exhibitors are holding off from making definite announcements until they have lined up propositions formidable enough to make the organization a leader among the "big fellows" from the moment the first gun is fired.

Kendall Explains Decision

According to members of the Board of Directors Mr. Kendall's resignation was accepted with regret. It is understood that Mr. Kendall stated that no matter what his personal wishes in the case might be, he felt that the affairs of the Capitol Theatre and affiliated business interests required so much of his time that he could not possibly do justice to the Capital and to the Associated Exhibitors at the same time.

Mr. Kendall explained also, that, inasmuch as the Capitol Theatre Enterprise is already engaged in the production of pictures to a small extent, and, undoubtedly, will go into production on a much larger scale soon, he felt that such activities would not be consistent with a continuation of his holding office in the Associated Exhibitors.

Hall Adapts Novel for American Cinema Corp.

Walter Richard Hall, according to announcement from the company's headquarters, has completed the adaptation of "A Woman Strays," E. Thompson Rich's novel, for the American Cinema Corp.

The play, a story of a woman's struggle to ward off the blow of destiny, is said to possess one of the most powerful and original themes ever presented on the screen.

James Vincent, who produced "The Spirit of Lafayette" and Fox productions featuring Theda Bara, Virginia Pearson and Bertha Kalich, is directing the stage version of the play at the company's studio.

Foremost Screen and Stage Stars
Act for American Legion Benefit

New York Post, Comprised of Representatives of Amusement World, Raise Large Fund for Use in Building Modern Gymnasium

Distinguished representatives of the screen, stage, opera and circus world took part in the benefit program which was given at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York on April 19, according to the S. Rankin Drew Post No. 340, American Legion. The benefit netted the post $11,000.

A greater aggregation of stars from the amusement world ever was gathered together on one program, it is said. Heading the star bill were the three Barrowmores, Ethel, John and Lionel.

Will Build Gymnasium

Drew Post is composed of ex-service men who are concerned either directly or indirectly with the theatre and the screen. The proceeds of the benefit will be used in building a modern gymnasium.

The arrangements for the benefit were in the hands of men experienced in the world of the stage and the screen. The post membership includes some of the most experienced publicity and advertising men in the business, stage and motion picture directors, stars, cameramen, photographers, scenic and costume designers, scenario writers, property men, location directors, casting experts, music publishers, producer and executives throughout the industry.

Men Who Made It Possible

Those whose experience and time made it possible for them to give their service to the benefit were: Well-Hawks, president of the post; James Loughborough, vice president; Richard C. Travers, the star; Lawrence Schwab and Floyd Sniker both of the Keith offices. These members of the post were engaged actively in the arrangements for the benefit.

Sydney P. Gunertz, the first of the three medal of honor men to join the post was in charge of the program year book section as well as a staff of publicity members, while Lieutenant Miller of the marine recruiting corps handled the billing. The chairman of the publicity committee, William H. Cook, had the assistance of some of the best publicity experts in the game.

The stars who appeared on the program include Ed Wynne, comedian, and his beauty chorus from Ed Wynne’s Karnival now playing the New Amsterdam; Sam Bernard with Irene Bordoni, now appearing in “As You Were,” Ernest Truce, Dorothy Donnelly, Minnie Dupree, Clifton Ford, and several distinct novelty surprises.

Queen of the Wire

Bird Millman, queen of the wire, now with the middle, town, performed by courtesy of Ringling Brothers, Barnum & Bailey, Clarke Silvernail and his company offered a sketch.

George Carpenter, idol of France, delivered a message from the French to their former comrades in arms, and James J. Corbett of American heavyweight champions appeared with Billy Van.

Noble Morgan and his company of well known players were seen in a new sketch, and Demarest & Collette, the celebrated vaudeville team, did a comedy turn. Daniel Dreyfus, who has charge of the women’s auxiliary of the post, appeared, and Corporal Joseph White of Father Kelley’s choir, sang.

Views Paintings of Heroes

During the interval the audience was invited to see the exhibition of the original A. E. F. portraits of American heroes and leaders painted by Joseph Lammings, of the celebrated A. E. F. artist. These paintings were displayed in the foyer of the theatre.

A place was provided on the program for the presentation of York’s seven medal of honor men, Augustus Thomas, playwright, announced that the winners of their former rank in the service are Lieutenant Colonel Charles W. Whitely, Major George W. McMurtry, First Sergeant Sylvester F. Gunertz, First Sergeant Benjamin Kaufman, Sergeant Man Eggers, Sergeant John C. Latham, Messrs. Gunertz, Eggers and Latham are members of Drew Post.

Hack & White, a comedy act of distinct novelty, opened the bill following the presentation on the part of the United States Navy recruiting service band under direction of Charles Biddle, of New York. This unit is presented by courtesy of E. F. Alber, head of B. F. Keith Enterprises.

Ann May Plays Opposite Ray in “Peaceful Valley”

Ann May, the young Cincinnati, Ohio, society girl who recently made her film debut, has been selected by Charles Ray as his leading woman for “Peaceful Valley,” his production for First National.

J. Parker Read, Jr., Louise Glaum production, “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter,” which, since its banner week presentation at Yonkers, has proved one of the outstanding successes of the year, fairly took Philadelphia by storm last week in its initial engagement on the Madison and Niedinger chain of theatres in the Quaker City and outlying towns. Contracted originally by the Stanley Booking Company for presentation at the Victoria, the Madison management shifted “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter” to the Palace because of the larger seating capacity in the newer Stanley first-run house. And not since its opening here had the theatre crowded with more than those that flocked to see Louise Glaum in the powerful W. W. Hodkinson melodrama.

Plays to Record Attendance

The Palace, situated in the middle of the block on Market street, between Twelfth and Thirteenth, had lines of picture-goers stretching to both corners at the two evening performances during the entire run, so well did Abe L. Einsteins, the Stanley exploitation chief, and his staff bring home the merits of “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter” in the biggest promotion campaign waged on a Stanley production. A large-sized shoppers and tie-in board advertising drive, a link-up with two Market street department stores that displayed and advertised gowns fashioned after those worn by the star, the film’s big success displaying in the sporting goods store adjoining the theatre that featured the various fire-arms used in the picture. Yes, as far as the Palace has ever been seen in a Philadelphia theatre in months were the mediums used by Mr. Lourie in packing the Palace as never before.

Scores Success in Boston

Another prominent eastern exhibitor who fared well with “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter” last week was Jacob Lourie, owner of Reelcraft and Book Reelcraft pictures, Boston, Mass., the J. Parker Read, Jr., production playing a full week’s engagement. and, through the Washington street theatres are only three blocks apart, Mr. Lourie’s managers at both houses reported several nights of turn-away business, and on the whole the Hodkinson release proved the biggest attraction at the Boston twin houses in months.

Among the bookings reported on “The Lone Wolf’s Daughter” this week are: The Rex, Seattle, Wash.; the Grand, Hornell, N. Y.; the Capitol, Virginia, Vallecito, Calif.; the Capitol, Elizabeth, N. J.; the Auditorium, Newark, Ohio; the Victoria, Shady, Pa.; the Capitol, Green, the Orpheum, Yonkers, N. Y.; the Sherman, Tex.; the Little Playhouse, Mt. Vernon, N. Y.; the Rex, Oskosh, Wis.

Exchanges Seeking Reelcraft Pictures

Six Producing Companies Are at Work Making Short Films for Company

Leading independent distributors and exchanges throughout the United States are seeking an alliance with Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, according to R. C. Cropper, president. Mr. Cropper has just completed a trip covering nearly all of the important distributing cities of the Central States, with the intention of establishing means of distribution for the Reelcraft program.

Reelcraft has considered the establishment of an independent publication organization covering every principal city, but during the past three weeks numerous independent distributors have approached Reelcraft officials desiring exclusive rights to the short subjects in their respective territories.

Independent exchange owners, as well as theatre owners, have come to realize it is said, that there is no place for them in the producer-to-public market, and that their independence can be maintained only by cooperating with the independent producer. Several distributors of the brands now controlled by Reelcraft have protested against the establishment of another exchange in their territory, with the result that by cooperating with Reelcraft the Independent will continue to handle the original producers, and the whole of the Reelcraft program as well.

Six producing companies are at work, two more forming and several under consideration. The pictures will all be short subjects.

“Lone Wolf’s Daughter” Scoring Success In Eastern Playhouses
Educational Films Speed Work of Establishing Own Exchanges

Distributing Depots Will Handle Short Subjects Only.—E. W. Hammons Sees Vast Improvement in Service and Results Through Decision

Contracts involving the expenditure of more than a million dollars, signed during the past four months, represent some of the recent activities of the Educational Films Corporation, according to announcement of the company this week.

Arrangements are progressing with all the rapidity consistent with careful selection of representatives for opening of educational exchanges in principal centers. These will be controlled directly by the company and will handle nothing but short subjects.

During the week contracts were signed with some of the most important exhibitor interests in the country for establishment of exchanges. Several of the largest centers await only announcement of locations of the offices; negotiations for new territories with several others, while a few territories remain open.

Adopts Cooperative Policy

While educational will maintain the controlling interest in each exchange, it is adopting a cooperative policy whereby men of high standing are interested in their ownership. In every case these are men who have large exhibitor interests and who have been led to become associated with the company because of their knowledge of the high quality of Educational product.

E. W. Hammons, vice president and general manager of Educational, this week outlined the exchange plans for the first time:

"During the five years of Educational Films Corporation's existence it has been distributing through independent exchanges. For some time we have received the imperfections of this system. In the first instance, these arrangements have prevented the direct supervision of sales and exploitation that we have desired. While this plan has made money for us and each exchange, we have been satisfied that we were unable to afford the degree of service we desired to give.

"This is no reflection on the men who have been handling our product in the various territories. The chief fault has been the same found in every exchange that handles 'mixed' products—long and short subjects. It is natural that salesmen should devote the greater portion of their time and effort to selling and exploiting pictures that bring in greater revenue. Specialization in the handling of short subjects is absolutely essential. We have been convinced for some time that they should be handled by absolutely separate exchanges, and this will be our policy hereafter.

"Big Increase in Product

"In the past the volume of our product has been somewhat limited. As recent announcements have revealed, this product has increased fully 300 per cent, and there will be much more new material for regular release announced in a very short time. We are old enough to either distribute or purchase such short subject matter as meets our standard. We are going into the comedy field to a very considerable extent, and contracts already made assure us of one and two reel subjects that compare most favorably, both in quantity and quality, with the remainder of the field.

"Contracts with our producers make them really partners in our business, since they are financially interested in keeping up the quality. To the same end we are organizing our exchange system. We are offering to men of unquestioned standing in the field an interest in several independent exchanges, so that they may share in the profits and that we may be assured of their earnest effort. It is not a case of raising capital, for we have ample for every need, but of getting the degree of interest in exchange conduct that in many cases has been lacking. The strongest arguments in the past for distribution through independent exchanges has been that the men conducting them had a financial interest in their success, just as the weakest point in the exchanges of the established companies has been the salary system, which to a considerable extent has counteracted the beneficial effects of control from the home office.

"We believe that our new policy will bring about the three things necessary for the ideal exchange system: First, the exchange will handle nothing but short subjects, enabling a specialization in this product that is not possible with exchanges handling the features as well. Second, we will be able to exert direct control of the exchanges and provide sales arrangements and exploitation units that will be of direct aid to the exhibitor. Third, the management of the exchange will have financial interest in its earnings and in its permanency, and therefore there will be every urge for fair business dealing, the fullest cooperation with the exhibitor, and the creation of a volume of business that is bound to have its reflex in the quality of product.

Explains Financial Plan

"We are offering local interests participation in individual exchanges up to 10 per cent of their capital stock. We are making no charge for 'franchises', and will or any other jargon. The arrangement is simply that we put in 31 per cent of the capital and the local interests 49 per cent, and the profits are divided accordingly.

"Some of the leading interests of the country have signed contracts. Other important territories will be closed in a few days, and a minor number remain open until we get in touch with men whose connection we consider desirable. We will not announce names until the list is complete, but when it is made public I am confident that the film world will recognize an organization that sets a new mark in the distribution and exploitation of pictures—in this case of short subjects only."

Mary Thurman Burned by Explosion in Apartment

Mary Thurman, who is featured in Allan Dwan's "In the Heart of a Fool," and "The Scoffer," under the Mayflower banner, was painfully burned in her apartments in Los Angeles when a Chinese incense burner exploded. Physicians say, however, that she will be able to commence production on the next Allan Dwan picture May 1.

SAILING ON SOL LESSER'S POND

J. D. Williams, general manager of First National Exhibitors' Circuit (the gentleman in the raincoat), recently visited Riverside, Cal., to inspect the pool where Annette Kellerman is making scenes for her new Sol Lesser comedy-drama. The party are: Mrs. Williams, Annette Kellerman, Sol Lesser, Mrs. Lesser, H. P. Caulfield, Lesser production manager, and Mrs. Caulfield.
Arthur James Launches Enterprise After Resigning From Fox Company
Will Conduct Advertising and Publicity Business With Headquarters in New York—Will Give Attention to Campaigns on Pictures

Arthur James, who successively directed the publicity and advertising for Mutual Film Corporation in the days of its greatest prominence, for Metro Pictures Corporation for four years during its growth from a small concern to one of the big factors in the industry, and for Fox Film Corporation since last July, on April 17 will begin business for himself.

Mr. James will conduct a general advertising and publicity business, handling both personal and company accounts, giving special attention to campaigns on log pictures.

He will make his headquarters in New York and will have branch offices in Washington and Chicago. John Bowman will be in charge of the Chicago office, with headquarters in the Monadnock building, and the Washington representatives will be Theodore M. Knappen, with headquarters in the Southern building. Carolyn Lowrey, who formerly was on the staff of the Morning Telegraph, will be attached to Mr. James' organization and will leave within the next two weeks for a trip to the Pacific Coast, representing Mr. James.

Publicity Is Great Aid

The following announcement has been made by Mr. James: "It has been my belief, after an experience of more than six years in publicity and advertising activities for motion pictures, that a selling force representing each studio in business importance. I do not believe that publicity will make a poor picture a success, nor that an indifferent director or actor can be elevated to greatness solely by the same process, but I do believe that publicity will make a great picture greater and enable directors and stars to receive their true rewards both in fame and in money if they are well advised regarding their relationship to the public and to the exhibitor.

"I tendered my resignation to Fox Film Corporation with a sense of deep personal regret because of the fine spirit which pervades the organization and because of the free and open opportunities given to me to be active in its behalf, and I cannot depart without a word of the highest praise for the showingmanship and the fine personal qualities of Mr. William Fox and Mr. W. R. Sheahan, the big figures in the great organization.

 Begins With Active Accounts

"I am glad to say that I begin business for myself with the cordial good wishes of my friends and with active accounts with which the public and the trade shortly will be made, I trust, very much acquainted. The National Council of Defense and American Business Association will receive my immediate attention together with motion picture clients. In each case I shall give the campaign my personal attention."

Mr. James has been identified with the active growth of the motion picture industry, having served as vice-president with the National Association and as the first president of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers.

Throughout his connection with the industry he has been regarded generally as one of the thoroughly competent experts on motion picture exploitation, his abilities covering the entire range of advertising and publicity.

Long Newspaper Experience

In his publicity work he has been fortified with a long experience in metropolitan newspaper activity, which has enabled him to supply to the press of the country, both trade and general, the kind of matter which readily found its way into print.

Advertising matter produced under Mr. James’ direction has been characterized with an exceptionally strong, dignified and artistic tone and has constituted one of the most distinctive features of advertising in the motion picture trade.

Mr. James has played a particularly active part in the affairs of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers and is entitled to a large share of the credit for many of the important accomplishments of that association.

Rockett Film Corp.
Formed in Los Angeles

A new producing company capitalized at $100,000 was formed in Los Angeles this week and corporation papers filed in the name of the Romona Film Corporation, but to be operated later, it is understood, under the name of the Rockett Film Corporation.

Ray Rockett, formerly business manager of the Balboa company at Long Beach, and until recently head of the production department of the Universal Film Corporation, is president and general manager. His brother, Al Rockett, is secretary and assistant general manager, with E. H. Christensen, vice-president and S. G. Buchan, treasurer.

Selznick Re-Engages Elaine Hammerstein

Popular Screen Star Signs Contract Covering Period of Seven Years

Myron Selznick announces that he has re-engaged Elaine Hammerstein for a period covering seven years.

According to Mr. Selznick, Miss Hammerstein has been one of the key office attractions on the Selznick payroll. "Her most recent picture, "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," in which she has a dual role, is declared to bring out her screen personality and ability better than any of her previous pictures.

The two characters she portrays are of such contrasting types as to tax the ability of a more seasoned screen star than Miss Hammerstein. Yet, according to those who have seen the picture, she plays the two parts with the proper color, shading and feeling.

Mr. Selznick has not given any plans in regard to Hammerstein productions in the near future.

Opens Exchange to Issue Ibsen’s "Man There Was"

Radiosoul Films, Inc., has opened an exchange at 126 West 66th street, New York, for distributing Henrik Ibsen’s "A Man There Was." The organization now is working upon its second picture, "The Eternal Feminine," with Victor Senstrom again is the director and star.

A number of high school principals, it is said, desire a special projection of "A Man There Was" because of its educational value. Ibsen’s original "Teri Viken," of which "A Man There Was" is an adaptation, is taught in every school in Scandinavia, it is said.

Goldwyn Changes Title

The title of Octavey Roy Cohen’s feature story written for Goldwyn Pictures Corporation has been changed from "Tw Cents Worth of Hamness to "Of Dears and Sense." Madge Kennedy is featured and Harry Beaumont directed.
National Film Production Is First Purchased by Federated Exchanges

New Independent Organization Will Handle All of the Exploitation and Advertising on Picture Which Features Billie Rhodes

Federated Film Exchanges of America, the organization of independent distributors which was formed recently in Chicago, has purchased its first production according to its cooperative plan of operation.

"Nobody's Girl," a National Film Corporation of America production featuring Billie Rhodes has been bought outright by the federation, which will handle all exploitation, advertising and publicity in connection with the marketing of the picture.

Actual Operation Started

Actual operation of the new organization has been accomplished in less than thirty days after its formation. A special publicity and exploitation department is already at work on material for promoting "Nobody's Girl."

Announcement of the federation's first acquisition was made by Joe Brandt of National. He said:

"I am particularly gratified over this sale because I feel that the solution of the independent production and exchange problem is now in sight. The board of review of the Federated Film Exchanges of America passes on the merits of every picture before the purchase of it is considered. This means that only good pictures will be marketed through their exchanges. This also means that the independent producers will be spurred to greater efforts in making better pictures because they know there will be distribution at the end of the trail.

Proper Distribution Assured

"The clutter of good, bad and indifferent film which now is regularly being dumped into the state rights market will at last be separated as it should be. When an independent producer puts his product before the board of review of the Federated Film Exchanges of America and they pass on it as worthy of their mark he will be assured of the proper distribution in every state."

At the offices of Federated Film Exchanges no details were given out regarding the prices or arrangements made in the purchase of "Nobody's Girl."

Good Things Come in Small Packages-Kohn

Says "Illiterate Digest" Not a Filler But World's Shortest Feature

The newest of Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., publications, "The Illiterate Digest," by Will Rogers, Goldwyn star, will not be a program filler in any sense of the word, according to Mr. Kohn. On the contrary, he says, the time will come, and in the near future, when the Will Rogers epigrams will be looked upon as the "shortest feature in the world."

"Good things come done up in small packages," writes Mr. Kohn, "and I am confident that the best thing the exhibitor has ever had the good fortune to witness will be the "Illiterate Digest." The keen humor and incisive cynicism will draw the crowds, especially when Will Rogers' name is fixed to it.

According to Mr. Kohn, "The Illiterate Digest" will be a sparkling novelty, each publication to be different in setting, etc., from the one issued before. The actor-humorist will appear in each publication of the "Digest."

"The Illiterate Digest" will be marketed via the movie market. The first three positives have arrived in New York for a preview.

White and Ross Join Billy West to Make Reelcraft Comedies

Leo White and Rud Ross have entered into an agreement to support Billy West in the series of two-reel comedies he is producing for Reelcraft Pictures Corporation. White played in slapstick comedy with the original Keystone Company. Both White and Ross agree to take a great deal of punishment at the hands of Billy West. Both having met all brands of pies and vegetables in the past, are anxious to renew their acquaintances.

Mr. West considers the acquisition of these two helpful playmates as beneficial to his throwing arm and the laughter producing qualities of his comedies.

"Jenny," English Story, Chosen for Olive Thomas

Following the completion of "The Flapper," Lewis J. Selznick will present Olive Thomas in "Jenny," which is from the pen of Roy Horniman, a British writer. Upon this film has been chosen to direct. Bobby Connolly, the child actor, is in the cast.

New York Rialto to Observe Anniversary

Large House Spends Quarter Million Annually on its Music Production

Obseravce of anniversary week is scheduled for the week beginning on Sunday, April 18, at the Rialto Theatre, New York. The playhouse was opened on April 22, 1916.

The theatre was one of the first motion picture houses in the country to give musical programs on a large scale. In its development the Rialto as a motion picture-house.
Management is spending approximately $25,000 a year on music for its patrons, it is said.
This figure includes the cost of the orchestra, soloists and sheet music.

The orchestra has grown from less than thirty musicians to fifty. Hugo Riesenfeld still is the director. But the average attendance is about 2000 persons a week. The theatre spends 125 cents of each ticket for music alone, it is said.

Booth Tarkington Signs With Baker To Write Directly for the Screen

Booth Tarkington, one of the leading fiction writers of America, has signed with Tarkington Baker, who resigned recently as general manager of production for Universal to organize his own company, to write directly for the screen during the current year. Mr. Baker, who says, "I believe in the story and good material can come only from the best, most gifted, most experienced and most successful authors." He has signed contracts with three other noted authors.

Bert Williams is Signed

Supplementing this statement is the announcement that Bert Williams, famous black-face comedian, has contracted with Baker to star in a series of two-reel comedies. In signing Booth Tarkington, his cousin, Baker considers that he has overruled the author's scruples against the screen. Mr. Tarkington has been acrimonious in writing for pictures, only a few of his stories having been produced. When Baker decided to make pictures of himself he hurried out to see Tarkington. "It is related that Baker arrived in Indianapolis at 10 o'clock at night. At 10:30 he was in conference with Tarkington. The conference ended at 8 a.m., when the pair had breakfast. A sey-eyes attorney related his friends that day how he was vakened at 4 a.m. to draw up the necessary papers.

TARKINGTON BAKER
Signs Booth Tarkington to write directly for the screen this year, and acquires the services of Bert Williams to make two-reel comedies.

One of the most successful writers of the screen, Mr. Tarkington has been averse to writing for pictures, only a few of his stories having been produced. When Baker decided to make pictures of himself he hurried out to see Tarkington. It is related that Baker arrived in Indianapolis at 10 o'clock at night. At 10:30 he was in conference with Tarkington. The conference ended at 8 a.m., when the pair had breakfast. A sey-eyes attorney related his friends that day how he was vakened at 4 a.m. to draw up the necessary papers.

Given Free Hand

"No limitations have been placed on Tarkington's efforts," states Baker. "He has a free hand. As a result he plans to put into his work all the genius and enthusiasm characteristic of his plays the stage. I haven't the remotest idea what he will write about." "I believe in the story," Mr. Baker declared further. "Silk purses aren't made of' s ears; good pictures aren't made of no-good material. The time has come when the author will come into his own with discriminating audiences. Three hours has been delayed because, in my judgment, producers have been inclined to cultivate star and director. But star and director are themselves beginning to realize that they are helpless without good material. Good material can only come from the best, most gifted, most experienced and most successful authors."

Baker announces that some of Bert Williams' pictures will be made at the coast. Later, when the comedian appears as a star on Broadway, the pictures produced under the two-reel series will be transferred to New York. One of the most famous writers in America, it is announced, will be the author of the Williams stories.

Sunday Theatres Win And Lose at Election

GRAND ISLAND, Neb.—Grand Island voters decided in favor of Sunday theatres and amusements by a vote of 2,613 to 983 at the municipal election here April 7.

LOSE AT BLOOMINGTON, Ill.—The proposition for Sunday theatres was defeated by a majority of 600 at the election today, the total vote being only half of the city's voting strength.

Murray Stars and Directs

Charles Murray, Mack Sennett comedian, is both star and director of the Paramount-Mack Sennett comedy, "By Colly." This is the comedian's first endeavor on the directorial end.

Louise Huff Will Play Stellar Roles Under Selznick Banner for Five Years

Louise Huff has been engaged by Selznick Enterprises to play stellar roles for the next five years. The engagement covers a period of five years. The acquisition of Miss Huff brings two new stars under the Selznick banner within one week, the other being William Collier.

The decision to star Miss Huff was not the result of an impulse, according to the statement from Selznick. He said: "A long and careful investigation concerning not alone her merits as an actress, but her appeal as a screen favorite was made through a dozen different sources.

Send Queries to Showmen

"First, the exhibitor was taken into consideration, and inquiries were made of important managers in large and small cities. A host of letters were sent out to patrons of motion picture houses asking them what they thought of Miss Huff. "Another strong factor in determining the selection of Miss Huff as a star was the amount of mail received by her in the course of a month from picture fans. All of this entered into the final decision of securing Miss Huff's signature to a five-year contract."

Born in Georgia

Louise Huff was born in Columbus, Ga., and made her debut on the stage in the Klave & Erlanger production of "Ben Hur." She also appeared in dramatic stock companies in Utica and Syracuse, N.Y., in New York and Los Angeles. In productions in which she proved exceptionally popular throughout the country were "Seventeen." "Great Expectations."

Daylight Saving Is Shelved in Chicago

If Chicago gets daylight saving by city ordinance, it will have to start in at the beginning again when the new city council meets May 3. Failure of the aldermen to act April 6 on the pending daylight saving measure threw the ordinance into the wastebasket pending ordinances were automatically placed on file with the adjournment of the council.

The ordinance was reported into the council three separate times, twice with the recommendation of the judiciary committee that it be passed. Some labor union leaders opposed it, as the working men favored it and the measure was twice deferred in order to hold further hearings.

If revived next month the ordinance would, according to council routine, be referred to a committee for consideration before being brought up for action on the council floor. This would bring the earliest date at which it could now be put in effect the latter part of May.

J. Rich Moss Has Taken Over Grand at Lincoln

J. Rich Moss, who at various times has been connected with the Imperial, Crown and Victoria theatres in Chicago and who is well known among state right men, has taken over the Grand theatre at Lincoln, Ill.

This 500-seat house has been remodelled and redecorated and is scheduled to open on April 19.

List of Selznick Stars

The list of Selznick stars now stands: Olive Thomas, Elaine Hammerstein, Owen Moore, Eugene O'Brien, Louise Huff, William Faversham, William Collier and Zenia Keefe, Selznick's 1920 star. Since the first of the year the list has been enlarged by several important names who will be entrusted to capable scenario writers to assist Miss Huff in creating her own film image among the motion picture patrons of the world.

Title of Wistaria Picture Is Now "Neglected Wives"

Wistaria Productions, Inc., announces that its picture which temporarily was titled "Why Women Sin" has been changed to "Neglected Wives." Thomas O'Brien, secretary of the company, said the title was changed, as the working construction might have been placed on the working title.
Realart Salesmen Endeavoring to Establish Record for First Year

Two Specials and Five Star Subjects Are Included in Schedule of Productions That Will Be Issued Within Three Months

Realart Pictures Corporation’s field forces are striving hard to close out the first season’s business with a new selling record established.

Two specials head the list of productions and five star subjects are included in the schedule. “The Law of the Yukon,” a Charles Miller production, and “The Deep Purple,” an R. A. Walsh production, both presented by Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, are the two features. Two Mary Miles Minter pictures and one from each of Realart’s other three stars will be published within the next three months.

These seven productions will round out a total of seventeen handled by Realart during the year. The company was organized for active business about the middle of last summer. The first picture was not issued, however, until the 1st of December, 1919, which reduces the actual time in which the seventeen productions were handled to about six months.

To Demonstrate Efficiency

“We expect to demonstrate,” reads a statement from the office of J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, “that Realart has one of the biggest and best organized sales forces in the business.”

“Of course, the two big Mayflower specials, ‘The Law of the Yukon’ and ‘The Deep Purple’ are as big a pair as anyone could draw to. And when the balance is considered, it is not difficult to understand why Realart has planned this big clean-up campaign to finish its first season.”

“Coming down the home stretch in this way we can look forward and backward over the season with considerable pride. We did not get going until early in December, when we released ‘Soldiers of Fortune,’ an Allan Dwan production, and ‘The Mystery of the Yellow Room,’ an Emilie Chautard production, both presented by Mayflower.

Fims Offered by Realart

“We offered ‘The Stolen Kiss’ and ‘Sinners in March and ‘Kurse Marjorie’ this month. In the list will be noted some of the season’s most successful and notable productions.

“We have made good on our promises within this year’s time. Our records picture the way in which every section of the country are sufficient evidence of this. There is no important chain of houses in the country that has not booked a Realart picture. We have landed every one of our first nine productions at big houses on Broadway.

“Realart pictures not only have stood as a standard of quality in production, but they have been supported by the largest promotion by the best and finest exhibitors in the country. Almost a year ago we promised to make pictures that would do this, and we have accomplished it.”

Callaghan Claims Two Directors on Subject

Get Gratifying Results

Andrew J. Callaghan, head of Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., which is starring Bessie Love, says that the results obtained by employing both a man and a woman director on one production has more than justified the necessary expense.

Professional circles on the West Coast are watching with great interest, it is said. Ida May Park and Joseph de Grasse are the co-directors. “Combining the knowledge, viewpoints, and feminine viewpoints, has accomplished very gratifying results, it is declared.

Miss Love’s first production for the Callaghan interests is in the Midland-ers,” an adaptation of Charles Tenny Jackson’s novel. Several studio scenes have been screened.

“Bringing Up Father” Is Booked by Loew Circuit

A contract has been closed which guarantees a sixty-day showing on the Loew circuit of each production of the “Bringing Up Father” series of comedies adapted from George M. Cohan’s comic strip, and distributed through Pathé.

All the newspapers of the Hearst organization are cooperating with theatres in introducing the series to the screen. In New York City, the New York American is announcing the initial appearance of Johnnie Branscome and Margaret Fitzroy in the first of the comedies, “Breaking Into Society,” at the Strand theatre.

LOCAL CENSORSHIP

One of the most seriously menacing forces at work against the interests of the present day exhibitor is the rapidly spreading local censorship propaganda.

From every section of the country, from cities, towns, even villages where pictures are shown but one or two nights a week, come reports of attempts to organize committees for the local censoring of motion pictures.

Newspapers printed accounts of the first isolated cases where such attempts were made. Neighboring newspapers reprinted the stories and the busybody element in their communities took up the idea. In this manner the movement has spread, gradually gaining force, until it now merits the serious consideration of every exhibitor in the nation.

If you have not come into contact with such a movement in your city, you are fortunate, but not exempt. There is a dangerous chance of such a movement being started. The time to prepare to meet the emergency is now.

Every exhibitor has experienced the inconvenience and monetary loss that accompanies interference from local authorities. Every exhibitor knows what it means to have booked a costly attraction, to have advertised it expensively, only to find shortly before time to open the theatre that someone has protested against it and a private showing must be given to the council, the mayor, or a delegation of club women.

These things may be expected regularly with local censorship in force.

The time to prevent them is before the committee has been formed.

It is to provide exhibitors with a weapon of defense that may be used effectually at the first whisper of local censorship doctrine that the accompanying advertisement has been made up.

Every exhibitor is invited to use it or to file it for use when needed.

Appeal Is Pointed

Especially has been made to incorporate into the copy as briefly as possible the salient features of the anti-censorship argument. A book might be filled with the arguments on the exhibitorial side, but a book would not be read by the public whose support the exhibitor must obtain if he is to successfully combat the forces organized against him.

These forces operate in private.

By whispers and closed meetings their plans are set forth and developed.

The movement is generally started in the ladies' clubs. A member learns that a committee of club women has been delegated to pass upon the motion pictures exhibited in a certain city. Usually with an eye upon the chairmanship of such a committee, she brings up the matter at a meeting of her club.

Interest Develops Rapidly

The subject is interesting. The idea gains favor. In a short time the council is approached. It is not long before the committee has been formed and given official or semi-official standing.

When this point has been reached the exhibitor faces a knotty problem.

A thinking showman will not per-
The Constitution Guarantees
"FREE PRESS"
"FREE SPEECH" DEMAND FREE PICTURES

Censorship of literature would have ruined every great masterpiece.
Censorship of the press would have prevented this nation gaining and maintaining its freedom.
Censorship of the pulpit would have caused this nation to fall back to the witch-burning days of bigotry.
CENSORSHIP OF MOTION PICTURES WILL RUIN THIS YOUNG ART, CURBING AND HAMPERING ITS GROWTH, AND WILL PREVENT FROM BEING DEPICTED THE MASTERPIECES THAT THE SCREEN IS HEIR TO.
Free pictures are as necessary to the well-being of the nation as a free press and a free pulpit.

Protect the Freedom of the Screen

Exhibitors confronted with the local censorship problem are invited to utilize the above advertisement as the basis of their campaign to educate the public against the menace.

But the most effectual means of setting his argument before the public is by way of the newspaper.

If it is possible to state his views in an interview, it is advisable to do so. But it will be found that in many cases the newspaper is not especially anxious to print such a statement.

Should Buy Space
It is better, whether or not such an interview is accepted, to make his statement in space that he has purchased with his own money.

The very fact that he is willing to spend money in his defense is proof of his sincerity. Such space should be used whether or not his argument is printed in the news columns.

The copy that is presented here-with states in the briefest possible terms the argument against censorship that will impress the public most strongly.

The only reason that censorship is permitted in any form is because the public has not been brought to give the matter serious consideration.

When the average man is told that under censorship rule the literary masterpieces of the world will not be available upon the screen, that the advance of the most popular of all entertainment forms will be retarded, that a power for good that is stronger than any other will be arbitrarily diminished, he at once questions the wisdom of censorship.

Appeal Is to the Intelligent
The copy has been written in dignified style.

It is not the horn-blowing type of copy that is commonly associated with the theatre.

It is calculated to appeal to the intelligent, for the support of the intelligent alone can save the situation.

Prompt action is essential.
There is hardly a doubt that an intelligent speech delivered at the time the censorship campaign is suggested would convert even its instigator. It is after the instigators have been set to Mob Piece the screen, it becomes difficult to sway them.

It is human to stick to an opinion after that opinion has been publicly expressed.

An advertisement like the above is valuable as the beginning of the campaign. It contains the nucleus about which an extended campaign can be constructed.

It should in no case be used unless there is positive evidence that a movement is on foot. Prematurely employed it may serve the purpose of starting just such a movement as it is calculated to combat.

Exhibitors are urged to use the copy, or the ideas contained in it, in whatever form suits their individual purposes. If it is not necessary to use it at this time, and we hope it not, it is well to file it where it can be brought into play at the psychological moment.

Theatre Front Rebuilt
To Boost Fox Revival

For attractiveness at little cost, and a display which offered no interference with the handling of the crowds or the selling of tickets and did not block the entrance to the theatre in any way, a house front erected by Benjamin F. Jackson, manager of the Audubon theatre in New York City, surpassed anything of this nature seen in this section for some time.

The production featured by Jackson was the Fox version of "Les Miserables," Victor Hugo's masterpiece, with William Farnum in the stellar role—a subject which offers many possibilities for display as well as straightaway exploitation.

Mr. Jackson, whose house front is of a type that permits of the most effectual dressing, conceived the idea of converting the entrance of the theatre into a setting of "Les Miserables." The design sketched by him was turned over to his stage carpenter, who, after studying it, evolved a plan whereby three separate pieces of painted beaverboard could be joined to make a solid wall front resembling the entrance to a prison.

With the addition of a spiked wooden archway and two imitation hexagonal lanterns in which electric lamps were fixed, Mr. Jackson had a singularly attractive front for the Audubon and a feature which told a story. Cutouts of William Farnum showing the dates for the picture were fixed to the improvised wall, and an easel in the lobby carried a big frame of Farnum in the character of Jean ValJean.

Simplicity is the keynote of the display made by Mr. Jackson, and the results obtained, as recorded in the box office, offer a good argument in favor of this style of exploitation as against settings which crowd the lobby and interfere with entrance to and egress from the theatre.

"Girl of the Sea"

"If "Girl of the Sea," the recent Republic publication, had been presented to exhibitors in July or August, when the ocean, lake or river, if adjacent, would have offered exploitation possibilities, stories of its advancement via the popular bathing girl formulae would have been common.
It wasn't.
It was published at a time when this avenue of approach was barred by nature.
In Chicago, however, the picture has not suffered because of that fact.
A linking of interests has been effected whereby Guyon's Paradise, a dance hall, prints a picture of the star in character on its elevated platform one-sheets, the title of the picture being the most prominent wording and the remainder of the copy informing the dancing public that a "Girl of the Sea" dancing contest will be held at Guyon's, rewards aggregating $50.00 being offered.
It is doubtful if the bathing girl method would have produced better results than will be derived from the tie-up. It is a tie-up that can be effected in almost any city. It is worthy of the consideration of every exhibitor who has the picture booked.
A Kentucky Colonie, a jazz band and a log cabin were figures on the Strand-Tivoli float, a girl on horseback accompanying the same on its tour of San Francisco during the run of "In Old Kentucky" at the Strand and Tivoli.

San Francisco Theatres Combine Exploitation for "Old Kentucky"

"We're not equipped for it," "We haven't the capacity to stand the expense," and "Opposition is too strong," are the three popular exhibitor substitutes for "It's too much trouble" when intensive and extensive exploitation is suggested for a given production.

In occasional instances there is a grain of truth in the excuses. It does not follow that they are good excuses. They are never legitimate reasons for refusing to give the attraction the benefit of the best exploitation that can be improvised for it.

An excellent example of the manner in which objections can be overcome is to be found in the remarkable success with which the Tivoli and Strand theatres, San Francisco, exhibited "In Old Kentucky," Anita Stewart's First National attraction.

The Tivoli and Strand, although technically what might be termed rival theatres, opened and closed the production at the same time. They booked it simultaneously for a week. They combined their advertising. They utilized the same billboards. The only thing these two houses did not do was to pool the profits. Yet both of them gained a handsome return on the week.

To really fathom this success, it is necessary to understand San Francisco's theatrical district. The downtown district is scattered over a distance of five blocks. At one end are two theatres under the same management, which also controls a theatre at the opposite end. They catch them coming and going. Also if there be a holdout crowd at one end of the district, where the rule is to play one week engagements, the house next door is benefited, for amusement seekers will naturally look for the nearest theatre. The business at their third house is steadier for it is devoted to pictures running two weeks and longer.

Between these two poles are located the Tivoli and Strand, but a single city block separating them. Hence it must be seen that when there was a holdout crowd at both houses every night in the week, there must have been a tremendous interest created that caused people to want to see "In Old Kentucky" and to make them willing to stand in line for the privilege.

Perhaps the most striking exploitation device that entered into the campaign was a float representing everything that Kentucky was noted for—except a distillery. The old log cabin, the Colonel with his long white duster and goatee, the negro jazz band, palms and ferns. A southern picket fence bounded the wagon alongside of which a girl jockey rode a race horse. And while the negro band played its wildest jazz, the old Colonel spat tobacco on the pavement, the float driver shimmied and the girl jockey tried her best not to fall off the horse.

Everything indicates that the association of a director of prominence, a play beloved by all, and a star that possessed pulling power was responsible for the success achieved in San Francisco. The advertising in the matter of actual space consumed was reduced to a minimum. The total space for the two theatres being less than the combined space used on an average by the two theatres when competing productions were offered. In the matter of billboards the number utilized was the same as ordinary, the space being taken on contract.

But the keynote of the entire project was the size and interest in the production. "Too Big for Any One Theatre" was embodied in every bit of advertising placed, whether it was newspaper or billboard.

The unusual feature, however, which entered into the exploitation of "In Old Kentucky" was the float and Pickanniny band which held forth on the streets of San Francisco for the entire week. The float was designed by Frank Costello, manager of the Tivoli theatre.

The feat of playing "In Old Kentucky" at two theatres at once will go down in San Francisco theatrical history as a truly remarkable bit of showmanship. San Francisco is a city of approximately half a million people and has 90 motion picture theatres. It will be seen that there were plenty of counter attractions with which "In Old Kentucky" had to compete. In face of this competition, "In Old Kentucky" not only proved a money-maker, but established a precedent in the size of holdout crowds.

The getting together of the two theatres is all the more remarkable in view of the fact that the management and ownership of the two houses are in no way allied and until the showing of "In Old Kentucky" they were by virtue of their proximity keen competitors.

The forward looking men at the helm of the Tivoli and Strand saw that combination is stronger than antagonism and pooled their interest to put over one of the striking successes of the year.

The San Francisco performance cannot, of course, be duplicated in every city and with every production played. But it can be duplicated where exhibitorial relations are as they should be between business men, and in such cases as the attraction is strong enough to bring out the crowds necessary to support such exploitation.

It is obvious that the picture deserving of this extra promotion is one in which exhibitors have confidence. If there is that confidence that the picture will please, it is the best sort of business judgment to make every effort to bring every potential theatre patron in the territory into the theatre.

The theatres will be found too large to accommodate the crowds brought out by the best exploitation that two organizations can effect.

The striking points of the proposition are obvious.

Negro Jazz Band Aids Nebraska Theatre Men

Some time ago, we chronicled in this department the exploits of a colored musical organization which was aiding exhibitors in popularizing "In Old Kentucky," throughout the State of Indiana. The idea was so good that we heartily commended its general adoption. It is a pleasure, therefore, to record that exhibitors in other sections of the country have been given the same opportunity.

Middle Western exhibitors are said to be making a clean-up at advanced prices to cover the increased cost by employing a band concert prior to each performance to attract crowds to the theatre. This stunt, which is an inseparable part of almost every minstrel show, has been found to be the means of crowding a motion picture theatre to capacity at every performance for even an extended run of the same attraction.

The lure of music has been found to have lost none of its attractiveness, and the presence of a band in front of a theatre is still drawing the crowds to the neighborhood. The fact that the concert is in connection with further entertainment inside the theatre is proving just as effective as a means of drawing the crowds inside as it ever was.

The band idea as it is being used in Nebraska was conceived by C. E. Holah, manager of the A. H. Blank Enterprises, the holder of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit franchise for the territory. He devised it as a means of exploiting Anita Stewart in "In Old Kentucky." A negro jazz band, including three soloists, is included in all bookings of the attraction if the exhibitor desires it, and that it usually is wanted is shown by the fact that every day of the band's time has been booked up until the last of June.

This method of exploitation had its initial presentation in Fremont, Neb. "Bob" Wall, owner of Wall's theatre, there, is a great lover of horse racing and owns a string himself. He had booked the Anita Stewart production before the band idea was fully grown, but the band was ready before his date and was included in the showing. On the opening day at the theatre, a parade was held at noon. It consisted of the band and six of Mr. Wall's own horses, two of them ridden by negro boys in jockey costumes. At two o'clock, the band gave a concert in front of the theatre and the first run of the picture was at 2:15. The band also gave another concert inside the theatre before the picture was run, and while the last reels were being shown were once more in front of the theatre attracting a crowd for the next run.

"Other Men's Shoes" Has Profitable Angle

The announcement of each forthcoming production is an important trade event by persons interested in affairs of the screen for reasons as various as their interests. Not the least important one for exhibitors to consider is the length of the title, electric signs being held in high esteem. In many cases, important phase, in many instances, is the advertising possibilities the title presents.

"Other Men's Shoes," an Edgar Lewis production recently published by Pathé, did not at first blush impress as particularly well adapted to the purposes of the advertiser. An exhibitor discovered an angle that should be observed by all who intend exhibiting the production.

The accompanying reproduction of a page-wide advertisement used by the Regent theatre, Scranton, Pa., tells the story quite well. "Try to Get into 'Other Men's Shoes'" is an excellent line.

The contest angle that is provided by the fitting of shoes to the foot of a competitor is unique and therefore certain to gain considerable publicity.

"Other Men's Shoes" might well be adapted to make an effective appeal. The contest idea can be carried to the limit of a search for the best foot in Scranton. This angle will not only bring in the regular customers but will also help to sell the shoes by the excited curiosity of the public.

There is a distinct value in productions of this nature, productions that, because of some individual characteristics, lend themselves to special exploitation. They tend to develop the science of exploitation—and it is the development of that science which is lifting the estate of the exhibitor to a higher plane daily.
ANNOUNCING a week before the opening of the engagement that his presentation of "The Toll Gate," William S. Hart's latest production, in its world premiere, was to be the best feature of its kind in the history of his Million Dollar theatre, Los Angeles, Sid Grauman went to extreme lengths to make good his promise. The above photographs give an idea of the lavish nature of the program prepared. The opening showed an Italian garden, a young girl dancing alone in the foreground. As she seemed to tire and fall asleep, her dream was visualized when the statuary came to life and presented an interpretative number. A singer followed, her song to be abruptly ended by pistol shots off-stage. Curtains parted to reveal a western scene. Three cowboys rushed in, abducted the lady and escaped with her on a hand car. By skillful manipulation of the lighting, this scene was worked into the first scenes of the picture, the illusion starting off the picture with the audience in full sympathy.
Paul Gusdanovic Gives Views on Big Question

One of the vitally interesting questions that faces the advertising exhibitor at the present time is the matter of attention fairly between straight advertising and intensive exploitation by unusual methods. Views from prominent advertisers are always interesting in such cases. Paul Gusdanovic, whose advertisements have been reproduced in this department from time to time, has statements to make that will be interesting to all.

"As long as producers make pictures in which the likes and dislikes of a woman are brought out, exhibitors will never lack for ideas with which exploitation campaigns may be popular."

Thus does Paul Gusdanovic, manager of the Strand theatre, Cleveland, O., qualify a current belief that the difficulty of providing adequate promotion matter for special feature productions is looming into one of the biggest problems of the motion picture industry today. Such is absolutely not the case, Mr. Gusdanovic says. And the worry which producers and exhibitors may experience in endeavoring to supply a never-before-used idea for each motion picture produced is not an essential to the exhibitor who can get the true showman's angle on the delineation of a woman's character in practically any production.

"With all due respect to the scores of clever exploitation novelties that men in the exhibitor's service departments are managing to devise for the use of exhibitors," said Mr. Gusdanovic, "there is one promotion angle that will appeal to the exhibitor who aims for human interest appeal far more than any other idea that might be hatched from an effort inspired by the desire to dig up something new. This one big advantage that can never be taken away from exhibitors is an almost insatiable thirst for knowledge by the weaker sex. If exhibitors will look back they will find that undoubtedly the greatest campaigns ever launched involved in the course of their accomplishment set a double hold on women's likes and dislikes." Launching his views on this situation, Mr. Gusdanovic referred to "Virtuous Wives," starring Anita Stewart, and "Choosing a Wife," both distributed by the First National Exhibitors' Circuit, for which exhibitors in every nook and corner of America, he says, find it comparatively easy to present with big exploitation campaigns.

"When it comes to such pictures as D. W. Griffith's The Greatest Question, which I understand is meeting with popularity on account of the ingenious grave lot stunt which was prepared for it, and A Day's Pleasure, which many exhibitors are exploiting by sending out rattle-trap fliers driven by impersonators of Charlie Chaplin, it must be admitted that such novelties are eminently desirable. And yet when you take a picture like Auction of Souls, starring Aurora Mardiganian, and of which the First National Exhibitors' Circuit is the official distributor, you will find that the woman angle on this production was entirely responsible for its sensational success and whenever I get a picture that lends itself to exploitation by means of playing up every possible chance to describe an unusual idea, or life, or escapade of a member of the fair sex, I find that the box office reports show that we are justified in doing so."

Mr. Gusdanovic refers to his exploitation treatment of "Even As Eve." In this production Mr. Gusdanovic made a consistent trade mark out of the phrase, "An amazing photopax of feminine wiles." Moreover, he reverted to the ever-interesting legend of what happened in the garden of Eden through the use of pen and ink.

M. A. Malaney's Skill Seen in Euclid's Ads

The business of motion picture advertising has passed, in the last few years, from the hands of men whose sole qualification for the task was the ownership of a theatre into the care of men whose training has been especially for this work. It is to these men, in great measure, that the strides forward that have been made may be attributed. The future of motion picture advertising is well placed in their keeping.

M. A. Malaney, who prepares the advertisements used by Loew's Euclid theatre, Cleveland, O., is one of these men. His work may be taken as proof that the training he has received has not been in vain.

We have reproduced several of his half-page spreads in this department, each of which merited the praise given it. And we are presenting another accompanying this discussion for the same reason.

As those familiar with the press material furnished by United Artists in connection with "Pollyanna" will doubtless observe, most of the material used in the spread was obtained from that source. But the skillful manipulation of the material selected and the harmonious and pointed effect which results must be credited to Mr. Malaney.

It is skill in this field, the capitalization upon the material furnished by the organizations which supply the pictures, that every exhibitor, whether or not he is artistically inclined, can develop and convert to his own use. There is no limit to the good that may be accomplished by endeavor in this direction. And Mr. Malaney's advertisements serve splendidly as guides.

Punch

It has become common for motion picture people to interpret punch as a melodramatic sound effect in a production that brings applause, appreciation, thrills.

The theatre advertiser has another meaning for it.

The theatre manager knows that advertising may have punch as well as a production. He knows, better than many believe he knows, that punch need not be melodramatic, wild nor impossible.

A neatly turned phrase, a pointed paragraph, a well-written line, the advertising exhibitor realizes, is as powerful as the spectacular and questionable fireworks.

Bruce Fowler, manager of the Elmwood theatre, Buffalo, N. Y., delivered that sort of punch recently on the cover of his house organ, one of the best printed. It consisted of five lines of type as set, and read:

"Spring has come—will it be the birds—that is, all the birds except the Blue Bird, who long since took up permanent residence at the Elmwood."
"Excuse My Dust" Is Big Event in Denver

A BRASS BAND, a float contrived of twenty-four sheets mounted back to back and a Roamer automobile carrying suitably worded banners were used to excellent advantage when "Excuse My Dust," Wallace Reid's Paramount Artcraft production, was exhibited at the Rialto theatre, Denver, Colo. Though it is said no special preference was given any make of car in the producing of the picture, it has been found that the Roamer agencies throughout the country are glad to cooperate with exhibitors playing the picture.

The obvious result of the Denver exploitation was the spreading of the conviction that "Excuse My Dust" was a picture worth going to see. It is certain that automobile enthusiasts, particularly, were influenced to attend the theatre, and those who are familiar with the picture know that it is an automobile picture from beginning to end. Exhibitors need feel no hesitancy in adapting the Denver idea to local conditions, as the name "Roamer" does not appear in the production. Where there is no Roamer agency, any other make of car will serve as well. The business-getting qualities of the enterprise are obvious.
Kansas City Exchange Uses National Campaign

The national advertising campaigns conducted by several producing and distributing organizations on behalf of the theatre men have developed numerous interesting angles. These have been discussed from time to time in this department. The latest development is of general interest, as it illustrates with facts the contention that the exhibitor and the exchange are working together more harmoniously today than ever before.

Goldwyn's production, "Flame of the Desert," in which Geraldine Farrar is featured, was one of the productions to receive its share of the general advertising done by the Goldwyn Pictures Corp.

The picture was booked for a showing at the Liberty theatre, Kansas City, recently, and the management conferred with the exchange regarding the proper exploitation of the engagement.

R. C. Cary, exploitation and press representative at the Goldwyn exchange in Kansas City, took the matter in hand and produced the advertisement that is reproduced herewith, an advertisement that connects up directly with the national campaign that was conducted when the picture was published.

Another instance of exhibitor-exchange co-operation, it is important for the part it plays in showing that these two important forces are every day becoming more closely allied. It marks another step forward toward a goal that all who have the best interests of the industry at heart strive to attain.

Exploitation Man Gets Public School Support

George E. DeKruif, exploitation representative of the Goldwyn Chicago branch, has discovered that it is not impossible to interest school heads in a given motion picture attraction. He has discovered further, that it is not only possible but highly profitable.

The newest series of Martin Johnson travel pictures has the feature in the interests of which Mr. DeKruif made his campaign, a campaign which was admittedly something of an experiment but which will doubtless become an established part of future exploitation enterprises where pictures of similar nature are concerned.

As a test of a dozen letters were mailed to High Schools in Chicago, institutions representative of the various sections of the city being chosen.

Mailed in the morning, the letters reached their destinations in the afternoon mail. The following morning, in the same mail that carried DeKruif's letters that day before, six replies were received, all of them favorable. Later deliveries brought additional responses and as this is written it is too early to give final figures upon the campaign.

Encouraged by this showing, and by the hearty approval which educators indicated, a complete canvass of the schools of the city was commenced. Careful check of returns is being made and it is believed that the returns will show more than 75 per cent of the school heads questioned is favor of the plan.

The plan works out in this manner:

The pictures are booked to a theatre in the neighborhood of the school on a Friday or Saturday if possible, though not necessarily. The students are told in the class room, that the pictures are being shown at the theatre and that they are worth the seeing. The educators have been assured that the remainder of the program will be made up of attractions in keeping with the Johnson series.

The far-reaching influence of the enterprise is its strongest point.

Students will carry the message into their homes. It is sufficiently unusual for teachers to advocate theatre attendance that the majority of those families will be brought into the theatre also.

The theatre thus gains valuable additional patronage and makes valuable friends.

It is by giving service of this nature that exchange exploitation men demonstrate their usefulness. Chicago exhibitors who profit by Mr. DeKruif's campaign owe him their hearty support in future exploitation enterprises which he conducts. It is by this sort of cooperation that the exhibiting business is advanced.

Calendar Billboard Is Strong Drawing Power

Drawing power exerted is the final test of every advertising or exploitation enterprise that is utilized. No matter how pretty a display may be, it is dead matter if it fails to exert an influence upon those who see it, an influence tending to encourage theatre attendance. The enterprise which does exert such power is valuable, whether it be optically enjoyable or otherwise.

The billboard which was used to advertise "Dangerous Days" when that production was the attraction at the California theatre, Los Angeles, cannot be called pretty. It has nothing of beauty in its makeup. Yet it is strong in the drawing power which marks the successful advertisement.

As will be seen in the accompanying illustration, the simplest possible calendar design was used in a size that commanded attention and drove home the important facts regarding the engagement.

The identification of picture with playing date is the closest that has been effected.

The paper, of course, must be printed after the playing dates are determined. It is of such nature, however, that it can be prepared by any lithographer and the better job printer. It is worth the time of every exhibitor who plays the picture to prepare a stand of this type.
"Fade-In" Replaces Prologue
In Cameraphone Presentation

H. B. Kester, manager of the Cameraphone theatre, East Liberty, Pa., a suburb of Pittsburgh, has experienced excellent results with what he terms the "Fade-In," in reality a substitute for the prologue that has many commendable features.

In many instances exhibitors have found that excellent productions—productions that were certainly worthy of the best presentation features that could be contrived for them—were so constructed as to make a fitting prologue almost an impossibility. In these cases the big scene, or the scene that was most admirably suited to prologue purposes, was far into the picture.

Naturally, the prologue based upon this scene, if executed before the opening of the picture, lost a great deal of its effectiveness due to the belated arrival of the scene in the picture.

"Out Yonder," Olive Thomas' Selznick production, was such a production.

Mr. Kester felt sure that he would be amply repaid for the best presentation feature that he could provide. His confidence in the attraction is mirrored in the fact that he introduced the stage presentation feature for the first time in the history of his theatre.

But the scene that promised most for presentation purposes came near the end of the first reel, and the first part of the reel was essential to the sense of the scene.

Accordingly, an elaborate special setting was constructed, the screen was "flied," the lights were tested with the picture in operation, so that just the right degree of illumination would be assured, and his stage feature planted at that point in the story.

At the proper moment the screen was raised, leaving the picture upon the setting. It quickly disappeared as a sunrise effect was put over, and, as day dawned, a young woman, apparently nude, rose out of the sea, climbed over a set rock and donned the overalls and shirt that Olive Thomas wears in the ensuing scene.

Again the picture was flashed upon the setting, the screen was lowered into place, and the girl in the setting became Olive Thomas in the picture.

Mr. Kester's device is a good one. And the name he has given it, the fade-in, is appropriate. It will doubtless be generally adopted.

Too often have exhibitors given up the idea of special presentation features simply because a viewing of the picture convinced them that the first scenes were of such nature that presentation features would not work well into the picture.

Mr. Kester has evolved a practical and effective method of getting around this difficulty. He has, indeed, caused the difficulty to evaporate—for there is no evident reason why the fade-in should not be as valuable as the prologue.

In connection with the showing Mr. Kester continued his circulation of the house organ, which was given mention in these columns in a recent number. It is a competently put together sheet, newspaper size and made up in newspaper style, which, when distributed by men in the Cameraphone employ, must bring business.

With a force as strong as that house organ to bring business, and presentation features of this type, in addition to the usual short subjects and music, "Out Yonder" may readily be pictured as making the excellent box office record that is credited to it.
Butte Exhibitor's Exploitation Wins Despite Painters' Strike

The capabilities of L. R. Daigler, manager of the Rialto theatre, Butte, Mont., were severely tested recently when exploitation seemed doomed. And so far as the painters and decorators of Butte were concerned, it was doomed. It was out of the question until the strike of the union was declared non-existent. And this meant time.

But live showmanship has behind it a spirit of enterprise that can't be stopped. Hence of this fact, this story about how Mr. Daigler devised a promotion campaign without the help of painters and decorators is another loose-leaf supplement to the showman's mental manual on the unwritten and unpublished book of "Exploitation that can't be and is put over."

The thing that seemed sure to suffer from the walkout was the lobby, and designs had been started, only to be deserted when the call of the union sounded. This left the exhibitor in anything but an auspicious position so far as lobby displays were concerned. And in the particular case of Mr. Daigler, artistic lobby displays that serve as salesmen for admission tickets are thought to be vitally important exploitation.

Perhaps nothing is more uninspiring in the way of art matter than an unfinished product with its pool of mixed glue and colors on the floor, its scaffold of building apparatus stained consistently with spats of any given chewing tobacco. In fact, this was almost the condition in which the theatre lobby was left when the strike occurred.

Records show that the first thing Mr. Daigler did was to get his porters busy and clear everything out of the lobby. Those unfinished pieces of freeze and other paintings did look woe-begone, but it couldn't be helped. The manager of the exhibitor would almost have cried to look upon a half-finished painting of Katherine MacDonald, who was appearing in "The Beauty Market," her third of a series of pictures distributed by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. Katherine's "American Beauty" features could only be dimly tainted. That touch of genius which serves as the foundation for a pretty painting is certainly not lovely in its unfinished state.

So after Mr. Daigler had dried the tears that didn't flow, he turned a portion of his house staff into an art department pro-temp. Wiring the First National Exchange in Seattle, he obtained a full assortment of billboard paper that was provided with the "Beauty Market," and issued by cutting out the pictures of Katherine MacDonald and affixing these photographs to his lobby mirrors he had almost a good an effect as if the artist had painted a picture on the mirror.

And in those parts of the lobby where the unfinished products of striking painters, and decorators looked large and uninspiring, Mr. Daigler placed cut-outs from his larger paper.

Another method which he found convenient to emphasize an "I-should-worry" attitude that the theatre did not feel was by using green and red lights in his sign advertising "The Beauty Market." This method of announcing the title of a picture was entering a new field with the public, but in Butte, Mont., it was almost a knockout. It carried out the "business as usual" atmosphere and gave the idea that the audience would miss nothing whatever as a result of the strike. This hit of novelty in the use of electric lights, it is believed, counteracted the effect of what was lacking in the way of the usual painters' and decorators' adornments.

The attraction to exploit directly following "The Beauty Market" was Constance Talmadge's second First National picture, "A Virtuous Vamp." And not a moment did the promoter for this attraction suffer. Practically the same idea as regard cutouts and poster matter was taken for the lobby display of "A Virtuous Vamp" as characterized "The Beauty Market." However, in the exploitation of the Constance Talmadge picture Mr. Daigler had a great advantage in the use of the song, "Beautiful Gwen'd'lyn, You're a Virtuous Vamp," which the local music stores agreed to feature and plug during the showing of this picture. And the co-operation of these stores that took the form of window displays in a great way made up for the lack of lobby decoration.

The buying of space is to be encouraged almost without restriction. It is almost impossible to buy too much of it. But it is badly possible to lose, and in a measure natural, to nullify the purpose of the purchase by using that space not wisely but too thoroughly.

The Rivoli theatre, Denver, Colo., one of the William Fox chain theatres, recently used a half-page advertisement for "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's United Artists production, with more than ordinary success. The reproduction presented herewith gives rather a clear idea of its power.

The economy of matter is particularly striking.

There is little necessity for comment upon the actual construction of the layout.

It is well, though, to call attention to the fact that this design, in its original size, made the page that bore it a great power for the furtherance of the Rivoli's interests on this occasion. Certainly the fact that the picture was exhibiting at that time was impressed indelibly upon all who turned to that page.

It was impressed as ineradicably as the agency of type and white space could be made to impress it. It was impressed a thousand times as firmly as the same space full of eight-point could have made it.

News Interest

Julius K. Johnson, during the run of "The Fighting SHEPHERDS" at the New Garrick theatre, Minneapolis, Minn., persuaded a news reel photographer to make pictures of the University of Minnesota basketball squad.

A private showing was given the members of the squad, photographs of Anita Stewart were distributed and the film was continued during the run of the feature.

Students thronged the theatre. There is a news camera man in your city or one not far distant. Get in touch with him. News interest is keen interest.

ANN FORREST
Playing in the Goldwyn Picture “The Great Accident” Starring Tom Moore

A Scene from “The Tower of Ivory” Gertrude Atherton’s Famous Story, which Was Directed By William Parke and Is Being Distributed By Goldwyn Distributing Corporation
DIGEST
OF PICTURES OF THE WEEK

At no time in motion picture history has the short subject been given such serious attention as today. At no time have the leading thinkers in the industry devoted to its development and improvement such intensive effort. There is more than one reason for general satisfaction that such is the case.

The short subject has given to the standard length production many of its salient features. Derives which have proved their effectuality in one and two-reel lengths have been worked into longer productions with the best results. It would be interesting to know the number of features that would have been set down as failures had it not been for a bit of comedy interpolated at just the right point, a stretch of beautiful exterior photography at a psychological moment, a pointed subtitle with no general purpose save the provoking of a chuckle to bridge an abrupt transition.

The present tendency is toward novelty in short subjects. It follows that many of the discoveries will be of great value to producers of the more substantial film entertainment. A general betterment is the obvious result.

"THE SPORTING DUCHESS" (Vitagraph) has all the qualities of the box office success, plus the finer things that go to make up high class entertainment. Alice Joyce as the Duchess impresses the spectator as genuine. A brilliant actress, she gives the melodrama the smoothness of straight drama without in the slightest degree diminishing its melodramatic strength, the strength that seems bound to give the production a place among the box office sensations of the year.

"JUST A WIFE" (National Picture Theatres) promises much for the future product of this newly formed organization. If the first picture is a fair example of the standard to be maintained the market is the richer for its addition. Roy Stewart, who departs from his western character to portray a polished gentleman and a big business executive, proves himself an accomplished actor. Leatrice Joy and Kathryn Williams give competent support.

"THE WOMAN GIVES" (First National) compares well with the former works of Norma Talmadge, whose name has come to be popularly accepted as guarantee of satisfaction. It is an Owen Johnson story of studio life and loves with a strong emotional appeal. It is produced in the finished, efficient style of the series and should be well received in any community.

"SHORE ACRES" (Metro-Classes) brings a well-beloved American stage play to the screen without loss of thrill or sentimental appeal. Serpuline care has been taken to translate the play in detail as in spirit. Alice Lake is mentioned most prominently and deserves the place, but several members of the cast give performances that rival the star’s in merit. The play should be presented for just what it is, an old stage play in film form, and the public that comes to see it will pronounce the evening well spent.

"NURSE MARJORIE" (Realart) is in keeping with the previous productions Realart has offered with Mary Miles Minter in the leading role. It is a well made picture with an exceptionally strong cast and, containing an abundance of quaint humor, makes good entertainment. Miss Minter appears as a nurse, and her beauty is emphasized by her chic uniform.

"BRIGHT SKIES" (Brentwood) is the story of two orphans who, after enduring lives of hardship, find a home and happiness. ZuSu Pitts, who is featured, is compelled to share honors with Tom Gallery. It is a pleasing production similar in many ways to previous Brentwood offerings.

"TREASURE ISLAND" (Paramount Artcraft) is Robert Louis Stevenson’s immortal tale in tabloid form, with the clever Shirley Mason in the role of Jim Hawkins, Lon Chaney is Pew and Larry, and Charles Ogle as Long John Silver. The high points of the original story have been well brought out by Maurice Tourneur, the director, and the sea scenes, the fight in the stockade and finding of the buried treasure follow the story faithfully.

"DESSERT LOVE" (Fox) is another Tom Mix vehicle replete with those familiar qualities that make this star’s western dramas excellent box office assets. As usual Mix performs many daredevil stunts that make the action of the picture move swiftly. The support is in capable hands and good photography of well chosen locations is noticeable.

"THE BLOOD BARRIER" (Pathe) is stamped with the excellent directing of J. Stuart Blackton. This producer-director has taken a complicated Cyrus Townsend Brady plot and developed it into a very interesting and plausible picture. Sylvia Breamer and Robert Gordon in the principal roles are supported by a capable Blackton cast.

"DUDS" (Goldwyn) has given Tom Moore an opportunity to afford pleasant diversion to theatre patrons. Like so many Goldwyn pictures, this one is marked by close attention to detail which adds to its effectiveness. Moore is supported by a commendable cast, including Naomi Childers.

"THE DREAM CHEATER" (Hodkinson) is a screen version of Balzac’s mystical tale, “The Magic Skin.” The theme deals with the folly of superstition and gives J. Warren Kerrigan a dramatic role. capable performers make up Kerrigan’s company.

"THE FALSE ROAD" (Paramount Artcraft) presents the winsome Enid Bennett in a crook play in which she has to share stellar honors with Lloyd Hughes, Thomas H. Ince’s latest “find.” It is carefully directed and moves along smoothly to the usual happy ending. There is splendid character work by a competent company of performers, but the story follows the familiar lines of a number of other screen plays of this nature.
SYNOPSIS: Martini Berry, owner of "Shore Acres," gives Josiah Blake, banker, a mortgage on the farm to raise funds for investment in an oil deal. The oil deal, according to Blake, is a failure and the mortgage is about to be foreclosed when Sam Warren, in the employ of Blake, is accused of robbery and elopes with Helen Berry, Martin's daughter. Their ship is caught in a gale and her father prevents Nathaniel, his brother, from lighting the beacon which will steer them safely to shore. In the morning they drift ashore from the wreck and Martin forgives them. Nathaniel saves the homestead and the ending is happy.

Norma Talmadge in
THE WOMAN GIVES

Five-part drama; First National
Directed by R. William Neill
Published in April.

OPINION: There is every reason to believe that every class of patronage will endorse "The Woman Gives." It has all of the qualities that go to make up the popular success.

First there is Norma Talmadge. It is unnecessary to discuss her further than to state that her role is as clay in her hands and she dominates the production easily. She will receive the congratulations of her admirers and the general public alike.

Second in importance, perhaps, is the story. Owen Johnson, whose studio and stage stories have gained considerable popularity in magazine form, wrote it. The translation to film robbed it of nothing save his polished paragraphs, for which fine settings and a smooth continuity more than compensate.

The final assurance of public favor, is to be found in the painstaking, precise narration accomplished. Each cause is set forth clearly, leisurely, and followed by its effect in orderly, perfectly understandable manner. At no time is there the slightest chance of becoming confused. Points made by the star, as by every member of the cast, register with full effect. The production gains power by the device.

The name of Talmadge is almost magic in its box office effect in almost every American community. It should be subordinated to no other name in advertising "The Woman Gives." Yet there are other features of the production that certainly deserve prominent place. The logical thing to do, therefore, is to advertise extensively and forcefully. The play warrants it.

SYNOPSIS: Inga Sanderson, artist, and Robert Milton, sculptor, engaged, owe their success to Daniel Garford, popularly acclaimed a genius. When Garford finds that his wife is unsuccessful to him he abandons his career and seeks to drown his sorrow in drink. Inga exerts every effort to save him from fatal error. But Milton breaks with her because of her interest in Garford. Garford reclaims his popularity and it is commonly believed that he is to marry Inga, but at the last minute she surprises all by marrying Milton.

THE GINGHAM GIRL

Two-part comedy; Paramount-Sennett
Published in April.

OPINION: The high average maintained in Mack Sennett comedies, an average that has made the name of Sennett a not uncommon one in electric signs, is lowered somewhat by "The Gingham Girl." It is by no means a representative Sennett concoction.

At no producing plant can a plot be used more frequently without appreciable duling of edge than at the Sennett workshop. Plot is usually a secondary matter and Sennett has some half-dozen that have served him long and profitably, his method of twisting them at will into new and grotesque shapes being in great measure responsible for his popularity.

In this instance, however, something in the way of unique plot was needed to give body to a series of ridiculous events that are less funny than usual. The customary spontaneity is not there. The effort to entertain is more prominent than the humor of the situation—which spells disaster in slapstick.

The Sennett duck and a new addition to the company—dog that has been carefully trained, have some interesting bits. Yet it is not the type of comedy that can be played above the feature in advertising.

THE SPORTING DUCHESS
Six-part drama; Vitagraph
Directed by George Terwilliger
P nn. 1 to 4.

OPINION: "Checkers" and "In Old Kentucky" proved the popularity of the race melodrama. They were successes in practically every theatre that exhibited them. "The Sporting Duchess" is sufficiently like them and sufficiently different as to admit of no dispute regarding the nature of its public reception. It is eminently a box office attraction and is being satisfactorily dramatically.

Hailed as a Drury Lane melodrama, it satisfies expectations bred by mention of that theatre as a birthplace. As Vitagraph has produced it the sole wonder that remains is as to how the play could be presented successfully within the confines of the four-walled playhouse. The picture opens with beautifully photographed English interiors, moves on to interiors of like quality, represent ing the homes of the English nobility, and progresses via a believable London to a Derby that passes critical inspection as genuine.

The work of the star, beloved by many the best qualified leading lady pictures, is without flaw. And mere posing does not constitute her business. Emotional acting of the most trying type is demanded and she ably meets requirements.

Percy Marmont, her starring partner in recent productions, is natural as the husband. Lionel Pape, G. V. Seyffertitz and Mary McAvoy are other members of the cast who deserve special mention. Vitagraph has a valuable man in Seyfertitz. His brand of villainy is unique and markedly effective.

Exploitation men learned many things in the advertising of "Checkers" and "In Old Kentucky." They learned that a horse, or horses, can be unbitten from the customary equipages and made to pull crowds into the theatre. They learned that special lobbies and elaborate stage presentation build business. These should be employed with "The Sporting Duchess." The picture should then be rehearsed carefully with the best orchestra obtainable and will amply repay the effort put forth in its behalf.

SYNOPSIS: Muriel, Duchess of Desborough, consists an early incitement of her husband, but orders Mrs. Del naire, the woman in the case, from her home, not knowing that Major Mostyn, who is also a guest, is plotting to ruin her home. The Major manages to rouse the Duke's suspicion by accompanying Muriel to London on an urgent mission, but making it seem that they have eloped. As a consequence the Duke obtains a divorce. But debts press him and the race horse, his favorite at the coming derby, is auctioned off, Capt. Streathfield, friend of the family, who has always loved Muriel, buying it for her with the understand ing that she will marry him if the horse wins the race and recuperates her former husband's losses. Mostyn and his mates seek, by nefarious methods, to make Clipstone lose the race, but right wins over wrong and all ends happily with the reunion of the Duke and Muriel.

THE FALSE ROAD
Five-part drama; Paramount Artcraft
Directed by Fred Niblo
Published April 18.

OPINION: Seldom does Enid Bennett rise to the emotional height she attains in "The False Road," a story of crooks and a reformed pickpocket. Miss Bennett is one of the gang of crooks, and Lloyd Hughes, Thomas H. Ince's latest "discovery," is the youth who would 'go straight.'

The story is by C. Gardner Sullivan, and was written ostensively for a male lead, therefore Miss Bennett has to share stellar honors with Mr. Hughes, which she does very graciously.

It follows the general trend of most "crook" plays and in plot development offers little that is new. However, as to interiors, it is well staged and holds the interest by reason of the snappy direction and the splendid character drawings. The New England scenes were obviously "made-in-California" stuff, however, and the tissue-paper snowstorm would lead one to suspect that there is no white paper shortage in Hollywood.

Wade Boteler, as "Sapphire" Mike Wilson, the ring leader of the gang of thieves, gives a very satisfactory performance as does Lucile Young, as "Frisco" Minnie and Gorden Mullen as the chauffeur.

SYNOPSIS: Betty Palmer is a member of a gang of New York pickpockets and safe crackers. Roger Moran, her sweetheart, has completed a two years' term in Sing Sing for stealing and determines to give up the old life. Betty pleads with him not to desert her and her pals, but he leaves and settles down in White Harbor, Mass., as hired man for the town banker. Wilson, the leader of the gang, learns that the White Harbor bank contains $10,000 and sends Betty and "Frisco" Minnie to the town to steal it. Here Betty again meets Roger and he attempts to persuade her to reform. She refuses. The funds are stolen from the bank and Roger, sus pecting Wilson and his gang, goes to the thieves' headquarters, where he is attacked back of the depot station. Wilson is being overcome with remorse, steals the $10,000 from Wilson's vault, but is shot in the act. She substitutes another envelope and escapes. They go to White Harbor and restore the bank's money.

TREASURE ISLAND
Six-part drama; Paramount Artcraft
Directed by Maurice Tourneur.
Published April 4.

SYNOPSIS: Here we have Robert Louis Stevenson's immortal tale of buried treasure and brutal pirates in tabloid form. The filming of "Treasure Island" presented a monumental task. There was so much to Stevenson's story that could not be told in the short space of six reels. However Maurice Tourneur's version of the melodramatic narrative loses none of its enchantment or romance, and the acting is excellent. Aside from the lengthy subtitles which serve to introduce the story, and which we presume were necessary to give the Stevenson touch, the picture moves along from one incident to another and gains in power until the final scene.

"Treasure Island" is well worth seeing. It abounds in action and through-out, as does "Cape Fear," M. Tourneur was smart enough to realize that there was enough of the dramatic in the story's many situations without adding any theatricalisms and that the nearly it is entirely a film adaptation of the Stevenson novel. The picture is deserving of praise for its artistic handling though it may be judged as too gruesome for adolescents.

Enid Bennett and Lloyd Hughes in a dramatic scene from "The False Road" (Paramount Artcraft).
Five-part drama; National Picture Theatres
Directed by Howard Hickman
Published in April

OPINION: Roy Stewart, whose western characters in latter-day Triangle productions were widely favored, is a pleasant surprise in the garb of a railroad president. His acting ability, popularly associated with chaps and bronchos, stands out prominently in tweeds and broadcloth.

Kathryn Williams and Leatrice Joy, as the women whose love for the hero of the piece gives rise to the story action, are well cast and make most of their opportunities. The skillful direction of Howard Hickman keeps the story in the ascendant at all times and distributes evenly among the players the burden of entertainment.

The story details the steps by which a woman raises a man from obscurity to name in the sage business, keeping her love in the background, only to lose him entirely when he discovers that the wife he has married for business reasons has won his love. The sympathy shifts from one to the other of the women, keeping interest alive and curiously YY until the last scenes.

As the first production to be offered by the National Picture Theatres exhibitor interest is undoubtedly strong. Be it known, therefore, that few new companies have been introduced with more promising productions. If this is the standard that is to be maintained the marquees will be richer for the addition.

SYNOPSIS: Richard Emerson, rising railroad executive, forms a business alliance with Jack Burbagh, whose secretary, contrives to have him elected president of a prominent road. In doing so, however, he is forced to counsel him to a marriage with Mary Lee, of good family, though she loves him devotedly herself. Husband and wife agree that their marriage shall be in name by a change of business counsel, with Emerson advancing until he is looked upon as the railroad king. On the third anniversary of his marriage, he goes home to see his wife. His secretary follows and misunderstandings which have created gossip precipitate a crisis involving the latter and ends with the termination of the partnership between Eleanor and Emerson and the beginning of a new and genuine love between husband and wife.

Tom Mix in DESERT LOVE

Five-part drama; Fox
Directed by Jacques Jaccard
Published in May

OPINION: Again Tom Mix is presented in a picture that should strengthen his hold on popular appeal. His excellent display of horsemanship and his daredevil stunts alone make the production worthy of commendation. In "Desert Love" the star of western drama has been given an inviting story, the settings are fine and the cast is creditable. The action is quick and his offering is free from some unusual and gripping action. His dexterity and agility enable him to create a greater interest in his work than is attempted in other westerns. His ability as an actor also must be taken into consideration, for the histrionic aspect figures largely in his interpretation of the leading role.

The spontaneity and vigor of his activities in this subject are especially fascinating. His apprehension of an outlaw by leaping from a bank to the man's shoulders and throwing him from his horse, his swinging across a chasm on a rope so that he may rescue his sweetheart, and other stunts, are marks of Mix individuality.

The photography has been handled well, the long shots especially showing the efforts of adept hands. As in all of the star's pictures, the settings are typically western and at the same time elaborate.

Those in support of the star are Francelia Billington, Eva Novak, Lester Cuneo, Charles K. French and Jack Curtis. Each gives a portrayal that fits well into the production.

SYNOPSIS: Buck Marston, Jr., nicknamed "One-Quarter Apache," an orphan, is chosen sheriff and makes it his first duty to apprehend the outlaws who killed his father and mother. One of the last two of the cattle rustlers is captured, and while Buck is eating dinner at the ranch of Jack Remington, father of his sweetheart, Barbara, the Wolf is freed. Again Buck captures him and just before his death the Wolf tells Buck that the one who freed him was his son, the Whelp, the last of the outlaws and a foreman on the ranch. In the meantime, the Whelp has been forced to marry Barbara because of a misunderstanding. Buck starts in search of him and after overcoming many difficulties the Whelp is captured and Buck wins his wife.

Mary Miles Minter in NURSE MAJORIE

Six-part comedy-drama; Realart
Directed by William D. Taylor
Published in May

OPINION: Carefully presented and elaborately staged. Mary Miles Minter's next offering on the Realart program is in keeping with the standard established by her first two productions.

Miss Minter is ideally suited for the part of pretty Lady Majorie Killonan, who takes up nursing and falls in love with her first patient. Her chic uniform displays her beauty far more effectively than pretty gowns and sport costumes. It would not take a student of photoplays to guess that Nurse Marjorie will marry John Danbury, M. P., before the first thousand feet of film had run. But the obviousness of the ending interferes in no way with the enjoyment of the development of the pleasing love story.

The names of Clyde Fillmore, George Periolet, Frank Leigh, Vera Lewis, Arthur Hoyt, and Frankie Lee reflect the care with which the supporting cast was chosen. Frankie Lee, that talented youngster who has already made a place for himself, has an important role and adds much to the picture play by his interpretation of a patient madly in love with his nurse.

There is a great deal of quaint humor in the story, and it has been well utilized. The result is good entertainment.

SYNOPSIS: Lady Marjorie Killonan, who has devoted her time to nursing poor people,startles her parents by announcing she is to enter a hospital which caters to the well-to-do. At the hospital she insists that her identity be shielded.

Her first two patients are John Danbury, M. P., a champion of the labor party, and Dick, a little boy with a broken leg. Danbury has had an operation on his eyes and believes his nurse is a middle-aged woman, very homely. There is nothing to interfere with Dick's eyes, however, and he falls in love with Nurse Marjorie immediately.

When Danbury recovers his sight he falls in love with his nurse and becomes very jealous of her other patient, who he pictures as a man of his own age. Nurse Marjorie has fallen in love with Danbury, but torments him for some time.

Marjorie poses as the daughter of poor fisherfolk, and Danbury's parents attempt to buy her off. Danbury insists on marrying her, however, but when he learns of the deception, he leaves in a rage. Later he is wounded and Marjorie becomes his nurse again. This time her parents interpose objections. The objections are overcome and the two are united.
Zasu Pitts in BRIGHT SKIES
Five-part drama; Brentwood.
Directed by Henry Kolker.
Published in April.

OPINION: The absence of King Vidor from the Brentwood studio is not as noticeable in “Bright Skies” as it has been in several recent productions. Henry Kolker has embodied a good measure of heart interest in this story of two nameless orphans and it carries an appeal to the finer sensibilities.

Tom Gallery, a Chicago boy who has advanced rapidly in the film world, is given an unusual opportunity in playing opposite Zasu Pitts and has made the most of it.

Mrs. Pitts herself works hard to please and, although to some it may appear that she carries her coquettishness a bit too far her performance is calculated to arouse the sympathy of screen patrons.

A few pictures appeal to all classes of theatre audiences. “Bright Skies” has no railroad wreck, automobile chase or trap. The exhibitor knows the type of picture which his patrons want. This is a typical Brentwood production.

“Guns for a Girl” (Pathé, $5.90 grab bag), leaves her room in Cassidy’s rooming house following a row with Mrs. Cassidy and for want of something better, joins the army with an aged Italian hand-organ grinder. Together they wander from city to city, with Sally dancing.

At a little village, Sally meets Billy, a farm hand, who, like herself, is an orphan. Tomio dies and Sally finds a home with Billy in the village.

Benjamin Carnsworth, who through accident was separated from his wife just before she was to become a mother, returns in his memory and starts a search for her. Detectives bring the news that she is dead and he then seeks his child. Sally is found and placed in his home, surrounded by every comfort wealth can give.

Through seeing a photograph of Mrs. Carnsworth, she realizes that a mistake has been made and Billy, not herself, is the missing child. Billy’s proposal of marriage gives her the name of Carnsworth and a home.

J. Warren Kerrigan in
THE DREAM CHEATER
Five-part drama; Hodkinson.
Directed by Ernest C. Warde.
Published in April.

OPINION: Honore de Balzac’s “The Magic Skin,” a mystical story that has for its moral the folly of superstition and the sinfulness of immediate wishing, is adapted here by J. Warren Kerrigan and his own company.

The superstition aroused by a magic skin which comes into the possession of Brandon McShane, portrayed by Kerrigan. The pelt has the power to make one wish of its owner come true, but with the expression of each desire it grows smaller and the pelt is shortened.

Kerrigan has a capable cast supporting him in the adaptation. The players are Joseph Dowling, Sam Sotthen, Mr. and Mrs. Smith, Alice Wilson, Thomas H. Guise, Fritzi Brunette and Aggie Herring.

Tom’s contemporary, though seemingly impossible at times, affords rather interesting and temporary amusement. The star is himself in the action at all times.

SYNOPSIS: Brandon McShane, left almost destitute by the death of his father, comes into possession of a magic skin which has the power to make any wish come true. But the penalty with which the wish is obtained is so severe that the skin becomes smaller. Fearing that he will wish too often and bring his life to a sudden end, he lives the life of a recluse, after having obtained his uncle’s fortune. Pauline Mahon, played by Fritzi Brunette, finally convinces him that he has been the victim of superstition. He wishes the skin out of his life and it disappears and he and Pauline live happily.

Tom Moore in DUDS
Five-part drama; Goldwyn.
Directed by Thomas R. Mills.
Published in April.

OPINION: A very inviting picture, with mystery and romance centered in the theme, constitutes Tom Moore’s current starrig vehicle. The production has been done in Goldwyn style, excellent photography, good settings and a capable cast.

Moore is interesting in his portrayal of a discharged captain of the army whose experience on the battlefield has made him restless and a seeker of excitement. His humorous characterizations throughout the piece are always good for a laugh.

Lending additional enjoyment to the production are the clever written subtitles. They are always to the point and besides carrying a sense of humor, connect up satisfactorily the various scenes of action.

Very realistic settings have been chosen as backgrounds for the exteriors and interiors. Detail has been attended to, with the direction showing the results of honest effort. Work of the cast is commendatory, Naomi Childers, Edwin Sterens, Christine Mayo, Lionel Belmore, Edwin Wallack, Wilson Hummell, H. Milton Ross, Betty Lindley, Florence DeShon and Jack Richardson deserve mention for their good work.

Exhibitors will find this interesting diversion for their patrons.

SYNOPSIS: Captain Plunkett, dissatisfied with the thought of returning to an office desk, seeks excitement. He is assigned to the work of locating a band of smugglers by Karakoff, a jewel expert, and especially to locate a famous diamond. Before reporting for his job, Karakoff, as a reminiscence picture of superstition, meets with one setback after another, including finding the smugglers and their contraband. Eventually he finds the jewel he seeks. In this exploit, he still has a number of tricksters to cope with. A reward for his services he wins Olga and several thousand dollars.

Sylvia Bremer and Robert Gordon in THE BLOOD BARRIER
Six-part drama; Pathe.
Directed by J. Stuart Blackton.
Published in April.

OPINION: J. Stuart Blackton has made a very intelligent and a decidedly interesting picture from Cyrus Townsend Brady’s book. Mr. Blackton is to be praised, not only for his personal endeavors, but also for the work of the performers that assist him.

Translation into screen form of Brady’s complicated story of romance and the secret service was no easy task. The picture resulting is another proof that literary works can be visualized satisfactorily in pictures that retain the personal and plot developments created by the author.

Sylvia Bremer, Robert Gordon, William Dunn, Louis Dean and Margaret Barry give earnest portrayals of the more prominent characters. Miss Bremer as the wife of an insanely jealous husband, Gordon as her lover and protector and Dunn as the hus-band, are convincing in their roles. It is a pleasure to note their successful efforts in their respective roles. Other commendable players are Eddy Dunn and Gus Alexander.

The efforts of foreign agents to recover valuable dye formulas and its effect on the romantic element of the story form the complications that are unravelled. It is an after-the-war tale told in the inimitable style of its author. Mr. Blackton is to be praised for his choice of locations. The camera work is excellent. Exhibitors should find this picture a worth while investment.

SYNOPSIS: Endi Solari, who has harmless meetings with Major Robert Trevor, possessor of dye formulas sought by a foreign government, is assured by her madly jealous husband, an expert in criminology. Solari is assigned by the district attorney to guard Major, but he threatens to kill the latter after putting the foreign agents to rout. But instead he is shot and in his dying moments he implicates the Major, who is arrested. The difficulty encountered by the major and Endi with their happiness consists with the re-education of the Major, and the apprehension of the foreign agents brings a happy ending.

First Lifegraph Comedy
Starring Jones Complete
The first two-part society comedy featuring J. Parks Jones has been completed by American Lifegraph Company. It is a sequel to its “Jones’ Life,” studio. Eugenia Guilbert and Clare Morris appear in the leading feminine roles.

Next series of these subjects will be made by Lifegraph, and work already has started on the second. Bob Gray is directing and Eve Sturtevant is writing the scenarios. The pictures will be known as Lifegraph-Keefe plays.
Volplaning Around N'Yawk

With J. B.

Well, all in all the Selznick convention was a great success and much good was accomplished.

The selling forces of the house of Selznick were brought together in a Chinese picture, "Contentment," which was shown to them during the convention. The picture was directed by Wray Physioc, who has been directing the Kaufman Editorials. "Contentment" was referred to as a little gem and Physioc was spoken of as "a find."

"Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde" played pranks with the box office records at the Rivoli and Rialto. Good pictures herald themselves more eloquently than six sheets.

Arthur J. Lang of the Nicholas Power Company has returned to his desk after a severe and prolonged illness. We congratulate Arthur on his "come back."

Bert Adler has joined the editorial ranks and this month will be responsible for the well-being of the A. M. P. A. Bulletin. More power to you, Bert!

Louis Weisrock, who is so well known in Park Row and the newspaper fraternity, has been honored by his fellow workers. Rogers Green of Hollywood is the queen that has sworn to obey Louis for the rest of her natural life. Louis is a fine scout and the couple have my blessing.

Otto Henry Harris has tendered his resignation to the Dramatic Mirror and will leave for Los Angeles May 1. Mr. Harris will act as West Coast representative of an Eastern theatrical paper.

Harry Layton, of the Layton Film Company, Boston, was a visitor in the city for the past ten days. Mr. Layton has been purchasing studio and laboratory equipment.

At the banquet of the Select and Republic sales managers at the Astor hotel Thursday night, April 8, Sam Morris was presented with a set of dress studs and links by the sales managers. Charles Rogers, sales manager, was presented with a diamond and platinum stick pin.

The Radio Soul Films, Inc., recently opened a film exchange in the Leavitt building.

Mayor Sadler and members of the Town Council of Bloomfield, N. J., have under consideration a plan to take over the management of a motion picture theatre in the town and give performances at a reasonable fee. Their action is the result of the recent purchase by a corporation of the town of all the houses there. One of these, at which the admission prices were lower than at the other, is now dark four nights a week.

How does the above contrast with Harrison, N. J., a little church cemetery village where the people would not stand for motion pictures under any guise whether they were entertaining, educational or religious. It is rumored, however, that there may be a change for the better in Harrison, N. J., within the next twenty years. The town is progressive, but believes in making haste slowly.

The announcement recently made by a distributing company that they contemplated giving away fans to the ladies at the picture houses this summer caused "Typhoon Jim" Milligan to laugh loud and long. As Jim says, "Five thousand hand fan power doesn't equal one zephyr."

Douglas Rothacker has been in town for the past ten days. Mr. Rothacker is stopping at the Claridge.

The first of a series of Sawyer and Lubin pictures is under way. The title of the initial feature will soon be announced.

Paul Mooney has at last succeeded in leasing a villa for the summer at Far Rockaway. For weeks Paul has been house-hunting and had just about given the quest up as a bad job when by a lucky or unlucky chance he met a real estate agent who had charge of the only unoccupied house in Far Rockaway. The agent casually remarked that he had been trying to rent the villa for the past forty years, but owing to the fact that the place was haunted he had "been outa luck." "The place ought to rent for five thousand for the season, but I will rent her for two thousand and if any guy stays the season through I will give him a R. R. auto in the fall as a bonus." Paul instantly remembered that nothing serious happened to the fellow who won the wager which the First National offered for sleeping in a graveyard alone and chained to a tombstone, so "The Greatest Question" in Paul's mind is whether the other members of the family will help him win the Royal Roadster.

Blank Purchases Site

MARSHALLTOWN, IA. - A. H. Blank of Des Moines has purchased a site in Main street on which he will erect a six-story building, the ground floor to be devoted to a motion picture theatre.

TO ADVERTISE HARVARD IN FIVE-REEL FEATURE

The Associated Harvard Clubs convenes in Washington, D. C., April 30. The committee considering the motion picture form of advertising for the university is enthusiastic over the prospects. Eight film companies want the privilege of introducing Harvard to picture fans. One has been tentatively decided on, because it has Harvard men on the payroll. Several story synopses are being written, among them one by Richard Washburn Child, the novelist, and a Harvard man.

The chosen firm has offered to expend $50,000 to $80,000 on a five or six-reel dramatic film with all the fixings in exchange for the interest of the university and distribution privileges.

In case Harvard isn't interested in the five-reel feature the concern offers to produce a strictly historic film of one or two reels on a cash basis for approximately $6,000 or $8,000.

The committee intends to set the highest standard not only in story but also as regards the scenario, actors and setting.

In the dramatic film the interest would be principally in the story, but it is felt that a stronger impression of Harvard life can be made and more human interest aroused if the emphasis is laid upon the life and experience of a student there rather than upon the facts and figures of an historical film.

The committee, of which George Manierre, '06, is chairman, closes its report in favor of the Harvard feature, declaring:

"The committee wishes to state that it is more than ever impressed by the possibilities of the moving picture if well done and is convinced that in no better way can Harvard be made a reality, in no better way be brought home to the boy in remote parts as a possibility for him than by thus visualizing the actual experience."

Gentlemen:—

The four (4) Powers Cameragraphs we have in our projection room are as far as practical giving perfect satisfaction.

The service is hard and continuous and after three years of use, we have yet to pay our first repair bill.

Should we be in the market for any additional machines I do not believe there would be any question but that you would get the business.

Yours very truly,

George W. Jeffries.

SUPERINTENDENT OF THE LOS ANGELES STUDIO.

American

Some Liar, with William Russell—Russell always pleases, and this is one of his best.—Gustine & Roush, Princess theatre, Lewistown, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Six Feet Four, with William Russell.—This is a dandy. Full of action. If your people like Westerns this one will go over big.—C. H. Powers, Auditorium theatre, Dunsμir, Cal.—General patronage.

Six Feet Four, with William Russell.—Good if you don’t mind a little bit of rough work.—Clean.—H. Pac, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

Trixie From Broadway, with Marga-rita Fisher.—This one was not as good as the average Fisher picture. Most people pleased.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Six Feet Four, with William Russell.—When I bought this picture I thought I was booking something big and advertised the same way. Watch your step on this.—Chas. Daher, Bijou theatre, Abingdon, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

First National

The Greatest Question, a D. W. Griffith production.—A very good picture from start to finish. Patrons well pleased.—Fred Paulick, Paulick theatre, Muscoda, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Nor- ma Talmadge.—This is a fine picture. Just a nice picture; and it is long enough. Some fine acting and good story. Lots of comments on it. Advertise it as a special.—W. W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

Heart of the Hills, with Mary Pick-ford.—Best she has made. Don’t be afraid to book it.—Wm. Tongate, Star theatre, Carlisle, Ind.—General patronage.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—Not much of a story and drew only fair, but seemed to please.—C. F. Hancock, Lyric theatre, Sturat, Fla.—Small town patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pick-ford.—A class A-1 picture with us. Went over big. Full house.—Harlan Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Harlan, Mo.—General patronage.

“Tarkas & His Kingdom”—with Anita Stewart—This is some picture. Book it and boost it and you’ll make money on it. It’s all the press says it is.—W. W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

The Temperamental Wife, with Con-stance Talmadge.—This star is a draw-ing card and her work is good in a class of pictures that she will star.—A. L. Force, Happy Hour theatre, Two Harbors, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Heart of the Hills, with Mary Pick-ford.—Pleased full houses. Better than Daddy Long Legs and the Hoodlum.—Gustine & Roush, Princess theatre, Lewistown, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Turning Point, with Katherine MacDonald.—Pleasing entertainment, but disappointing to the fan who expects more action. Scenes and photography excellent. Good business.—W. G. Mitchell, Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, Mich.—General patronage.

Tarzan of the Apes, with Elmo Lincoln.—Very good production in every respect, and good drawing card to capacity business.—Charles Guizziatti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Nor-ma Talmadge.—A pleasing picture in which Norma Talmadge does good work, but as a whole not up to her later form subjects.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Romance of Tarzan, with Elmo Lincoln.—Advertised big and showed to big effect. Big picture and filled every-body.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Even as Eve, with a special cast.—Good story, cast and direction. But a poor picture except for a main street house where a star is not advertised. Hang up Robert W. Chambers’ name.—W. G. Mitchell, Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, Mich.—General patronage.

Her Kingdom of Dreams, with Anita stewart.—Fine production. Pleased everybody.—Parnele theatre, Platts- mouth, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

Heart Strings, with William Farnum.—100 per cent with me.—S. C. Hayman, Lyda theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Transient patronage.

Her Elephant Man, with Shirley Mason.—One of the best Fox pictures of the season. Star fairly new here, but with pictures like this should soon become a “headliner.” First-class picture.—Ernest Stelling, Grand theatre, Wash- ington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Cyclone, with Tom Mix.—A sure fire hit. Tom Mix has set a standard that has never been equaled.—C. F. Han-cock, Lyric theatre, Stuart, Fla.—Small town patronage.

The Lone Star Ranger, with William Farnum.—I think this the best Farnum picture, and all of Zane Grey’s stories take well with my patrons, and almost everybody liked this one. Business very

“E. K. Lincoln

In a scene from “The Inner Voice,” the American Cinema Corporation production.

Heart of the Hills, with Mary Pick-ford.—Without a doubt the best picture Mary Pickford ever made, bar none. Had the house rocking with laughter.—C. F. Hancock, Lyric theatre, Stuart, Fla.—Small town patronage.

Choosing a Wife, with a special cast.—Played to a packed house, but picture is slow and is hardly up to the stand ard set by other First Nationals. Acting good. Several compliments, few kicks.—Ernest Stelling, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

In Wrong, with Jack Pickford.—This is a better than Bill Apperson’s Boy or Burglar by Proxy, but he doesn’t draw very good for me. Am glad its the last one I have booked.—W. W. Waltz, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Tal-madg.—Not as good as the two previous pictures, but entertaining at that. She is always pleasing.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kan.—General patronage.

“The Coming of the Law,” with Tom Mix.—This is Tom Mix’s best. He sure had them standing up. If your people want outdoor plays and western stuff this will sure all. Why, even the most refined ladies admitted it to be a very good show! I advertised it and turn your money.—John Allsop, Columbia Hall, Grace, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.
Flames of the Flesh, with Gladys Brockwell.—A vampire picture. Well enough done, but this type of play does not get over with my audiences.—J. A. Crouse, Ideal theatre, Iowa Park, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Tin Pan Alley, with Albert Ray and Elmar Fair.—Good. Not a special, but good.—E. M. Roush, Ideal theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Transient patronage.

Checkers, with a special cast.—Very good. Broke the house records. Best picture I had this season. Book it now and you will not regret it.—P. C. Azzara, Happy Hour theatre, Cresson, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lincoln Highwayman, with William Russell.—Here's one you cannot afford to pass by. Holds interest to the last foot.—C. F. Hancock, Lyric theatre, Stuart, Fla.—Small town patronage.

Heart Strings, with William Farum.—A very good production, but my patrons do not like him in this class of pictures.—A. J. Twieggar, Lyric theatre, Goldfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

The Lincoln Highwayman, with William Farum;—Excellent picture. Star at his best. Business good to advanced prices.—G. W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

The Last of the Duanes, with William Farum.—Very good. One of the best pictures ever used. Showed two nights to capacity.—Simmons & Collins, Idle Hour theatre, Wellsville, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Dare Devil, with Tom Mix.—Good. Pleased everybody and made me money. Book it.—H. C. Howell, Goldwyn theatre, Tex.-M.

The Jungle Trail, with William Farum.—A good picture and pleased the Western fans almost as much as if it had been Harold Daspit at Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sacred Silence, with William Russell.—Good picture and fine business. Book this one.—P. C. Azzara, Happy Hour theatre, Cresson, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Coming of the Law, with Tom Mix.—Picked the house on a rainy night, and satisfied all.—Gustine & Roush, Princess theatre, Lewistown, Ila.—Neighborhood patronage.

Cheating Herself, with Peggy Hyland.—A nice little comedy-drama that will please those who like to be amused.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Goldwyn

Pinto, with Mabel Normand.—It's a knockout. Best Normand picture Goldwyn has produced. Go the limit on advertising.—A. J. Twieggar, Lyric theatre, Goldfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

Toby's Bow, with Tom Moore.—Liked very much, and business fine. Tom Moore is in class A in this town.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Laughing Bill Hyde, with Will Rogers.—My first picture of this star, but he went over big. It was a stormy night, but drew a good house. You can't make a mistake on this one.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—Did not take as well as I expected according to advertising that was posted.—H. C. Howell, Goldwyn theatre, Earlinton, Ky.

The Crimson Gardenia, with Owen Moore.—Pleased every one, and patrons told me how well they liked it.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh, Johnny, with Louis Bennison.—Here is a humdinger. One of the best I have run for some time. Just enough Western to make it spicy. Plenty of thrill. My crowd went wild over it. My first picture of this star.—Jno. I. Saunders, Cheney theatre, Cheney, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Phantom Honeymoon, with Mae Marsh.—Nothing to brag about. Drew fairly well.—A. E. Luedke, Columbia theatre, Kenosha, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Stronger Vox, with Geraldine Farrar.—Better than The Hell Cat, but not as good as any of her old pictures. Hope her other Goldwyn's are better.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Metro

Fair and Warmer, with Mae Allison.—Biggest business getter of Metro's to date. Exhibitor should impress strongly on patrons to see this from the start.—A. LaForce, Happy Hour theatre, Two Harbors, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Brat, with Nazimova.—This is one of the really big pictures on the market. Book it by all means. She is sure to please.—Guy W. Johnson, Mystie theatre, Marmarth, N. D.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—You will find this picture will please 90 per cent of your patrons. I think it should have a happy ending, and so did most of my patrons. Seven reels. Business good.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Went over great. People talking about it yet. Critics that give this picture other than class A don't know.—Kenro & Meyers, Auditorium theatre, Slater, Mo.

The Brat, with Nazimova.—A good picture, but below Nazimova's standard.
Gustie & Rough, Princess theatre, Lewistown, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—Not liked nearly as well as one would expect from a book that has brought considerable trade praise. Did not draw as much as the public expected. Sixty per cent pictures.—John Hainer, Marion.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Uplifters, with May Allison.—Metro's poorest picture so far.—A. E. Luedke, Columbia, Kenosha, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Inspiration, with May Allison. Picture fair, but not what we have had from Allison.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

Eye for Eye, with Nazimova.—Nazimova is a wonderful actress. In this picture the dance alone is worth the price of admission.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Almost Married, with May Allison.—One of the best May Allison pictures we have ever seen. It is a good comedy-drama that will please all. Very good but not outstanding.—Hardin, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Please Get Married, with Viola Dana.—Very suggestive. If you have many Church people among your patrons, do not show it.—A. A. Spradling, Opera House, Merna, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Uplifters, with May Allison.—We have our first picture to get with this star that does not make good. Good business, though weather unfavorable.—Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

The Parisian Tigress, with Viola Dana.—Fine picture. Many expected something rough on account of title.—Eureka theatre, Afton, Neb.

In for Thirty Days, with May Allin.—Play it. It's great.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia, Neb.

Blackie's Redemption, with Bert Lytell.—A picture that pleased mostly everyone. Made a big hit. Picture was very good.—Royal theatre, Sabetha, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lion's Den, with Bert Lytell.—Good program picture. Full satisfaction.—J. L. Kaslak, Swan theatre, Stanton, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Testing of Mildred Vane, with May Allison.—Just fair, not up to this star's average.—Harold Daspit, Atherston theatre, Kentwood, La.—Mixed patronage.

Paramount Arctcraft

Male and Female, a Cecil B. DeMille production.—An elaborate production that pleased at advanced prices. Played on percentage.—Bert Norton, Kozy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Wanted a Husband, with Billie Burke.—Poor picture. Star popular, but such pictures as this are doomed much toward losing it for her.—Moore & Moss, Hippodrome theatre, Plymouth, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Double Speed, with Wallace Reid.—Another entertaining auto story which pleased the fans. Reid always does here.—W. G. Mitchell, Majestic Gardens, Kalamazoo, Mich.—General patronage.

Bill Henry, with Charles Ray.—Ray is good. This average, Ray is failing for me. Too much the same movements for my patrons.—H. Pace, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

The Roaring Road, with Wallace Reid.—Good picture. Reid always draws. He is well supported in this one by Ann Little and Theo. Roberts.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stamford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Don't Change Your Husband, Cecil B. DeMille production.—A real treat for fans. It's great. Book it and please the crowds.—Guy W. Johnson, Mystic theatre, Marmarth, N. D.—General patronage.

The Miracle of Love, with a special cast.—A three-reeler dragged out into seven. Keep away from this.—A. J. Twilegar, Lyric theatre, Goldfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

A Nine o'Clock Town, with Charles Ray.—Ray is sure fine. An honest to goodness comedy. Book the Ray pictures. He sure puts it over. A good treat to your patrons.—J. W. Baird, Crystal theatre, Patronsburg, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Thou Gavest Me, with Katherine MacDonald.—Some few thought it too broad, but it gave satisfaction generally and is really very, very good.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Riddle Gawne, with William S. Hart.—Best Hart picture we have run. Will please all Western fans.—G. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lyndon, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Wagon Tracks, with William S. Hart.—Everyone liked this, especially the Hart fans. Some good Indian scenes. Had a packed house, as usual, when I play Hart.—W. W. Wolfe, Star theatre, Lake City, Ia.—General patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.—The Sunday closing crowd liked this picture, but the patrons disliking it. The picture ran my Sunday business. It's six weeks since I played it and I haven't had a profitable Sunday since.—A. J. Twilegar, Lyric theatre, Goldfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.—Did not get cost of putting it on. The picture is great.—C. Hogan, Hogan's theatre, Mounds City, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hawthorne of the U. S. A., with Wallace Reid.—Good picture, but have seen Reid in much better. Good drawing card.—Moore & Moss, Hippodrome theatre, Plymouth, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Branding Broadway, with William S. Hart.—This is fine. The best Hart we have had. Did a fine business.—C. E. Belder, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hostage, with Wallace Reid.—Fair picture. Photography good.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedar Vale, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lady of Red Butte, with Dorothy Dalton.—A good star wasted on a remarkably poor story. I had a good house, but for Dorothy always draws, and there was a lot of disappointed folks.

ALICE BRADY IN "SINNERS"

A scene from the star's latest Realart production which is said to be the most dramatic of her career on the screen.
CHARMING? YES. YES!

BILLY RHODES
Never drinks anything stronger than ten. A siren has no secrets for her. She is being starred in "Nobody's Girl." a National Films Corporation production.

—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Puppy Love, with Lila Lee.—Very fine picture. Play it big and you can't lose.—C. E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

23½ Hours Leave, with Douglas MacLean and Doris May.—Fine picture. Played to big business. Patrons well pleased.—Moore & Moss, Hippodrome theatre, Plymouth, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Make Believe Wife, with Billie Burke.—Very good comedy. Result, a pleased audience.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Rich Man, Poor Man, with Marguerite Clark.—This is a good picture of its kind, but most of my patrons don't care for this sort of story.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kan.—Small town patronage.

For Better, for Worse, a Cecil B. DeMille production.—Extra good. Best we have had for some time. Everyone pleased. Don't be afraid to book Paramounts.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sandy, with Jack Pickford.—A plump director. Good from every angle.—Bill Leonard, Mystic theatre, Cedar Vale, Kan.—Neighborhood patronage.

Louisiana, with Vivian Martin.—Fine picture. Clean and cleverly acted. Star is going better all the time.—W. P. Ferguson, Portola theatre, Santa Barbara, Calif.—General patronage.

The Parisian Bride, with Elsie Ferguson.—Good picture. Went big with Arbuckle comedy.—C. E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Trouble Buster, with Vivian Martin.—A good picture with lots of human appeal.—F. A. Flader, Rigney theatre, Albany, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sheriff's Son, with Charles Ray.—Good picture, but it didn't please or draw as well as other Ray pictures.—W. O. Jensen, Lathrop theatre, Omaha, Nebr.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fuss And Feathers, with Enid Bennett.—Very good.—Chas. Khoda, Palace theatre, Royalton, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Petitegrew's Girl, with Ethel Clayton.—This is a really good picture. Many favorable comments. Star does not draw for me. Personally I like her very much and she is good to look at.—A. J. Twilegar, Lyric theatre, Goldsfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

Sporting Life, with a special cast.—Seven free of excellent entertainment. Sporting Life is worthy of the name special.—J. B. Endert, Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Run Away Romany, with Marion Davies.—Fine picture. Will please all lovers of good drama.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Lottery Man, with Wallace Reid.—Reid's best picture and one of the best we ever ran.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Bushe, with Charles Ray.—A picture that will go over big with baseball fans and young kids too. Those who do not care about baseball for there is a lot of good comedy in it.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—General patronage.

In Mizzoura, with Robert Warwick.—Good picture, but poor cast. Not satisfying.—Business with F. Krah, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

I'll Get Him Yet, with Dorothy Gish.—A good clean picture. Many funny situations.—Pfeiffer Bros., Crescent theatre, Audubon, Ida.

The Silver King, with William Faverham.—This is a dandy picture. Play it big and you will make money.—Donora, Pa.—Played with a Drew comedy. Did fine.—Clinton E. Belden, Midway theatre, Mogollon, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Mizzoura, with Robert Warwick.—Wen good as a Saturday attraction although not so good as the sheriff was the weakest of the whole cast.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—General patronage.

Realart
Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—Fine. A true-to-life offering and a good one. This is the class of stuff the patrons want.—A. LaForce, Happy Hour theatre, Two Harbors, Minn.—Small town patronage.

Judy of Rogue's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—This is a fine picture. It was the star's first picture here, but it drew well and pleased everyone. You won't lose on this kind.—Geo. Owens, Opera House, Stanford, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sentry of Fortune, with a special cast.—Not enjoyed by ladies—too much fighting. Very poor drawing card for me.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Judy of Rogue's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Picture very good. Star well liked by children and women. Did not draw as well as Anne of Green Gables. Weather very windy and cold.—A. J. Twilegar, Lyric theatre, Goldsfield, Nev.—Mining camp patronage.

The Stolen Kiss, with Constance Biney.—Pleasing offering. Not a great puller, but satisfactory.—A. LaForce, Happy Hour theatre, Two Harbors, Minn.—Small town patronage.

The Stolen Kiss, with Constance Biney.—A cute picture with a cute star. Pleased at least 90 per cent, although business was light, due to heavy rain and Lunt.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Stolen Kiss, with Constance Biney.—Drew big business the first day. Poorly the second. Liked by 90 per cent of patrons. Binnie will run a close race to that other Constance.—John Hafner, Princess theatre, Donora, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Republic
The Man Hunt, with Ethel Clayton.—This picture is full of action and thrills. I consider it better than many specials.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, N. M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Bluffer, with June Elvidge.—Very good program picture that pleased the majority. Business only fair on account of stormy weather.—Charles Guizzetti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The American Way, with a special cast.—Picture good and will please 50 per cent.—G. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lyndon, Kan.—Small town patronage.

LOUISE GLAUM
Has to do her own washing in her new J. Parker Reed, Jr. picture and James Kirkwood, who plays opposite her, looks on complacently.
The Roughneck, with Montagu Love. —This is a lumber camp picture with plenty of action. Will please mostly all.

S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Zero Hour, with June Elvidge.—Fairly good program picture, and pleased mildly well. Business fair in spite of cold weather.—Charles Guizzetti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

By Hook or Crook, with Carlyle Blackwell.—Gave very general satisfaction. I consider it a little above the average.—S. B. Brock, Electric theatre, Hagerman, M.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman of Lies, with June Elvidge.—Not much. My poorest night is when I show this star.—Rae Peacock, Myso theatre, Staffor, Kan.

Love in a Hurry, with Carlyle Blackwell.—There is not much to this picture and story only about. Please no. 30 per cent. Business fair.—C. Guizzetti, Opera House, Gardner, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Tong Man, with Susse Haya-kawa.—Good picture. Lots of action, making it one of Jap's best.—Moore & Moss, Hippodrome theatre, Plymouth, Pa.—Neighborhood patronage.

What Every Woman Wants, with Grace Darmond.—Pleased a good crowd. —H. A. Wishard, Vicksburg theatre, Bloomfield, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Purchase Price, with Bessie Bar- riae in fine program picture. Went over big. Bessie is a good drawer with me.—G. M. LeMonnier, Majestic theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Diana of the Green Van, with Alma Rubens.—Good.—S. C. Hogan, Palace theatre, Mounds City, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

Select

Experimental Marriage, with Con- stance Talmadge.—Constance Talmadge is always good.—Bert Norton, Kozy the- atre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Spring Brings Renewed Activity in Theatre Construction Over Country

Loew Interests Plan Expansion of Business From Coast to Coast—Companies Incorporated to Operate and Build Playhouses

Theatre building on a large scale is indicated with the arrival of the spring months. Encouraging reports from every part of the country picture intensified activities for expansion in the exhibitorial field of motion pictures.

Particularly active in the erection of new theatres is Loew, Inc. A ninety-nine year lease has just been taken on property in Denver by Ackerman & Harris, western representatives of Loew, with a gross rental reported at $2,000,000. At the expiration of the present lease on the site, a theatre will be erected at an approximate cost of $500,000.

Loew Active in West

Loew's new Denver theatre will be modern in every respect and will have a seating capacity of 2,500. The site has a frontage of 125 feet on Curtis street.

The activities of Loew on the Pacific Coast and in the Middle West will represent a total expenditure of $6,000,000, it is announced by the corporation's officials.

One of the larger houses to be erected by Loew interests will be at Buffalo, N. Y. Announcement has been made by Albert Jones, lawyer, that construction work on the Loew's picture theatre and vaudeville house will be started there about May 1, by Loew Buffalo Theatres, Inc.

Buildings Are Razed

The Buffalo acquisition to Loew will seat 3,000 persons, with the location of the playhouse at Main, Mohawk, and Washington streets. Buildings on Washington street now are being dismantled so that the ground may be broken for the new building.

On the Coast, Loew interests have announced that four new theatres will be built. An expenditure of $1,500,000 will be made on a Los Angeles house, $1,000,000 on a San Francisco theatre, and in Sacramento and Stockton houses will be planned.

Marcus Loew has announced that he is now making plans for the erection of a picture theatre in Knoxville, Tenn. The Vendome in Nashville, Tenn., was opened the latter part of March by Loew. Mr. Loew was in attendance at the initial performance, as were several screen stars. An elaborate program was given.

K. C. Capital in West

Kansas City capital probably will be invested in a motion picture theatre in Los Angeles. W. B. Scoville, while on the Coast recently, announced that he was negotiating for a site on which to construct a cinema house. He said that he expected soon to announce that an agreement on the price of property had been reached.

Work has begun on the new Richmond T & D theatre at Richmond, Cal. The building, which will cost $700,000, will be of steel construction with brick panels and will seat 1,620 persons.

Incorporation of Granada and Imperial Motion Picture Theatres of San Francisco is announced. Granada Theatre is capitalized at $1,000,000, and the Imperial at $500,000. Construction of the Granada theatre is to begin soon. The directors of both organizations are V. B. Clement, Isadore M. Golden, S. F. Walker, M. Christian and J. A. Patchell.

Aids Families to Move

Marcus Loew aided twenty families living in houses at Broadway and Mission street to find homes and also paid their moving expenses so that the property might be vacated for the erection of a motion picture theatre. Forty more families will have to leave by May 1.

Winchester Amusement Company has incorporated at Lexington, Ky., for the purpose of operating theatres. Capitalization was fixed at $25,000. Incorporators are Sam D. Lee and John B. Elliott of Lexington and Charles J. Freece of Winchester, Ky.

John Van der Vaart of Sheboygan, Wis., has purchased property on which he will erect a motion picture theatre which will seat from 1,500 to 2,500 persons. The site has a frontage of 50 feet on North Eighth street and a depth of 240 feet.

Metro Names Myers As New Director of Stages

Amos Myers has been appointed director of stages at the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal., to succeed Joseph Strauss, who is leaving the West Coast for New York to assume that executive position at the Sixty-first street studios, where Maxwell Karger will make special pictures.

Mr. Myers has been a member of the Metro technical department for nearly a year. He directed art work on "Please Get Married," starring Viola Dana, "Should a Woman Tell?" with Alice Lake and "Old Lady 31," with Emma Dunn.

Opened April 1

MINNEAPOLIS, MINN.—The Calhoun theatre, on Hampton St., near Hennepin Ave., was opened April 1, under the management of Hugh Andrews, at present manager of the New Lagoon and New Lyndale theatres.
With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

RAUL WALSH, formerly with Fox, is on his west production, having signed with Mayflower for a picture in which Miriam Cooper, his wife, will appear in the lead. **

ALEXANDER CUSCADEN, formerly Sunday editor of the Los Angeles Examiner, has been appointed manager of the California theatre, succeeding Monte Rice, who has become exploitator for Paramount Artcraft at San Francisco. **

JAMES KIRKWOOD, formerly a director of note, will take the leading masculine role opposite Louise Glau in her next production for J. Parker Read, Jr., at the Thomas H. Ince studios. **

MAURICE TOURNEUR has settled any speculation that he might remove to the East shortly by purchasing a lot this week with plans for the erection of a home to settle down in. **

King Vidor was called in from location at Stockton, Calif., where he has been filming snow scenes for his next production, "The Jackpot," which he hopes to witness the premiere of his first independent production, "The Family Honor," at the Los Angeles Kinema. **

IRVING LESER, brother and eastern representative of Sol Leser, arrived at the general managers' offices from New York this week for an extended conference in regard to the distribution and exploitation of the new Annette Kellerman production Sol Leser is making, and "One Man in a Million," George Beban's latest picture, which is to be released under the Leser standard. **

Benny Leonard, world's lightweight boxing champion, says there are more reasons than one why he likes being a motion picture actor. The king-pin of the 133-pound boxers, now starring in "The Evil Eye," a fifteen-episode serial, points out the fact that he came west in a special car with a retinue of sixteen actors and others as an argument in favor of pictures. Billy Gibson, manager of the champion, was responsible for the securing of the special car.

HARRY KOLNER has completed the filming of "The Heart of Twenty" at Brentwood and is now preparing for the commencement of the production of "The Little Widow," an original comedy-drama with scenario by Sada Cowan and featuring Zasu Pitts. **

ETHEL CLAYTON is rounding out the Paramount Artcraft picture, "All in a Night," assisted by Edith Kennedy from Samuel Merwin's story, and directed by Paul Powell. **

WILLIAM E. MILLER is waiting for the arrival of Thomas Meighan from New York so that he can begin active work on "Conrad in Quest of His Youth," Leonard Merbeck's story, scenarioized by Olga Prinziou. Some of the preliminary scenes are being made but the principal part of the production will begin when the talented Mr. Meighan arrives to play the title role. **

ALLEN WATT, who joined the Christie film forces as an assistant director after attaining a captaincy in the army in France, is now a full-pledged director of comedies. He is at present wielding the megaphone in front of Dorothy Devoe. He has also directed Molly Malone, Teddy Sampson, Harry Depp and Ray Gallagher in Christie-made comedies. **

FAY TINCHER, after a vacation of three months from screen work, has started work in one of Christie's special comedies entitled "Behind the Bluff." The story is by Maie B. Havy. The cast which is being directed by Bill Beaudine are Fay Tinker, Charlotte Merriam, Eddie Barry and Jimmie Harrison. **

Admirers of Mack Sennett comedies will rejoice to know that Charlie Murray, Mack Sennett's favorite Celtic comedian, will remain with the Sennett organization in spite of a multitude of rumors to the contrary. **

MAURICE TOURNEUR has purchased the photoplay rights to F. Hopkinson Smith's novel, "Caleb West, Master Driver," and is now selecting a cast of players to interpret the story for the screen. The scenario has been written by Jack Gilbert, who will also assist Mr. Tourneur in the direction of the production. The filming is expected to start next week. **

HEBDA NOVA and PAUL HURST, her director-husband, will soon start on the first of a series of pictures to be known as the Hurst-Nova Pictures. Mlle. Nova will have the stellar roles and Mr. Hurst will direct. **

JOSEPH DOWLING, one of the most eminent of character actors on the screen, who leaped into fame in the title role in "The Miracle Man," has been secured by Al Christie to take a prominent role in the Robertson-Cole production of "A Smart Aleck," the story by Irvin Cobb that is now in production at the Christie studio in Los Angeles. **

EUGENE O'BRIEN, under the direction of Bob Ellis, is now in the third week of the current production to be known as "The Fugitree," which he is making under the management of Harry Rapf, general manager of the Selznick West Coast studios. The story was written by John Lynch and the scenario by Ella Stuart Carson. **

A special dam constructed to hold back a large quantity of water has been erected at a point near Los Angeles for the crucial scene in Wallace Reid's new Paramount Artcraft picture, "What's Your Hurry?" adapted by Byron Morgan from his own Saturday Evening Post story, "The Hippopotamus Parade," and directed by Sam Wood. **

HARRY CAREY will host to his entire company, numbering about two score people, for a week or ten days at his ranch in the San Francisco Canyon, Calif. A number of ranch scenes in his current production, "Crossed Claims," will be filmed there and the star has invited his players and his technical staff to be his guests while on location at the Carey ranch. **

JOHN C. BROWNELL, chief of Universal's scenario staff in the east, who has spent the last six weeks at Universal City re-organizing the department, has returned to New York. Upon his departure Lucien Hubbard will assume charge as scenario editor at the "Big U" studios.

Hoot Gibson is now at work on an action western at Universal City entitled "The Introduction of the Majestic theatre, just completed at Benicia, Calif., at a building cost of $75,000. The theatre, which seats 550, is managed by W. B. Crooks.
Perfect Disguise

ALICE LAKE

Metro star of "More Acres" impersonating Bert Lytell in the role of "Beauty" Steele, the eccentric lawyer of "The Right of Way."

"Ranson." Mack Wright is directing and Hoot is surrounded by a splendid cast, including Virginia Faire, Leonard Gahagen, Nelson McDowell and Dan Crimmens.

The perfectly appointed operating room of the hospital at Universal City was used as a "set" for a scene in Eddie Polo's serial, "The Vanishing Dagger." Dr. Harry B. Martin, the eminent surgeon, was present to assure the correct reproduction of a minor operation.

Colin Campbell is now directing Dustin Farnum in "Big Happiness" at the Brunton Studios. Mr. Campbell has taken the company to Mt. Baldy to film snow scenes.

Kathleen Kirkham has taken up fancy horseback riding as a diversion and exercise. She will train her Kentucky thoroughbred for work in pictures.

Paul Hurst, director, has settled his $20,000 breach of contract suit with the National Film Corporation.

Frank Keenan says that he can get along very nicely without blizzards, therefore he is going east this week to sell his eastern holdings and will re-invest in southern California. Frank has already purchased a beautiful home in Hollywood.

Every member of Metro's "Best of Luck" company in Santa Barbara last week made at least one flight in the seaplane chartered by Metro.

Sarah Y. Mason has joined the Metro scenario department to write continuity for Screen Classics productions. Miss Mason was formerly with Brentwood, Thomas Ince and Douglas Fairbanks.

Buster Keaton will make two-reel comedies for Metro when he completes his work in Winchell Smith's production of "The New Henrietta," in which he is costarring with William H. Crane.

It was quite an event in Visalia, a city in Tulare county, Calif., when Goldwyn players producing Tom Moore's new picture, "The Great Accident," selected that city for a number of scenes showing an election fight between the "wets" and "drys" to elect a mayor. Harry Beaumont, who is directing Mr. Moore, had no difficulty in getting out an election crowd, the citizens of the city turning out in masse to get into the picture.

The first four of a series of twenty-six two-reel comedies featuring Edie Fagan and George Edwards are ready for sales preview, according to the National Film Corporation of America studio advances, producers of the Fanagan and Edwards comedies.

Negotiations that will bring one of the largest producing and distributing film news weekly organizations within the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc. fold are now pending final arrangements, according to advances received from the Pacific coast office of Marion H. Kohn.

Pending the final approval of Director General Joe Brandt, all production matters pertaining to the 1920 serial of the National Film Corporation of America, "The Son of Tarzan" will be held up. Mr. Brandt, who will re-establish his office in New York to become production chief at the National studios, is expected in Hollywood this week.

For his work in fire prevention on the Pacific Coast, first in San Francisco, then in Los Angeles, Marion H. Kohn, head of the short subject producing concern of Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc., has been made an honorary fire chief of Los Angeles. He was similarly honored in New San Francisco a year ago.

Thomas Meighan, Kathlyn Williams and Margaret Loomis will have roles in William de Mille's all-star production "Conrad in Quest of His Youth."

J. Gordon Cooper, directing Benny Leonard, world's lightweight boxing champion, in his serial, "The Devil's Eye," is one of the youngest handlers of the megaphone in the film game, he is just twenty-four years old and formerly was with Roald Walsh.

George Beban, who has been personally cutting, titling and editing "One Man in a Million," his latest production, announced this week that it will be ready for a preliminary showing at an early date. Beban wrote the story of "One Man in a Million," starred in it along with his son George, Jr., and did the action. He refuses to trust the cutting and titling to others than his own.

"Nobody's Girl" Ready
For State Right Buyers

Joe Brandt, director-general of the National Film Corporation of America, announces that "Nobody's Girl," in which Billie Rhodes is starred, is now ready for publication and will be marketed on the state rights plan.

In commenting upon the picture Mr. Brandt states that the trend in pictures is changing and that just now the "little girl" picture is most popular. Melbourne McDowell, Mary Alden and Lloyd Bacon appear in support of the star.

Spring Whether Brings
Boom In Typhoon Sales

Declaring that the touch of Spring in the air has set exhibitors to thinking seriously about the coming warm months, the Typhoon Fan Company of New York reports unusual activity in the buying of cooling mechanism throughout the country.

The Reliance theatre, Orangeburg, S. C., the Cozy theatre, Okmulgee, Okla., the Victoria, Camden, N. J., Liberty, Cape May, N. J., Star, Philadelphia, Pa., Lyric, Lexington, N. C., Palace, Cordelle, Ga., Lagrange Amusement Co., Toledo, O., and the Apollo theatre, Peoria, Ill., are among the recently reported buyers.

Olive Tell Feature

The second of the Jans Pictures, Inc., superfeatures starring Olive Tell, "A Woman's Business," which was adapted from "Nothing a Year," by Charles Belmont Davis, has been privately shown to the executives of the company, exhibitors and state rights buyers.

Announcement from Herman F. Jans, president of the company, is to the effect that it is a bigger, better and stronger attraction than his company's first publication, "Love Without Question," in which Miss Tell was also the star. The verdict of those present at the showing is reported as "an exceptionally strong box office attraction."

Enthusiastically Receive
Marion Davies at Capitol

Approximately 5,000 persons enthusiastically received Marion Davies, star in "April Folly," when this production was given its premiere recently at the Capitol theatre in New York.

The Paramount-Cosmopolitan star had gone to the playhouse as a guest of Robert W. Chambers, author of "April Folly," and Messmore Kendall, president of the Capitol theatre.
William Fox has obtained an option on all of Pearl Doles Bell's future stories. The producer entered into a contract with the writer following the success of "Her Elephant Man," a pictureization of one of her books.

With Shirley Mason as star, Mrs. Bell's first story to reach the screen was an instantaneous hit. Then followed a Mason picture, "Molly and I," from a book by Frank R. Adams called "Molly and I and the Silver Ring." The next production for this star, which is scheduled to reach first run houses in May, was taken from another book by Mrs. Bell. "Love's Harvest," it is called, the title of the book being "The Harvest."

Several Popular Books
Mrs. Bell has given several other equally popular books to American readers, including "Florida Gray," a story which contains interesting nfm possibilities. But, as the author herself declares, the "editorial page" is her forte, and she never is happier than when painting vivid word pictures with all the high coloring of her rich imagination.

The name of this talented author is almost a household word throughout the country wherever women read. Her editorials and special articles have been published in most of the popular periodicals and fashion journals. She has contributed also essays and poems which contain a peculiar appeal to feminine hearts.

St. Joseph, Mo., is the birthplace of Mrs. Bell, and it was in "Saint Joe," as the natives call their city, that the little lady, still in her ninth year, wrote her first story. This, she admits, was never sold, and was not published in book form or on the screen. But it was a story, and it brought her to the attention of the editor of the local paper. The little novelist became his protege.

Writes Story for Miss Mason
A peculiar fact in connection with this incident is that a similar relationship once existed between this same editor and the famous Eugene Field. It was this editor who discovered Field and aided the young writer to develop his literary genius. To him Mrs. Bell owes her start as a producer of popular fiction.

The third of Pearl Doles Bell's stories to be produced, "Her Elephant Man," is known as "The Little Pagan." It was written especially for the star after the author had contributed a series of charming stories, "Her Elephant Man," and it is said to offer the winsome little artiste a most fascinating character role set in the colorful atmosphere of the Orient.

Beware of the Film Promoter is Warning Woods Says Industry Stands Second Only to Oil in Wildcat Schemes
Beware of the motion picture promoter who elaborates upon the "gilded opportunities" offered by the industry, is the warning sounded by Frank E. Woods, Paramount supervising director. "Second only to the flood of wild-cat oil prospectors," says Mr. Woods, "is the number of enterprises that are projected by honest and well-meaning, as well as dishonest and simis-credulous agencies, to make money from the people's pockets with the hope of exceptional returns. Those of us who have been associated with the making of motion pictures know how large a proportion of those who permit themselves to be thus beguiled will bid farewell to their savings if they put them in these channels.

"There was a time when men of meager capital and little resources could compete and survive the competition that then existed. That time has passed. The film industry has resolved itself into a comparatively few powerful units, with enormous financial strength. "Competing against these odds means almost sure death to the concern starting on an independent basis. Of course, a stroke of good fortune may carry the small independent concern over the hogs. But what proportion of such fortunes are there? I venture to say not 10 per cent, and probably that is too liberal an estimate."

"The Evil Eye" Obtains Heavy Chicago Booking
"The Evil Eye," the Hallmark serial starring Benny Leonard, has been given exceptionally heavy booking in Chicago. It will be shown over the ordinary circuit and the houses of Schoenewald & Sons. Among the larger independent theatres which will show the serial will be the Peninsula, and Ashland avenue. The bookings were made by Tom Mitchell, salesman for the Hallmark exchange in Chicago.

"Going Straight" With Billy West Completed
Billy West Productions announces that its second picture, "Going Straight," has been completed, and a comedy along different lines is promised. Besides being featured in the subject, as a hobo, Billy West personally directed. Ethelwyn Gibson co-starred with Mr. West and they are supported by Ted Corch, Bud Ross, Al Martin and Jack White. The story is based on an up-and-downs in the lives of two tramps.

Records Successes By Giving Film Titles to Prize Cattle on Ranch
Otto Fees, manager of the Best theatre in Parsons, Kan., is more than a good showman—he also is an efficient movie promoter. He said of him that he not only shows pictures, but he eats, dreams and sleeps them.

That is, perhaps, one of the principal reasons for his exhibitional success. Mr. Fees declares that no exhibitor can succeed without a thorough knowledge of stars and pictures and without possessing the same enthusiasm about them that he wants his public to feel.

In addition to his interests as an exhibitor, he also is the owner of a farm on the outskirts of Parsons, where he raises registered cattle. Each of this prize herd must have a name, and they are christened according to Mr. Fees' original idea.

Instead of giving them ordinary names, such as Daisy, Mary or Bessee, he names them after his most popular stars and film picture successes. When a star or a production makes a new house record at his theatre, another name is born and inscribed upon the latest addition to his prize herd.

In this way Mr. Fees keeps a permanent record of the high spots in his career as a showman. To begin with, he has named his farm "Green Gables," because of the unusual success he had in showing "Anne of Green Gables," Mary Miles Minter's first production for Realart Pictures Corporation.

Among the names which he has given his herd are "Anne," derived from the same source. "Erstwhile Susan" is another of the members of his herd, commemorating the showman's first engagement in Constance Binney in her first Realart picture. "Lightning Rider" is the name of his young bull.

"His Pajama Girl" Is C. B. Price Feature
The C. B. Price Co., Inc., have obtained their latest production of the Southern California Producing Company, a five-part comedy-drama, "His Pajama Girl," in which Billie Rhodes is starred. Mr. Price, returning from a trip to the coast, states that he has seen the picture in its final stage and immediately made a deal to get the first run of the feature on the state right plan.

An extensive advertising campaign has been prepared, according to Mr. Price, that will cover not only the state right buyers but will go directly to the exhibitor, thus creating a market for the purchasers of the various territories.

Half Million Dollar Theatre for Atlanta
ATLANTA, GA.—Detailed plans of the $500,000 Metropolitan theatre to be erected on Luckie street, between Broad and Forsyth, by Sig. Samuels, presently proprietor of the Criterion, Savoy and Alpha theatres. The new structure will seat 2,225 and be devoted strictly to motion pictures.
LOOK TO POEMS FOR NEW IDEAS

Isaac Wolper Says Classical Poetry Offers Splendid Picture Themes That Will Relieve Present Serious Shortage of Screen Stories

Isaac Wolper, president of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, in a statement, predicts that before long large-scale production of famous poems will become an established fact. The steady absorption by picture producers of past and current stage plays and works of printed fiction, he says, coupled to the inflated valuation placed on available material, has brought about a serious shortage of screen stories. The field of poetry, he asserts, offers a logical means of relieving the stringency.

Mayflower's president firmly believes that the ideas and beauty of thought expressed in poetry can be transmitted to the screen. He predicts that many of the greatest pictures of the future will be those inspired by works of poetry.

Shortage Becomes Acute

Mr. Wolper says: "The shortage of good story themes is becoming more acute every day. The demand so greatly exceeds the supply that producers are forced to pay fabulous prices for available material. The scarcity is a very real and vital problem demanding a quick solution.

Original screen stories are doing much to help producers circumvent the problem, but are not entirely solving it. To what other sources can we look?"

"In the field of poetry we have a vast reservoir of splendid picture themes waiting to be tapped. Here, I believe, producers will ultimately find a logical solution to their problem.

Don't Look for Plot

"In some quarters this prediction probably will be met with the argument that the majority of poems contain but little plot material; that their appeal is restricted to the intellectual class.

"But we do not look to the poems for plot or dramatic incident. These are mechanical things that skilled technicians can provide. Plot is nothing more than a method of story telling. Poetry gives us something finer and deeper. It gives us a living thing, an idea, a beautiful thought.

"And it is ideas that pictures need most. Ideas lift a picture far above the commonplace level. Analyze one of the greatest pictures ever produced, 'The Miracle Man.' What made it great? Why was the public response to it so eager and spontaneous? The crux of reason is expressed in one word, 'idea.' The picture conveyed a poetic idea of life beautifully expressed.

Projects Life's Emotions

"Poetry projects only fundamental ideas and emotions of life. Through the universal language of the screen these fundamentals can be understood and appreciated by all classes of people.

"If time is not far distant when producers will recognize this fact, and the poem in common with the original screen story will provide more screen themes than stage plays, books or magazine stories."

By using the basic ideas of celebrated poems, and interpreting them by means of logical, well-knit, dramatic stories, Mr. Wolper believes that producers can achieve a two-fold purpose. They can develop a sufficient volume of stories to meet requirements and can offer to the public a finer and more meaningful type of production.

Case Shows Larger Theatres Necessary

Boosters Assert That Frisco Could Support Playhouses Twice Present Size

Bigger theatre boosters have taken a recent incident in San Francisco, when extraordinary efforts were required by two houses playing the same picture to accommodate the crowds, to substantiate their claim that the larger cities of the United States could support motion picture theatres with double their present seating capacity.

During the week of March 14, "In Old Kentucky," starring Anita Stewart, played simultaneously at the Roll Opera House and at the Strand theatre. Impromptu parades of fans marched back and forth between the two theatres, it is reported, and each theatre turned away more business than they could handle.

In a telegram to H. O. Schwabke of First National's home office, Sam Y. Edwards, First National's San Francisco exchange manager, reports the opening of the picture at the two theatres to record-smashing business.

"The crowds took up a waiting position hours before the opening time at both houses, with business straining the capacity of the two theatres all day," says Mr. Edwards' telegram.

The newspaperman makes one comical aspect of the double run, disclosing that fans who flocked to the Tivoli and were turned away over to the Strand only to find the line up just as big. In the same way many who first went to the Strand journeyed over to the Tivoli.

Smith to Aid Blache In Filming "New Henrietta"

Herbert Blache has been selected to direct "The New Henrietta," the first Winchell Smith production for Metro, at the company's west coast studios in Hollywood, Calif. Mr. Blache has just finished directing "The Hope," the first of the five Drury Lane melodramas to be published by Metro.

Mr. Smith personally will supervise the filming of the play. He plans to spend most of his time on the set with Mr. Blache. The picture will have an all-star cast and will be in about two weeks. One of the featured players will be William H. Crane.

Gets "The Lost City"

For Iowa and Nebraska

M. J. Frisch, formerly with Pathe an Universal, and now head of Great Productions Company, Des Moines, Ia., has obtained the state rights for Iowa and Nebraska on "The Lost City," th Selig-Warner production.
By J. A. BERST

Twentieth century efficiency is summed up in the word “cooperation.”

This is the lesson taught us by the world-wide war. Cooperation has come to be recognized as the all important factor in any great industry. It is a question of helping one another for our own good. It resolves itself down to the fact that if you don’t get together with your brothers in your industry soon that industry will be without you.

That is the secret of success among the exhibitors. That is the secret of success which United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., possesses.

The exhibitor is in a peculiar position. The fact that he owns his theatre today does not necessarily mean that he is going to own his theatre tomorrow. There are two important factors that determine his success or failure—showmanship and the quality of the pictures he runs.

Question Before Exhibitor

The exhibitor’s problem is this: “How can I be assured of a steady supply of popular pictures?”

He knows full well that he cannot count on any producing organization which goes like a wolf in the night raising film rentals that his business becomes unprofitable and then have it gobble up his house. A company cannot be a friend and enemy of his at the same time. It can’t shake his hand and take the bread and butter out of his mouth at the same time. He is either for you or against you. And you know he isn’t for you.

It is the realization of this fact which forced a number of far-sighted exhibitors to band together in United Picture Theatres of America, Inc. It was up to them to protect their theatres by creating an organization by which they could not only safeguard their supply of pictures but to get them at a fair rental that would enable them to run their business profitably.

Ideal Is Infallible

That is the secret of the success of United. That is why United can never fail, because the ideal back of it is infallible.

United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., is exhibitor-owned and exhibition controlled. The exhibitor purchases a franchise which gives him a right to run his picture before his competitor. This guarantees the exhibitor a position in his district. It also gives to the exhibitor the knowledge that he will have a supply of pictures—good pictures—for his use.

The United Picture Theatres of America, Inc., owns a one-third interest in the United Picture Productions Corporation. The money which the exhibitors pay for their United franchise thereby gives them a part ownership and a part control of United Picture Productions Corporation. The United Picture Productions Corporation has, through its unprofitable exchanges, now complete ownership of a distributing machine equal to any in the industry. Twenty-four exchanges are in a position to furnish the best possible service to exhibitors who are partly owners of this system of exchanges.

Control Triangle Pictures

(The foregoing productions are early Triangle Pictures.)

Can you imagine what this means to United? Can you imagine what it would cost to bring these stars together under one head today? You would say that there isn’t enough money in the film business to do it. Yet United has done it. And United franchise holders are going to reap the benefit from this deal.

The United system of operation under which a picture is bought and distributed is on a basis of actual cost of production plus a fixed percentage of profit to the producer.

If the production and distribution of a picture cost $80,000, the picture is charged to United franchise holders at $80,000. No attempt at exorbitant profits are made because no profit is needed. It is the exhibitor’s picture, the exhibitor acts as distributor, the exhibitor acts as showman, and the only profit to be made is what the exhibitor himself makes.

It is just a simple proposition of fair play to all.

There are many underlying policies of United. The main one, however, is the good old American axiom: “Live and let live.”

Under the United plan, we have cooperative buying. The exhibitors of America now are able not only to get the best pictures due to the force of their buying power, but exhibitors will be able to get these pictures at a fair rate of rental. For these pictures are being rented to themselves by themselves. The money that they take out of their right pockets they put into their left.

United is the franchise holders’ organization. Every move for the betterment of United means a direct benefit for exhibitors who are sensible enough to see the handwriting on the wall. When United took over the Triangle and Lynch Exchanges, it meant that the exhibitors who are franchise holders now are assured of an efficient distribution.

United means that the exhibitor is his own boss. It means that he owns his theatre in every sense of the word. It means that he can run his own theatre in his own way. He can show any picture he pleases. It means that he can wear what he pleases and he can eat what he pleases. It means that he is free and not a slave.

Callaghan Picks Cast

For Bessie Love Film

The announcement of the completed cast for the first picture which Bessie Love is to make for the Andrew J. Callaghan Productions, Inc., is said to assure the star of capable support. “The Midlanders” is the name of the feature, adapted from the novel of the same title by Charles Tenney Jackson.

Joseph DeGrasse and IdA May Park, in charge of direction, will have a company composed of Truman Van Dyke, Lloyd Bacon, Sydney Deane, Frances Raymond, Jack Donavan, C. Norman Hammond, John Lindstrum and Curt RehfieId at their disposal.

“KEEP YOUR EMBRACES, VILLAIN, FOR OTHERS”

New Metro Department to Furnish Exploitation Service to Exhibitors

Special exploitation service, in addition to valuable suggestions embodied in its various press books, is being devised and supplied to exhibitors, according to Metro Pictures Corporation. This service now is taking the form of mineographed sheets containing from eight to a dozen "stunts," carefully explained and elaborated by a department of film salesmen who know the problems that confront exhibitors.

This new department in the Metro-Loew organization will be expanded, it is said, to cover all exploitation needs on the part of showmen and to give them every assistance in putting over Metro-Loew special productions for their full box-office value.

Responsibility Not Ended

Loew-Metro recognizes, it is announced, that the company's responsibility does not end with the rental of a film production; that local conditions and other circumstances frequently present problems to individual exhibitors that should be settled by expert advisers to insure the biggest money returns with the picture.

Even in advance of the organization of its new department, Loew has been and is supplying exhibitors with invaluable assistance in the matter of exploiting the Loew-Metro productions. It is pointed out that Loew-Metro accessories include more lithograph paper than is supplied by any other company in the industry. The Loew-Metro poster accessories embrace a twenty-four-sheet, two six-sheets, three three-sheets, three one-sheets and a half-sheet size window card for display in shops.

Exhibitors have their choice of two styles of heralds—either a novelty cut-out, or a more expensively designed special folder in two colors. These are in addition to the slip, scene cuts, specially prepared cuts and mats, lobby stills and title and synopsis cards. The use of all these accessories is fully explained in the press books that go with every Loew-Metro special.

Each press book contains a special section devoted to exploitation stunts, ranging from lobby effects and stage settings to newspaper features and street ballyhoo. Every stunt is suggested from the standpoint of practicability.

Stunt suggestions now are amplified by the special service just inaugurated by Loew-Metro. The department is being rapidly enlarged. It is issuing the first special exploitation for Bert Lytell's new special, "Alias Jimmy Valentine," from Paul Armstrong's stage play.

Nazimova Picture Made In Forty Working Days

Nazimova established what is further a speed record in the filming of a production when she completed her latest Metro picture, "The Heart of a Child," in forty working days. Seven weeks after the picnic scenes that open the play were photographed at Silver Lake, Cal., the final scene was "shot" in the Metro studios in Hollywood. The Russian star sped up her production to this extent, notwithstanding that she was ill with a cold for three days during its making as the result of working an all night on location in extremely cold weather.

With Nazimova, Victor Potel, Nell Newman, Ray C. Thompson, and the other principals of the cast, ninety persons worked on the location. The scenes were directed by Ray C. Smallwood. "The Heart of a Child" was adapted to the screen from the novel, by Frank Danby, by Charles Bryant, who is again Nazimova's leading man.

"La La Lucille" Second Lyons-Moran Five-Reeler

"La La Lucille," the musical comedy by Fred Jackson which played Broadway last season, has been bought by picturization by Universal as the second five reel comedy starring Eddie Lyons and Lee Moran. The two comedians are now completing their first feature length comedy, "Everything But The Truth."

It is said that a handsome price was paid for the picture rights to the musical comedy, the plot being particularly well suited to the personalities of the stars.

"U" Announces Comic

Dick Kennedy, cartoonist, for seven years a member of the staff and a prolific contributor to may periodicals during the war, will supply a new animated comic for Universal's proposed Novelty Reel, it is announced by Hal Hodes, who will edit the reel.
First National Exhibitors' Circuit has compiled exhibitorial statistics from data gathered in 238 theatres in eighteen states and twenty-one cities which will permit show-ners to justify their respective admission prices and compare their personal responsibilities with those of other playhouse owners over the country.

The figures show that only about 5 per cent of the first and second run theatres seating 1,000 persons or more have a top admission price below 25 cents for night performances.

Special attractions, the statistics show, are responsible for the larger scale of prices. As an example, a Western theatre where a 20-cent admission price had been charged, a feature was booked and prices were boosted to 35 cents. "Auction of Souls" pointed out the way to bigger receipts and profits.
The management decided to keep the admission price at 25 for a two weeks' tryout. The idea was a success. Special features were booked and today the price is popular locally.

According to the law of "larger theatre, larger admission prices," it was discovered that the Auditorium theatre at Saginaw, Mich., seating 7,000 people, has a 10-15-cent admission scale, whereas eight second-run theatres there seating between 250 and 300 people, have a uniform admission price of 20 cents.

Only two out of twenty San Francisco theatre seats less than 1,000 people and the top admission price goes no lower than 20 cents. In Denver there are twenty second-run houses charging a admission price of 10 cents. Seating capacity of these theatres ranges from 500 to 960 seats.

One of the several first-run houses with a seating capacity of 200 or less charged an admission price of 50 cents for night performances is the Alhambra theatre at Indianapolis.

An odd condition exists at Springfield, where three secondrun theatres have a proportionately higher minimum admission scale than the first-run houses. The statistics compiled by First National Exhibitors' Circuit follow in table form:

Valuable Advertising Aids for "Whirlwind" Publicity Campaign Conducted By Republic Prior to Issuing Serial

Republic Distributing Corporation announces that its first serial, "The Whirlwind," will be published accompanied by one of the most complete arrays of exhibitor aids ever offered with a serial production. For several weeks, it is said, experts have been busy compiling press books and campaign material.

In advance of issuing, Republic has conducted a publicity and advertising campaign, so that exhibitors will have the benefit of the interest created before they book the picture, it is said. For weeks, page advertisements have appeared in various publications announcing the approaching serial with Charles Hutchinson as the star. Through newspaper syndicates, and other sources, stories concerning Hutchinson also have appeared.

The campaign book is completed and is being sent to exhibitors. Instead of a sales argument, it is said to contain nothing but advertising and publicity.

The publicity section is said to be very clever. There is publicity and special stories concerning the stars for every episode. Cuts for every episode also are included in the publicity. The whole is so arranged that an exhibitor can use any part of it, or cut out for each episode as it is shown. There are two full pages of exploitation stunts and a special page devoted to the opening drive.

Report Big Demand for Wanda Hawley Booking

The selling campaign conducted by the field forces of Realart Pictures Corp. in behalf of Wanda Hawley's first production, "Miss Hobbs," by Jerome K. Jerome, has resulted in what officials of that organization term a "stampedede to close contracts" on the part of exhibitors throughout the country.

The Southern Enterprises, Inc., has closed for their key city houses without the preliminary screening which is a feature of their booking policy. Chicago, Kansas City, Mo., is said to have written the company, "I am wasting no time on taking chances but instead have signed contracts on 'Miss Hobbs.'"

W. D. Dineen, general manager of the H. C. Moir Theatrical Enterprises, Chicago, has signed up for a week run at the Rose theatre and, speaking of the proposition under which the picture was offered, a single picture booking, stated, "I have never heard of its equal in the history of the industry."

Hodkinson Will Publish "King Spruce" April 18

Prints of "King Spruce," the Holman Day story of the Maine Indians starring Mitchell Lewis, and produced by Otto Bollman and Roy Clements for the Dial Film Company, are being assembled at the Republic laboratories for early dispatch to Hodkinson branches for publication on April 18.

Mr. Clements selected to support Lewis, Mignon Anderson, Melbourne MacDowell, Arthur Millette, Betty Wales, Joe Ray, James O'Neil, Gus Soffille and Frederic Herzog.

Ideas of Exhibitors Incorporated in Katherine MacDonald's New Picture

Katherine MacDonald's latest production, "Passion's Playground," will be forwarded to First National Exhibitors' Circuit for distribution as soon as the cutting and assembling has been completed.

This picture, according to those under whose direction it was made, was fostered by exhibitors. Many California theatremen, it is said, took a personal interest in the various steps of filming, and their suggestions guided the studio manager and director in making stills for attractive lobby displays, newspaper advertisements and twenty-four sheets.

Exploitation Possibilities

It is announced that the picture was produced with a care and diligence that has represented a period of months and an outlay of money more than ever has been spent on any of Miss MacDonald's previous subjects.

"Passion's Playground," in addition to relating a story that maintains remarkable human interest, according to Miss MacDonald and her associates, at the same time affords them unique chances for promotion. Trial screenings prove, it is said, that J. A. Barry as director and Joseph Brotherton as cameraman have not missed a bet in attaining every bit of artistry possible.

Marks Fourth Production

The release of "Passion's Playground," marks the fourth production of Miss MacDonald following her rise to individual stardom upon the formation of her own production company and the distributing negotiations entered into with First National. In the "Thunderbolt," and "The Beauty Market!" she scored successes. In "The Turning Point," her own beauty amidst the choice settings and romance of Robert W. Chamber's story, won her added admirers. But in "Passion's Playground," she has attained a perfection rarely found when natural beauty and charm, emotional ability, masterful direction and loyal work on the part of a supporting cast are required, it is said.

Miss MacDonald claims that a large amount of credit for the success of her latest is due to Norman Kerry, Nell Craig, Edwin Stevens, Virginia Ainsworth, Rudolph Valentine, Alice Wilson, Howard Gaye, Fanny Ferrari, Sylvia Joesly and Walt Whitman, all of whom have important roles in "Passion's Playground."

The picture is an adaptation of "The Quest of Hercules" by C. N. and A. M. Williamson.

E. Glantzberg Opens Office at Atlanta for Typhoon Fan Company

Ernst Glantzberg, president of the Typhoon Fan Company, has left New York for the South. He will stop over at Atlanta, Ga., where he will open a permanent office and headquarters for the Typhoon Fan Company. F. K. Rieckseker of Atlanta, has been appointed representative in this territory.

Mr. Rieckseker is well known not only throughout the South, but in other parts of the country where he has been identified for the past four or five years with the American Photo Player Company. The Atlanta office makes the fifth in the chain of offices that are being established by the Typhoon Fan Company, and before many months have passed, it is the purpose of the Typhoon Fan Company to establish headquarters in practically all of the large motion picture centers throughout the country.

Before returning, Mr. Glantzberg will visit Nashville, Knoxville, New Orleans, St. Louis, Cincinnati and Chicago.

How Much Nerve Have You

If you are a big minded exhibitor, one who has confidence in his ability as a showman, and one who is not afraid of a proposition because it is startlingly new, we've got something for you.

For some time past we have been conducting a survey of theatres and theatrical conditions. We have learned a lot of interesting facts. We have boiled down the facts, and from them have formulated a plan of picture exhibition that is a great departure from the present method.

We know that it is the right way, because it is based on the same principles that the most successful and money making branch of theatricals is based upon—vaudeville.

We want exhibitors who have nerve enough to appreciate the money possibilities of a new and big method of showing pictures to get in touch with us.

Three of our lost brothers came up for air last week along the Pacific coast, with Frank Picard of Picture Resources and Lester Ginzell. The Cubs aggregation of ball tossers are blamed for the discovery. Howdy, fellows! Let's have an earful o' gab now and then.

Harry Weiss and his new independent exchange, the Superior Screen Service, is getting a good pull and is planning for their initial offering "The Greater Sin- ner," featuring James K. Hackett. This organization will be represented on the north side of Chicago by Stan Keeley, on the south side by Max Cutler and for the Illinois territory by William Weiss.

Dave Dunn better get busy and buy one of those Dallas, Tex., "Super" sets and hurry up on that Detroit road cuto of his. On page 339 under the "Tin Ware" classification they cover in detail how to run and care for all toys.

Sam Rieger, former Celebrated representative, is now marking time with the Special Pictures exchange, reporting an exciting rush for the new Comedart offering at all points in the city territory.

Al Rosenthal of the Empire Film exchange returned to Chicago April 4 after an extended New York visit. Al would have lingered a little longer, but inasmuch as the wife was to enjoy her Easter journey along Boul. Mich., he hastened westward. That frozen-north setting the weather director slipped us all wrong, wasn't it?

Owen McKinley of the Rex theatre, Racine, Wis., was kept busy climbing and sliding the stairs of the Film Exchange building the other day packing the personal booking sheets with a flock of money getters. Why not ride in the lift, Owen? Great place to spend time.

Harry Weiss had the beam of summer gold upon his handsome visage as he his exhibitor friends left his office the other day. We refer to J. F. Dix, Dixie theatre, Wagnerville, and A. J. Dufoe, Lyric Theatre, of East Moline, Ill. Let Harry tell it—his oratory I: more detailed, ahem!

The li'l ol' log-cabin at Wolf Lake, Muskegon, Mich., is being overhauled and re-decorated for the forthcoming summer festivities. Better order yourDebugger now for on and after June 1, all mail should be forwarded R. F. D. 4, Muskegon, Mich. Member those days of the sweet bye and bye, Clyde?

Manager Frank J. Flaherty, Unity Photoplays exchange, is busy drilling the boys on the semaphore signals so they can greet their chief, the genial Frank Zambrano, upon his return to the office this week. Frank has been on the hospital list for the past ten days due to an operation of a delicate dental nature.

With May 1 creeping rapidly upon us, C. H. Eckhardt, district manager of the Fox Film corporation, has been stepping it off merrily attempting to find a suitable location to house the organization pending the erection of a real film building.

Archie Spencer and Ed Mörder, of the local Pathe exchange, are now staging a sketch termed the "Pirates of Cinema," with Ed holding the "key to the situation.

A recent addition to the local Robertson-Cole exchange developed quite a flurry in the Boyhood memories of Manager Max Levy. It seems friend Simpson, who hails from Cincinnati, is an old high-school pal of Max's.

We have received numerous inquiries of late regarding appropriate spring attire for film circles. Just as soon as we receive, we will get

Theatres of the Week

Whether the credit for the opening of the 239th Michigan theatre, in the theatre, is a clash of wills or a clash of tastes, is an open question.

Stig. Schlaeger, personal representative to J. Parker Read, Jr., has been humming about the Hotel Sherman very busily this past week or so. They may grow luscious grapes on the West coast, but the night-life of Chi's Loop is not to be scoffed at, with that array of "peaches" that cavorted about the lobbies of our best hostleries. Leave it to Sig. He's not dea.

"Jake" Cooper, of the 20th Century, the "big noise" of Twelfth street boulevard, while procrastinating about the local exchanges this week hesitated long enough to wig-wag us the info, that business out his way was so good he "held them in so they couldn't get out.

If Lee Herz, president of the Siele exchange, buys many more new offerings he will have to rent another suite to show the paper the way the present quarters are bedecked. Looks like homecoming week in some University town.

Louis Noto, of insurance fame, was not skipping about the exchanges last week. Must be a few prospects left, eh, Louie? Get 'em all. The greatest investment the market offers.

Sid Goldman is all lit up with smiles once more. Understand that "Sex," starring Louise Clum, has established records at the local office that wouldn't look bad alongside the sum total of the three best exchanges in the country.

Rothacker Production

Credited With Passage

Of Detroit Bond Issue

Wattersen R. Rothacker of Chicago is the recipient of many congratulatory messages from Detroit on a picture which has figured in the recent election there. Some of the letters of felicitation gave the film credit for swinging the election in favor of the $42,000,000 bond issue to build new street car lines.

The city proposed to take over part of the present street railway lines and build others. Voters were asked to give the money.

The film largely was cartoon. It visualized the present Detroit situation. Tiny street cars, flitted about the screen showing the round about ways many workers had to travel, the time wasted and the number of transfers necessary. At frequent intervals were flashed in Detroit street scenes showing the present cars, crammed to the steps, passing crowds of weary workers at street corners.

Then there came to life on the screen the many new lines which $15,000,000 could build. These lines put Mr. Detroit—no matter in which section he lived—work in handy. In most cases would eliminate one transfer. Voters decided they wanted a system like the one pictured.

Visiting the Chicago Exhibitors

—With H. E. N.—

Speaking of theatres and managers we can not overlook Al. P. Lynx, who is also the great arbiter of the People's theatre out back of the yards. He is enjoying the sojourn of a showman, who can take a six hundred dollar loan in ten days, and is a very successful manager. The Peoplets is in, and make it not only a financial success, but a theatre any city would be proud of. Ye Scribe has traveled several thousand miles and been in hundreds of theatres, but nowhere has he found the equal of Manager Lynx's lighting. This is changed each week, and as Al is a regular fellow, exhibitors from other cities in search of ideas for this form of entertainment, could spend a profitable evening while in Chicago, at the People's theatre. This house, which now has a seating capacity of twenty-three hundred will be enlarged during the Spring, with an additional thousand seats. This is not for the film fans' benefit, but whisper, Al keeps a good box of Vanas on tap in the desk.

Otto J. Freulich, owner of the Boba theatre on Halsted St., just returned from a week in Chicago. Mr. Freulich stated that he ran across Henry Schenck-Kraft at the Springs, and from all accounts, Henry was stepping some. Exhibitor Freulich advises that he has let a contract for a string of sixty-fifty-watt lamps for the front of his theatre. Some light, we'll say. The Boba should shine like a diamond now.

R. Sola, manager of the Model and Colonial theatres on Halsted St., pulled off a good exploitation stunt at the Model the other night. He ran the "Army Recruiting" reel, with a personal appearance of the tank that the recruiting service is operating. Every day a full tank carried the Model's advertisement up and down Halsted street and Exhibitor Sola advises that he could not handle the crowds. A word to the wise, always have Mr. Sola at your table at a banquet.

H. M. Smith, manager of the Playhouse on Madison Ave., who booked the following first Chicago runs: Clara Kimball Young in "The Forbidden Woman," following by a three-weeks' run of the "Virian of Stambouli," with an option of an additional week. Henry B. Walthall's "Confession" will follow.

J. E. Cotton is a mighty busy manager at the Harvard these days. J. E. does not have a lot to say, but the Harvard is enjoying a big play. It is rumored that the interests Exhibitor Cotton is affiliated with have big plans in the very near future.

The Gateway Hippodrome interests theatre, the Marlow Hippo, under the management of Harry M. Crawford, is playing a Saturday matinee for children which is in its fourth week. The rehearsal of the week's new bill. A series is also running, and Harry states this policy more than keeps down the cost of his expensive program.

Sam Harris, who welcomes the Halfield's patrons with his million-dollar smile, has just installed a Peerless Arc Feed for his Simplexes. Manager Harris stated they were giving entire satisfaction.

Harry Koafman of the Gatey Hippo Attractions, is sojourn in the wilds of Northern Michigan. The Gold Flint Theatre was visited as well as numerous others and it is rumored that the Gatey will shortly have a claim of houses-in that territory.

James Collins, manager of the Francis theatre, is another one of those exhibitors who believes in a perfect projection. James advises that he has just installed a Vesto screen and a Simplex machine, a combination which he stated was giving entire satisfaction.

M. S. Marks, of the Broadway Strand, believes in helping any worthy cause, as he so ably demonstrated the other evening. A five-minute speaker for the relief of the Jewish people in Russia was started off in his plea for funds, with a pled of $500 from Mr. Marks. Ladies with large boxes circulated through the audience, and a barrage of silver followed. After the collection was taken up, Old Glory was flashed on the screen and "The Star Spangled Banner" sung. The show was stopped for fifteen minutes; suffering humanity made an appeal to help those who have been persecuted for years. The showman who aids in this kind of propaganda cannot help but gain friends.

Georg. H. Leaman, manager of the Colonial at L. A. Salle, Ill., was a visitor last week. George was looking very prosperous and stated that he had just hung up a new Gold Fibre screen in the Colonial. They must like Fox features in L. A. Salle the way George was buying them.

Harry Miller has sold the Acme on Vincennes avenue to M. P. Hunt. This sale was consummated last week. Harry was seen at the Gold Theatre on Roosevelt road looking over 3000 foot reels. Mr. Hunt plans to install a large electric screen. Competition should be keen in the neighborhood of the Gold, with a manager of Harry's ability on the job.

Messrs. Cooper and Kamenier, owners of the Twentieth Century on Twelfth street, believe in up-to-date methods. Two new Simplexes have just been installed, also a Flexo sign. This house will be entirely redecorated this spring and a new lobby put in. The total cost of repairs will run close to $5,000.

The Garfield theatre on West Madison is playing to capacity business these days.

Charles H. Ryan, manager of this house, is giving his patrons some real programs. One of the many novel slides used here is a U. S. weather bureau report of the daily forecast. Plans are being completed to install a Martin Rotary of 10 K. W. to cost $1,000. "Dad" Schaefer should be asked about the recent public improvements that he contracted for.

Hot Springs must be the Mecca of all Chicago exhibitors. We have just come across another one of its devotees, A. L. Christy, manager of the Elmo theatre. Mr. Christy stated, while the correspondent was admiring the Butter-Kist machine, that he had purchased this pop-corn outfit four years ago and that it had given wonderful service and paid for itself a thousand times over.

Espy Publicity Manager

Lyric on Colonial Site
FLORENCE, ALA.—The Lyric has moved to the old Colonial theatre, which has been remodeled and modernly equipped. The playhouse will play any time of the year. The Lyric is a new Powers projection machine has been installed.
Ventilation and Cooling of Theatres a Timely and Serious Exhibitors’ Problem

Spring is not undiluted cause for rejoicing for the theatre man. April showers, May flowers, June brides, interesting as they may be, are not the only seasonal matters with which the exhibitor must concern himself.

Spring means house-cleaning, and house-cleaning, in the theatre sense, means making the theatre additionally attractive in order that the falling off in patronage which has come to be the expected thing at this time of year may be avoided.

Ventilation is an important summer feature. It is important, of course, at any other time of year, as well, but it is during the summer season that patrons insist upon a cool auditorium constantly supplied with fresh air. It is in spring and summer that the theatre man may use his ventilation system as an advertising feature. Every exhibitor who has made a feature of it in his advertising knows that it pays.

Of particular interest at this time, therefore, are the accompanying illustrations showing the Typhoon cooling system, manufactured by the Typhoon Fan Company, New York, in various styles of installation.

Installing System on Theatre Roof

The Typhoon system is usually installed upon the roof of the theatre, obviously the point where the best air is available for distribution throughout the auditorium. The Typhoon instruments, considered the intake fan as the unit of measurement, are furnished in sizes from three to twelve feet in diameter. It is said that the power of these is such that the largest theatre may be plentifully provided with fresh air, a complete change being made every minute, the Twin Set being considered capable of taking care of the largest theatres in existence.

When the theatre is located in a building the upper floors of which are devoted to office buildings, it is frequently found advisable to place the intake mechanism upon a specially constructed platform fixed to the side of the building, a sheet metal cover being provided to protect it from the elements.

When neither the roof nor any sidewall of the theatre will permit of the installation of the fans, the attic or space between the ceiling of the auditorium and the next floor above is utilized. In such cases, the air is drawn through windows already available or built in for the purpose.

Use of Intake Fans Explained

To overcome difficulties encountered in theatres where the arrangement of balcony and main floor is such as to form a barrier against the equal distribution of fresh air, a plan has been worked out whereby, by installing one intake unit over the forepart of the auditorium, usually directly above the proscenium, and another above the balcony, no part of the house is deprived of proper ventilation.

Realizing that the exhibitor who advertises his ventilation system must make good his claims by evidence more concrete than the mere purr of spinning blades and the glint of flashing interior fans, that he must actually provide his patrons with fresh air, and fresh air in such quantity that its presence is distinctly felt, the Typhoon Fan Company maintains an Economic Features to Be Considered

Reliability and economy are features also made prominent in the company’s claims for its product.

The first is essential, the second, of course, desirable. Reliability as an essential is readily appreciated by theatre men. The really hot days of summer have a way of coming just when least expected and when for some reason or another the theatre cooling system is “out of order.” To disappoint a single day’s patronage, and to fail to make good his promise of good ventilation is as surely to disappoint his patronage as is to exhibit an inferior and unsatisfactory program, is to lose many of that day’s patrons for the remainder of the season at least.

The matter of economy is less important when the success of the ventilation question is appreciated. Most theatre men consider that what are generally termed the warm months constitute half the running year. During that half it is as necessary that the theatre be properly cooled as it is necessary that the theatre be properly heated during the cold season. No exhibitor diminishes the amount of fuel consumed because the price of coal is high. The thinking showman will not save foolishly upon the ventilation phase of his institution.

No Vibration in the De Vry!

You can balance a De Vry on a tea cup and it produces motion pictures as if shot from a stone wall.

You can put the De Vry on a table, a chair—on any non-rocking object with four legs or none, and it does perfect work. It's in a class by itself in this, as in all other respects. See it and know for yourself.

Preview with a De Vry!

A projector which stands up to that test is what professionals need for previewing.

To a Film Exchange, also, a De Vry is invaluable.

We ask that you let us give you a De Vry demonstration. Say the word and our representative from one of 60 cities will come and show you—in your own office.

There's nothing like the De Vry. So light! So handy! So compact! Remember, a poor projector kills a good film. So see the De Vry before you decide. It is endorsed by the best and most successful people in the motion-picture profession.

Dear Mr. Woody:-

I have assigned the week of June 6th for the first Broadway showing of "MISS HOBBS", your initial WANDA HAWLEY production. The fact that I have chosen the Rivoli Theatre for the event shows my confidence in the ability of Miss Hawley and the quality of the vehicle you have chosen for her.

You are to be congratulated on obtaining WANDA HAWLEY as a REALART star. Her vivacity and charm have been noticeable in many of the best productions shown at my theatre.

The consideration shown to your present patrons and the elimination of the series contract appeal to me as strong evidence of your faith in the merit of your top star.

Yours Sincerely,

Louise Glaum in "Sex" is J. Parker Read Jr.'s wonder-picture. This production has been sought more eagerly and given play dates on national release date more swiftly than any production we have ever known in the industry. Louise Glaum on April 11 achieves the unprecedented feat of playing fifty-five full week first runs simultaneously in the United States. In at least a dozen of these first run cities "Sex" will have two, three or four week runs.

When we tell you that we would be pleased to discover ten pictures made by independent producers with the power and quality of "King Spruce" you have a much better estimate of its strength than if we merely told you how big a picture we considered it to be. First run exhibitors have sensed this, too, and "King Spruce" is booking the big theatres.

Holman F. Day's biggest and best known novel is a story of real people—it throbs with life and vitality. It has the healthy, fresh scents of the great forests and its photography and it stars in Mitchell Lewis a mighty fine, sincere actor that many of you exhibitors have accidentally under-rated. Prints of "King Spruce" are in all branches for pre-release now.

The Harvest Moon

From the celebrated play by AUGUSTUS THOMAS
Directed by J. Searle Dawley

Fine, clean, wholesome love stories never die. As a play "The Harvest Moon" was one that drew always the best patronage in many cities and always commanded audiences of women and girls. As a picture it contains sympathy, sweetness and a warm, strong appeal to the human heart.

Gibraltar Pictures inaugurate a new producing trade name with a production of beauty, power and distinction. "The Harvest Moon" and Doris Kenyon are certain to receive a welcome of liking and enthusiasm in the nation's largest and best theatres.

There are some things that we can see here before they are seen or recognized by the nation’s exhibitors.

Exhibitors unquestionably know that in the past twelve months J. Warren Kerrigan has grown and increased greatly in favor with showmen and with the public.

We know through increased demand for his pictures; through the better prices paid through the bigger first runs that are offering him to their patrons. "The Dream Cheater" is the kind of picture that has increased the Kerrigan popularity.
Press Comments on James Oliver Curwood's Famous Story, "The Courage of Marge O'Doone"

The New York Tribune—
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a northwest classic. Mr. Curwood has given us a great treat and a great book in this latest volume of his... This is a triumph in fiction of the Canadian Northwest."

The Philadelphia Press—
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a story that never flags, that abounds in unexpected incidents, that is rich in the deep colors of the glorious country in which its scenes are laid. If you want to read a story that travels straight on like a bird on the wing, with a swift series of unforeseen and thrilling episodes and all of it painted against the splendid hues of the wide, generous westland, read "The Courage of Marge O'Doone'..."

Philadelphia Evening Telegraph—
"Those who like a story brimful of red-blooded adventure, who revel in the life of camp and trail, will enjoy 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone'..."

New York Times—
"There is plenty of incident, plenty of fighting, and some lovemaking in the book, with a heroine of that extraordinarily beautiful, courageous, innocent and trusting type..."

Detroit Sunday News—
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a complicated thriller of North Canada. Breathlessness seems to be the order of the hour. We crave it in all lines of activity, and markedly so in our reading... Adventure topping on adventure may be found in 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone'..."

Oakland (Cal.) Tribune—
"A fighting tale. If you like strong, vigorous, red-blooded fighting stories, where blows and blood, hatred and murder show themselves together with the great wild wastes of the frozen north, grizzly bears, fierce malemutes, primitive men, and tender and beautiful women, you will like 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone'.... It is a graphic tale, stirring and thrilling..."

Minneapolis Herald—
"Mr. Curwood has caught the very spirit of the vigorous life of the north woods, and never has he made that fact clearer in this romance. It is on the whole a 'rattling good story'..."

Cincinnati Enquirer—
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a stirring novel of the far Northwest... It is a tale of mystery and of love, with a heroine unusual in fiction—young, brave, and very naive, as she has lived all her life away from civilization..."

New York World—
"The romance is written with great spirit. Mr. Curwood obviously knows the forest, and his descriptions of it are very vivid. He is a dauntless fighter, too, and never fails to give some stirring scraps... It is Mr. Curwood's best story... and hard to beat..."

Daily Fresno Republican—(California)
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' fully justifies its name, for it would be hard to find a novel with more thrilling moments, hours, sacrifices and intensities."

The Times-Picayune—
(New Orleans)
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a man's story full of fierce excitement and thrilling adventure..."

Indianapolis Star—
"In 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' the author, James Oliver Curwood, presents to his readers a tale of romance and adventure depicting life on the Canadian frontier..."

Salt Lake Telegram—
"Tis a book in which James Oliver Curwood proves himself a born story teller..."

Express Advertiser—
(Portland, Me.)
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' by James Oliver Curwood, is a masterly story which takes the reader into the fascinating life of the northern forests... Swift, exhilarating, the story sweeps along to a climax which is a masterpiece of dramatic skill..."

The Post Express—
(Rochester, N. Y.)
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is a fine story of life near Hudson's Bay, far from what we call civilization... The book is breezily and charmingly written, and as far as style goes, Mr. Curwood is far superior to Jack London, a writer who loved to deal with the same primitive types of humanity..."

The Bridgeport Post—
(Connecticut)
"'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' opens in a snowbound train on an Arctic night, and ends with a night encampment and a strange meeting far from civilization. It is one of those gripping stories that holds one's attention from start to finish..."

Los Angeles Tribune—
"Curwood has many stories of the north woods to his credit, but if he had never written anything except this latest of his novels, 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone,' his reputation would be assured..."

Boston Herald and Journal—
"When James Oliver Curwood flies fancifully northward a live story results. 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' is one of his characteristic narratives, rapid in action and of vigorous pulse..."

The San Francisco Chronicle—
"In 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone' there is a stirring love story and plenty of excitement and heroism and adventure..."

The Boston Post—
"Lovers of novels solid with adventure in the wilds will turn naturally to 'The Courage of Marge O'Doone'..."

"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" The Big Vitagraph Special Production All Star Cast of Well Known Players “Unsurpassed On Screen”

Los Angeles Examiner

CLEAN, WHOLESOME, APPEALING

“The public has come to expect new and daring things from this brilliant young director, King W. Vidor, and the crowds that packed the theatre to see “The Family Honor” were not disappointed. A beautiful picture, that flows as smoothly, as charmingly, as deliciously as the river pictures, which lend it a Southern atmosphere that has not been surpassed on the screen. And it contains a message. The story is a simple one—as all good stories must be. It is clean, wholesome, appealing. The cast is one of uniform merit.”—Los Angeles Examiner.

REFRESHING—VITALIZING

“In this latest King Vidor film there is that something which made his “Turn of the Road” a compelling drama—wholesomeness and the sunshine of life. The human touches give the impression of the real—so natural, so simple that one is refreshed, revitalized.”—Los Angeles Evening Herald.

“‘The Family Honor’ is a fine play. There is a human element throughout the piece that is always pleasing. King Vidor is to be congratulated for his first effort for First National. Florence Vidor gives an excellent performance. The photographic qualities are excellent and the picture is artistic from every point of view. You will enjoy the play for it is HUMAN.”—Los Angeles Evening Express.

THRILLS OF MELODRAMA

“Manifesting again his peculiar talent for garmenting a theme with the rosemary of sentiment, King Vidor, in ‘The Family Honor,” deals with a plot that has a greater plenitude of action than has hitherto been in evidence in his pictures. The main climax has all the ruddy thrills of melodrama. There is ample vigor. It is rich in atmosphere. You feel the life of the old South at every moment. Florence Vidor is a being of intense charm in this picture.”—Los Angeles Times.

Dear Sirs:

Received pamphlet containing subjects from April 1, 1918, to April 1, 1919. Worth ten times its price. Enclosed find check for $1.50 for lists for coming year and back catalogs.

Thanking you,

Respectfully,

COALVILLE OPERA HOUSE.

The above letter received from an exhibitor in a mining town is typical of letters from exhibitors everywhere who bought, last year, the Board’s catalog of selected films. There is now ready for distribution a later issue of this catalog (which contains no advertising matter) entitled:

“A Garden of American Motion Pictures”

covering pictures seen by the Board, April 1, 1919-December 31, 1919.

Price 25 Cents

Previous issues of this catalog listing older pictures are also available; and monthly lists which serve to keep the “Garden” up to date may be had for an annual subscription of one dollar.

Both catalogs and monthly lists give release date (in many cases this year’s), title, distributor, number of reels, “star,” a brief characterization, and the source when drawn from standard or current literature. Especial suitability for young people, aged 12-16, or of any age, is also indicated.

WHY NOT USE THE “GARDEN” AND BUILD UP AND HOLD A NEW AND DISCRIMINATING CLIENTELE?

PATHE DISTRIBUTORS
ONE thing at least is certain in connection with the negotiations of the Associated Producers, Inc., looking toward a distribution arrangement: If any error is made it cannot be attributed to snap judgment.

OPEN booking has not been a failure. It has not even been given a chance on any important scale. Regardless of what any particular type of selling may be called, if a company, department store like, is offering a wide variety of subjects of varying quality the arrangement of necessity becomes a bulk sales proposition and any possibility of individual selling is eliminated.

DESpite any high-toned announcement from official headquarters, the salesman in the field, whose business it is to sell the company’s products, is going to do so in a way that appears to him to be getting results. If he is offering a particularly desirable picture and at the same time has other stuff of a less meritorious character somebody’s product is going to suffer, regardless of what may be the company’s formal statement on its selling plan.

The high peak in commodity prices is arriving if not already here. There is a warning this for every exhibitor who has timidly remained from bringing admission prices up to proper level. When prices generally begin to break—and they most certainly will—the time will have passed when an exhibitor can safely increase his admission charges unless for some exceptional reason.

At the coming meeting of independent exhibitors in Chicago there will be a shot fired that will be heard around the film world. It will be the first declaration of a group of representative exhibitors gathered together for the single purpose of making known their attitude on the matter of producer-owned theatres. The statement of their attitude will be interesting but it is not likely to disclose anything that could not have been known by anyone at the start of the movement if he was not harboring the dangerous belief that he was big enough to put something over on the market upon which he was depending for his very existence.

Of more than passing interest to exhibitors is the appointment of John S. Spargo as field secretary of the Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc. Mr. Spargo’s work will be concerned largely with the business of effecting a closer co-operation between newspapers and the motion picture industry—a matter of prime importance to exhibitors. Better co-operation from newspapers will make exhibitors’ advertising far more effective and will serve a great good in making the real ideas and ideals of the motion picture better understood by the public.

The financial statement of a company, just issued, lists the item of $1,981,636.37 under the heading, “Advance Payments” which is described as “rentals of film and sale of theatre tickets.” The item represents the amount of money that has been collected in deposits from exhibitors and the amount collected from advance sale of theatre tickets. Exhibitors being familiar in a general way with to what extent the public purchases motion picture theatre tickets in advance will be able to approximate how much of the sum is deposits and nothing else.
Heraldgrams

WATTERSON R. ROTHACKER, who has returned to Chicago after several weeks on the West Coast, will start for Europe after a brief rest.

R. W. BAREMORE, who for the past several months has been in charge of publicity and advertising for United Picture Theatres of America, has resigned to free lance. He will handle general publicity and exploitation work.

DAVID KIRKLAND, director for Constance Talmadge in the John Emerson-Anita Loos comedies, will sail for Europe on May 15. He will secure pictures of famous European locales for reproduction in American studios.

F. V. CHAMBERLAIN, general service manager of the distribution department of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has taken an extended trip on which he will visit ten exchanges. St. Louis, Kansas City, Denver, Salt Lake City, Los Angeles, San Francisco, Portland, Seattle, Minneapolis and Chicago.

C. C. EZEEL, former branch manager of the Dallas office for Select Pictures, has been appointed southern division manager with office in that city.

P. K. JOHNSON, formerly Dallas manager for the Triangle Distributing Corporation, has been placed in charge of the Robertson-Cole exchange in that city.

OTTO C. GILMORE and CHARLES RALEIGH, European producers of Prisma pictures with offices in Paris, have returned to this country after a four-months' trip to the Sahara desert for Prisma color pictures.

JAMES DENT, formerly business manager of Selznick's eastern studios, has been appointed general studio manager of the Selznick organization.

ANDRE ZUKOR, president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, has returned to New York after four weeks spent in Europe.

F. C. HENSLEK, manager of the Hallmark Milwaukee office since last December, has resigned to become associated with the Wisconsin Film Company. He is succeeded by Philip Gross, Jr., formerly with United Picture Theatres.

ROBERT C. BRUCK, whose scenes have long been a feature of the Educational Films Corporation, has returned from Cuba and Jamaica where he made a new series of pictures.

CHARLES STEELE, auditor of the Republic Distributing Corporation, has been appointed comptroller of the various Selznick enterprises, including Select, National and Republic.

ALICE BRADY, Reahart star, who has been appearing on the spoken stage in Chicago in “Forever After,” was stricken with poisoning and has been compelled to temporarily abandon the work.

JOHN PAUL KEFFE, well known newspaperman, has been added to the Thomas H. Ince exploitation headquarters at Culver City, Calif.

PAUL BRUNET, vice president and general manager of Pathé, has announced the appointment of J. E. KIMBERLY as Buffalo manager, and M. G. WINSSTOCK as Portland, Ore., manager.

DON WALK has been placed in charge of publicity and advertising of Fine Art Pictures, Inc., by Murray W. Garson, president.

MISS SIDNEY DREW will arrive in Chicago April 28 to begin work on comedies at the Essanay studio with John CUMBERLAND, who is starring on the spoken stage in Chicago in “The Girl in the Limousine” at the Woods theatre.

LOUIS W. THOMPSON passed through Chicago April 17 on his way to the West Coast after spending two weeks in the East on business in the interests of Special Pictures Corporation, of which he is president.

G. B. SAMUELSON, the British film producer, has taken six pictures made at Universal City, Cal., back to England with him. Florence Turner, Peggy Hyland, Camell Cullen, C. M. Hallard and Maude Dunham starred in the features.

M. J. MINTZ, territorial manager for Celebrated Players Film Corporation, returned to Chicago April 19, after a tour of the Eastern states. He will leave soon for the Pacific Coast, to exploit “The Gumps” cartoons.

It is rumored at Universal City, Cal., that Carl Laemmle will build a London studio. This will play Universal in direct competition with Samuelson and Edwards, the two largest individual producers of Europe.

Getting in Tune—

“In the Sweet By and By” has been recorded by Lulu and by a sugar professor as he was thinking of that 50 cents-a-pound price we are told will soon be a reality.

Sounds O. K.—

A military title has just been suggested for profiteering landlords by our Stock Yards correspondent. He says let’s call ‘em “Loot tenants.” Thus do our fellow workers while away the hours.

I SEE ETHEL CLAYTON IS GETTING UP IN THE WORLD. HER NEXT PICTURE IS TO BE CALLED “THE LADDER.”

Modern Fairy Tale—

Once upon a time there was a man who mailed a letter to a friend in the same city and the friend got the letter the next day.

House Shortage Note—

Maurice Tourneur is making “Pavilion on the Links.”

WHEN IT COMES TO A RACE TO KNOCK THE SPOTS OFF THE H. C. L. WE’LL PUT OUR MONEY ON OVERALS AS AGAINST WOODEN SHOES TO WIN.

Hard on the Help—

It’s going to be harder than ever to pick out our new millionaires from the hired help while riding through the country this summer, with this overall fad spreading.

No Sir, By Heck—

Chicagoans are not saving daylight this year. The farmers objected to doing business with them with their pockets stuffed with the fruits of their frugality. They were afraid somebody’d slip something over on ‘em.

Whose Daylight Is It—

And the Aldermen couldn’t figure out where, their rake-off came in. So they scratched it off the list.

Another Delay—

The banning of all profiteers has been put off indefinitely. The price of hemp rope is too high.

Wouldn’t Do A’that—

Berlin has an “expressionist’s” film, the scenes of which are laid in a lunatic asylum. Report has it that the erstwhile Crown Prince was engaged to act the leading role, but he was found to be too loony for the part.

THE ultimate problem of every exhibitor is concerned with keeping his auditorium full. The RITCHEY LITHO. CORP. solves that problem for him. It does it by producing posters so attractive—and so powerfully convincing—that they are bound to sell the maximum number of tickets the maximum number of times.

“This Is the Show Down” Declares Patterson In Calling Convention

Southern Exhibitor Charges Propaganda Is Being Used In Effort to Block Attempt to Organize Exhibitors Defense League In Chicago, April 26.

Will Fight Producer Monopoly of Theatres

"This is the show down. It has been a long time coming, but it is here, and all the anticipated opposition propaganda against it, which, I am reliably informed, has sprung up in a dozen places within two days after publication of the announcement that I had taken the initiative as an independent exhibitor and asked every fellow independent in the country to join me in a huge mass meeting in Chicago, won't and can't stop it. The Chicago meeting means that the independent exhibitor is through being walked on."

With the foregoing as a prelude, Willard C. Patterson, manager of Sig Samuel's Criterion Theatre, Atlanta, Ga., and president of the Southeastern Theatre Managers' Association, charges that already several forces are at work in the exhibitor field in various sections of the country, attempting to forestall any concerted response to his call for a national meeting of independent theatre owners at the Hotel Congress, Chicago, on Monday, April 26, to demand what he terms "a show down with the producer-exhibitors who are trying to drive the independent fellows out of the business by buying, building or leasing theatres to compete with them."

Confident He Has Exhibitors With Him

"I knew before I started this national call for a mass meeting," declares Mr. Patterson, "that immediately it became public property there would be a well organized attempt from the quarters where its force will be felt the most, to offset and discount it in the estimation of every independent exhibitor they can reach through personal meetings with their representatives. That is why I took the initial precaution of assuring myself, before making a definite decision to assume the initiative, that other independent exhibitors felt as I do about the necessity for knowing exactly where we are at with the producers who are invading the theatre branch of the industry. I had received answers from more than two hundred exhibitors before I felt certain that my attitude as an individual was a genuine reflection of the national exhibitor sentiment among producers whose films they are renting. These meetings are too late to be effective.

"Every letter and telegram that comes to me, and my desk is covered with them, shows that the independent exhibitor is keenly alive to the menace of the producer-exhibitor monopoly of the theatre business, and that every one of them realizes that the situation has reached the point where it is a fight for existence.

"Independent exhibitors by the hundreds not only are coming to the Chicago meeting, but they are coming there to talk out in meeting, to call facts, names and real identities, and get down to cases and work out a solution that will have a national independent exhibitor force behind it. They tell me, in their wired and written communications, that they are bringing facts and figures on producer aggression of the theatre field, prepared to show the damage and catastrophe that producer ownership of theatres has already done, and the danger that it holds for their future security and independence as individual exhibitors.

"This mass meeting will be senatorial. I do not mean that it will be full of politics and the sort of sensationalism that have made some of our previous national exhibitor meetings memorable within the industry and disgusting outside. There are going to be revelations of the methods of the producer invasion which will startle the trade. The subject is going to be handled without gloves. The exhibitor who has already fallen beneath producer domination, who has had a real taste of the methods of producer-exhibitors as competitors, will be there to tell about it.

"The independent exhibitors, fortunate enough to be in territories where the producer has not yet attempted to get a theatre foothold, where the hand of monopoly will strike as soon as it gets a firm clutch on its present objectives, is alive to the dangers but not so thoroughly as his brother exhibitor, who has seen their tactics in operation, and who has felt the result in his box office receipts. The latter will be there, in force and mighty anxious to act, to tell the former straight-from-the-shoulder facts."

Says Danger Is Now Evident

"There has always been more or less talk within the industry about the danger of this producer invasion and would-be monopoly, but never was the danger so clearly evident as it is today, and never has it been so nationally recognized by independent exhibitors as an immediate menace to their individual theatre interests. It must be fought now, and the independent exhibitors must fight together."

PERTINENT COMMENT FROM COAST

Jay Balfour Discusses James Oliver Curwood's Threatened Law Suits—Takes a Fling at State of Nevada—And Adds a Few Bits of Film Gossip

By JAY BALFOUR

A VERY interesting issue is to be raised if James Oliver Curwood, the noted author, goes through with his announced intention of preventing the filming of some of the stories he wrote and sold in the days before fame overtook him and a terrific wealth stared him in the face.

Although no names were mentioned, it is well known that Mr. Curwood referred to Colonel Bill Selig in his recent outpouring of virtuous indignation.

You see it was this way:

Six or seven years ago when James Oliver was just battling for recognition he discovered how easy it was for a writer with imagination to take a lot of money away from the picture producers. At any rate they thought it was a lot of coin in those days. The Colonel was paying a hundred dollars a reel or better and they all wanted his money. Curwood from time to time, disposed of perhaps a hundred novels and short stories to the Selig Polycope Company. He thought it was great stuff then, too.

But as mentioned in the foregoing, fame came and with it big prices for picture rights. Mr. Curwood came in over $30,000 for a single unseen, and got it by return mail.

Of course Colonel Selig wasn’t above all this time. He was watching Curwood’s climb and like the good showman that he is, planning to get aboard as soon as the wave got high enough. Efforts are said to have been made by the author to recover the rights to the stories he sold Selig, but there was nothing doing. Then came the announcement that Selig was going to film “Isabel.”

Curwood’s first successful novel and that he was to follow it with a famous dog story, trade papers carried a rather stingy interview in which Mr. Curwood indicated that he had made his money at the expense of his best stories on the ground that they were sold for one and two reel subjects.

The Curwood theory apparently is that if he sold a play to a stage producer it could not be enlarged to four acts if the prevailing custom was three act plays. It sounds very silly.

Colonel Selig was about the only one of the early producers who not only saw the coming tide but also for written material, but was willing to back his vision with his bank roll and certainly he should be permitted to reap the reward.

Everybody Pickin’ on ‘em

Nevada seems about on the verge of ruining its chief industry. Just why the virtuous reformers of the sagebrush state should pick on two of our chief cinematic idols as a starter for their crusade is a mystery. At any rate Mary’s lawyer who accompanied her to Nevada showed a keen enough interest in him to assure speed, safety and immunity to the process. A Los Angeles jurist some time ago very aptly remarked that more or less perjury is committed in every divorce suit that comes to trial and in Nevada it’s generally more. That’s been the stock in trade of that state. Take away its divorces and it would be like Southern California deprived of its oranges or Hollywood deprived of its studios. At the present writing it looks as though they were going to make an example of Mary and we’re all mighty sorry for her.

Just Can’t Make Them There

No one knows the picture game any better than J. D. Williams, founder and chief mogul of the First National. So when “J. D.,” says this is the only place to make pictures and that they just can’t make ‘em anywhere else, we are bound to sit up and listen. According to Mr. Williams, Los Angeles will always be the economic capital of the world and he declares that the big achievements in pictures will always hear the California trade mark.

Quite MacDonald Company

Sam Rork, pioneer showman, who started in the picture business as a general factotum for Mack Sennett and later organized the Katherine MacDonald company, is understood to have sold his interest in that concern. Several days ago he purchased the screen rights to “The Texas Steer,” one of the best of the old Hoyt farces, and it is understood that First National will take the finished picture. James Young will direct it.

Powers Retires From Universal

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, April 20—Carl Laemmle and R. H. Cohn have completed the sale of the interest in the Universal Film Manufacturing company held by P. A. Powers. Mr. Powers simultaneously resigned as treasurer and severed all connection with Universal. His successor has not yet been appointed.

The deal has been in the course of negotiation for several weeks. It was announced that Mr. Powers retired to devote all of his time to other interests.

Grauman and Paramount Breaking Rumor on Coast

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 20.—A rumor persists here that Sid Grauman and Famous Players-Lasky corporation are coming to the parting of the ways on the Grauman theatre proposition.

According to information from sources in a position to know Grauman and officials of the Famous Players company have been clashing with considerable regularity recently over policy matters affecting the operation of the theatre and particularly with reference to bookings.

Grauman has frequently desired to go outside the Paramount-Artcraft program for pictures but has been blocked until within the past few days when he contracted for two outside productions.

There is a “buy or sell” clause in the Famous Players-Grauman contract and according to the report Grauman is planning to step out of the proposition.

Combination Effected Between Big Companies In Italy and Germany

WASHINGTON—Reports of a combination between Germany’s and Italy’s largest motion picture companies have been received by the department of commerce from Stockholm.

German Universum Film, established during the war by the Deutsche Bank and others, with a capital stock of 30,000,000 marks, acted as agent for Germany’s motion picture propaganda in other countries during the war. The company owns 4,000 picture theatres in Germany, and has about the same number of agents in Russia, Switzerland, the Balkans and Scandinavia.

An agreement has been made with Unione Kinematografica Italiana under which the German company binds itself to purchase all English, American, French and Italian film exclusively through the Italian company.
First National Exhibitors' Circuit Holds Annual Meeting in Chicago

Exhibitor Members, Executives, Salesmen, Producers And Stars Will Attend Gathering Which Opens at Congress Hotel, April 26

Special cars carrying independent exhibitors, First National members, branch managers, salesmen, exploitation men and home office executives, national and territorial trade paper representatives, producers and stars are scheduled to arrive in Chicago on Sunday, April 25, and on Monday, for the convening on April 26 at the Congress Hotel of the second annual convention of the First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

Matters of extreme moment to the entire industry, new methods which affect independent exhibitors, the present forms of film distribution, recently negotiated contracts between First National and stars and producers, and the official launching of Associated First National Pictures, Inc., with the full force of its sub-franchising policy, will occupy the featured positions in the program of activities for the week.

Two special cars leaving New York on Sunday attached to the Broadway Limited, will be occupied by members, branch managers, salesmen, exploitation men, the editors of the trade journals, home office officials, stars and producers. Special First National cars will convey exhibitor members and branch office staffs from Atlanta, Washington, D. C., San Francisco, Los Angeles, Seattle and Dallas, with stops at intermediate centers, including Louisville, Cincinnati, Denver, Salt Lake City, Oklahoma City, Kansas City and St. Louis, where local members and exchange officials will join the several parties en route to Chicago.

Probably the most important event of the week's second circuit announced, will be the assemblies of exhibitor members, exchange managers and salesmen where the full force of its sub-franchising policy, will occupy the featured positions in the program of activities for the week. Concise Account of First National Plans

Second annual convention will open in Chicago at the Congress hotel on April 26.

Attending the gathering will be home office executives, salesmen, branch managers, exploitation men, stars, producers, independent exhibitors and circuit members.

Delegates will arrive in Chicago in special cars on Sunday and Monday.

Associated First National Pictures, Inc., will be launched officially.

Meeting will be divided into two divisions, the members attending one and exchange managers, salesmen, etc., the other.

New methods which affect the independent exhibitor will be discussed, as will the present form of film distribution and the recently negotiated contracts between First National and stars and producers.

Norma and Constance Talmadge will be present.

Joseph Schenck and Whitman Bennett will address those present.

The convention will open with speeches of welcome and a few opening remarks by the president.

On Monday, the convention will be opened by speeches of welcome and a few opening remarks by the president.

It is expected that Mr. Schenck will state clearly and finally his knowledge of the facts upon which these rumors have been based and explain his position in a way that will leave no future opportunity for repetitions of what he terms "annoying competitive practices."

Whitman Bennett, who recently resigned his position as production manager for Famous Players-Lasky Corporation to enter the ranks of independent producers with Lionel Barrymore as the star in a series of four special attractions which he will make for First National, has announced his intention of...
Quits Pulpit to Get Converts as a Star
In Comedy Subjects

Backsliding church members will back slide despite the pleadings of a pious clergyman for his charges to "hit the sawdust trail."

At least that is the general view of the situation as summed up by the Rev. George LeRoi Clarke who has been a regularly ordained preacher since he was 24 years of age.

But Pastor Clarke has had a pet theory that the gospel of happiness and laughter will convert via the motion picture screen than from the pulpit.

To put this theory into practice, Pastor Clarke is reported to be going to be featured in twenty-six two-reel comedies. Prominent raunchers in Northern California have financed Paragon Pictures Corporation for producing the short subjects, which will be published by the New Film Company of Los Angeles.

Fred Jefferson is directing the comedies and James Linton and Johnny Hayes are supporting the new comedian.

N. A. M. P. I. Fights
Cohen's Bill Before
New York Assembly

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

ALBANY, N. Y.—With four days remaining before the adjournment of the state legislature, the fight for and against the so-called "advance-deposit" bill is in its final stages. Passed by the Senate a week ago, it is now before the rules committee of the House.

Sydney S. Cohen, president of the New York exhibitors league, together with W. A. Callihan of Rochester and W. H. Linton of Utica, are making every effort to bring the bill up for a vote.

Roy K. Fuller, representing the N. A. M. P. I., is leading the fight to prevent its passage before adjournment.

The bill in effect would make "advance deposit" a trust fund, prevent their being mingled with other funds, and would compel the return of interest to the person making the deposit.

Aschers Take Option
On Milwaukee House

An option on the Merrill theatre in Milwaukee has been held by Ascher Brothers of Chicago, owners of a circuit of motion picture houses, according to reports current in film circles.

No official announcement has been issued by Aschers regarding the future policy of the theatre.

Kaufman Seeks New York Playhouse for Premieres

Albert A. Kaufman, who recently formed a producing alliance with Marshall Neilan, is in New York closing an arrangement for taking over a Broadway theatre where he will work out several new ideas he has in connection with the public presentation of Dorothy Phillips, Rex Holubar and Agnes Ayres Productions.

Mr. Kaufman stated that it was not his intention to become interested in the exhibiting field, but that his plans involving the purchase of a New York theatre were formulated solely for the purpose of giving his productions their national premieres in New York for long runs.

Cohen's Novelty Reel Pictures Film Stars

Producer Declares "Screen Snapshots" To Be Different From Other Subjects

Jack Cohen announces that "Screen Snapshots," the new novelty reel which he will issue weekly, is unlike any other ever marketed.

"The trade must not confuse 'Screen Snapshots' with any other film weekly now or ever on the market," he says, "although I expect imitators to be offering substitutes shortly. I have aimed to produce something really different and if my judgment is correct I think I have succeeded."

According to Mr. Cohen, the new reel will show intimate views of film favorites at home and in the studio. It is to be an animated fans' column and is to contain the visualization of the things one reads in the newspaper motion picture columns.

Practically every star of consequence will be seen at some time or other in "Screen Snapshots," it is said. In the first issues are seen Nazimova doing an inspired dance; Charles Ray's technique in stealing a kiss; a comedy in which the Carter de Haven, George Beban and Lottie Pickford children imitate their elders in signing contracts; scenes at studio lunch, and the like; and Mary McLaren annexing new pets; Sesnie Hayakawa resisting the vamp advances of Dagmar Godowsky, and many other intimate glimpses of screen life.

Mr. Cohen has produced many single-reel features for the Fox News Series and he was editing three weekly newspapers a week. He will devote most of his time to the personal editing of "Screen Snapshots." No arrangements have as yet been made for the distribution of this feature.

D. W. Griffith's May 31 Issue Is "Black Beach"

David Wark Griffith's next First National publication is "Black Beach," which will be issued on May 31. Included in the cast of the picture are Richard Barthelmess and Carol Dempster. The picture is replete, it is said, with instances of commanding interest from a domestic, romantic and purely civic standpoint.

Taking up his story with the return of an innocent man from the penitentiary, the picture will revolve about the chain of events that linked the persecution with a revelation of astounding character. Others in the cast are George MacQuarrie, Anders Randolf, Florence Short, Craufurd Kent, Adolphe Lestina, William James and Jack Manning.

Fire Association Meeting

The fire prevention regulations committee of the National Association has been invited by the National Fire Prevention Association to send delegates to the annual meeting of that organization in Chicago on May 4. The National Association is affiliated with the National Fire Protection Association and was represented at the last annual meeting held in Ottawa.

Cohen to Organize New Exhibitor Association at Cleveland in June

New York League's President Issues Call for Convention—Lists Problems Which Theatre Owners Must Prepare to Face

NEW YORK, April 20—After months of preparatory work, Sydney S. Cohen, president of the Motion Picture Exhibitors League of New York State, has issued a call for a convention in Cleveland the week of June 7 at which a new national exhibitors' association is to be launched.

Sixteen existing state organizations are said to be pledged to the movement: the American Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania and West Virginia, Cleveland Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Ohio, Colorado Exhibitors' Association, Exhibitors Protective League of Minnesota, North Dakota, South Dakota and Iowa, Illinois Exhibitors' Alliance, Kansas State Exhibitors' Association, Los Angeles Theatre Owners' Association, Miami Valley Exhibitors' Association, Michigan Exhibitors' Association, Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York State, Motion Picture Exhibitors' Association of Wisconsin, Nebraska Exhibitors' Association, North Carolina Exhibitors' Association, Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit, South Carolina Exhibitors' League, and Texas Exhibitors' Circuit.

In sending out his call, Mr. Cohen declares that the greatest evil confronting the exhibitor is "the question of the producer-distributor trying to create a monopoly throughout the entire country by securing and building of theatres in direct competition with us."

Warns Against Percentage

"You cannot tell what channels they are using," he continues. "It may be 'percentage booking,' which they are using now for the purpose of securing the data necessary for them to promote a new theatre in your territory, or it may be through some so-called cooperative exhibitors' association. So let the 100 per cent exhibitors, the independent exhibitors, who have no affiliation whatsoever with any other branch of the business and whose livelihood comes from the box office alone, get together for one concerted drive."

Other questions which he declares must be taken up immediately are:

The deposit system, which he says must be wiped out.

The 5 per cent tax, which on account of increased rentals is three times as large as congress anticipated.

The percentage system, which he declares must be killed.

The N. A. M. P. I. ruling on posters, which he says must be rescinded.

An equitable contract.

Refusal of exchanges to ship film C. O. D.

Must Organize by Fall

In conclusion, he declares that the organization must be completed as soon as possible, at least by fall. He urges exhibitors' associations, not yet affiliated, to arrange for representatives at the convention.

Universal City, Cal., Has Adopted Commission Form of Government

Commission form of government, with the affairs of the screen municipality directed by a committee of three men, has been adopted at Universal City, Cal., according to an announcement from the New York offices of Universal Film Manufacturing Company.

The board appointed to administer the affairs of the community includes: Isadore Bernstein, Sam Van Ronkel and Louis M. Loeb. President of Universal, will hold rank as mayor of Universal City and will be an ex-officio member of the commission. In his absence the commission will be supreme.

Universal City is one of the strangest municipalities in the world. It was built eight years ago by Carl Laemmle. It covers about 600 acres in the fertile San Fernando Valley, near Los Angeles, and was built by the Universal Company solely as a production plant for Universal pictures. It includes almost every kind of terrain from mud flats to mountain-like hills. It has most of the facilities and improvements of ordinary cities, including a postoffice, a bank, a circulating library, restaurant, garages, boarding houses, a park, a zoo, a fire department, police, its own lighting plant and waterworks; all in addition to its moving picture studios and workshops.

Commission form of government, while often two or three times that many persons are at work in its confines, depending upon the kind of motion pictures being filmed.

The new commission plan has gone into effect, as said, at the most critical time of the year, when film producing activities are at their height, preparing the way for fall publications. Mr. Laemmle believes the commission will solve the problem of film city government.

Formally With Paramount
Van Ronkel has been associated with the film industry for many years, although he has never been identified directly in the production of pictures. Loeb comes to Universal from Famous Players-Lasky Corporation. Laemmle directed the first great studio.

Exploitation Possibilities Unusual in Vidor’s Second Independent Picture

King Vidor’s second independent production for publication through First National Exhibitors’ Circuit will be one of the most distinctive to exhibitors, it is announced, inasmuch as it possesses unusual exploitation possibilities, the production being made by a well-known director from a book by a famous author.

When Ellis Parker Butler wrote “The Jack-Knife Man” for publication by Century Company, New York, it found immediate and widespread popularity because of its blending of pathos and humor. Butler has no hesitancy in characterizing it as his best and most widely read novel. “Pigs Is Pigs” and “Philo Gubb” planted Butler firmly in the minds of the reading public in all English-speaking countries and now, having written short stories numbering into the hundreds, his name is almost a household word.

Photographed at Muscatine
“The Family Honor,” Vidor’s first independent production for First National, has brought innumerable new followers to the creator of “The Turn in the Road.”

Scenes for “The Jack-Knife Man” were taken at Muscatine, la., where the story was laid by Butler, and, in addition, numerous scenes were photographed along the San Joaquin, a river of scenic grandeur.

A notable cast has been assembled and others will be added as their work is needed in the production. Whimsical and lovable Peter Lane is being portrayed by Fred A. Turner, who did noteworthy work in screen plays produced by Griffith and other well-known directors.

Todd Cast as Tramp
After considering numerous actors for the role of “Boogie,” the troubadour tramp, Mr. Vidor selected Harry Todd. At the conclusion of Todd’s work for Vidor he will be featured in a series of comedy plays. Willis Marks will be seen as Rev. Rasmus Briggles, the sanctimonious president of a child-saving association. Lillian Leighton will enact the peppy but kind-hearted Widow Potter.

For the boy, Buddy, Vidor believes he has a youngster who will be hailed as the find of the season. This is his first work before the camera. The boy’s name is being withheld for the time being until it is decided whether he shall be given a screen name or use his own.

Most Satisfactory Story
In speaking of the novel Vidor said: “I don’t know when I have read a book which affected me so deeply as Mr. Butler’s ‘The Jack-Knife Man.’ It is a story which I have always been seeking, yet never have been able to find. It has a wealth of heart-interest, good touches of humor. The interest increases as the story progresses.”

“The characters are human in their actions—Mr. Butler having written the story around real people—and the actors all have entered heartily into the spirit of their roles.”

Interior scenes for the story are being photographed at Vidor’s Hollywood studio.

Former President Announces That His Retirement From Active Management Is Result of a Disagreement in Policy

Isaac Wolper, who organized Mayflower Photoplay Corporation in 1918, has retired from active management of the company and Benjamin A. Prager, former treasurer, has filled the vacancy left by Wolper's resignation.

Interest in the concern will be retained by Mr. Wolper, who has promised to co-operate in the successful operation of the company. In the announcement of his resignation, Mr. Wolper stated that he would start production immediately under his own name.

McKay Made General Manager

Mr. Wolper's statement of his plans explained his retirement from the active management of Mayflower as the result of a disagreement in policy. After assuming the presidency of the company, Mr. Prager announced the promotion of John W. McKay, former general manager of distribution, to general manager of Mayflower.

The announcement given out by the former president said:

"I have been contemplating for some time producing under my own name, as I believe there is a bigger future for me by operating in this manner. At present I am hunting for a location for offices and as soon as I can find space and establish my headquarters I will make a definite statement as to policy and plans.

Mr. Prager, who is taking my place as president of Mayflower, has been with the company ever since its organization and is familiar with every detail of the business. As a consequence, he is fitted to carry on the work in a most capable manner."

Accomplished Great Results

It was the result of Mr. Wolper's efforts that the arrangement was made with George Loane Tucker for producing "The Miracle Man." As head of Mayflower, Mr. Wolper is credited by his former associates with having accomplished more big things in a shorter time than anyone in the picture business, which, according to Mr. Prager, is the reason the company is anxious to have him retain his Mayflower stock.

General Manager McKay has been with the company ever since it started and this step upward is in reward for untiring service, President Prager stated.

Mr. McK. McKay said that work would be pushed as rapidly as possible on all Mayflower productions that are now in the making and that pictures already finished would be issued as rapidly as marketing conditions warranted.

"At present," he said, "deals are pending for the manner in which these pictures are to be released, but as yet no transaction has been closed. We have a number of very big productions for 1920, and I want to be sure that we choose the best possible means of getting these features before the public, thus insuring the maximum of success for each picture."

"The Woman He Chose"

The Swedish production, "The Woman He Chose," which is an adaptation of "The Girl from the Marshcroft," opened an indefinite engagement recently at the Ziegfeld theatre in Chicago. The story is from the pen of Dr. Selma Lagerlof, who is one of the few women who has been honored by the award of the Nobel Prize for literature.

Mickey Film Corporation of Chicago holds the world rights on the six-part production, which in point of beautiful scenery and photography is exceptional.

Members of the cast were chosen for the exactness with which they fitted into the roles assigned them. The result is a picture that conveys the idea that a person is looking directly into the daily home life of the characters.

Dooley Is Completing His Five-Part Comedy

Radin Pictures announces that Johnny Dooley, the popular Ziegfeld "Follies" star, will make his appearance in a five-part farce-comedy now being completed under the direction of Jack Schultz.

The final scene will be photographed in Philadelphia. "Skinning Skinners" is the title of this special, which is the first of a series of three five-part feature comedies starring Dooley to be made during the year. Prominent in the supporting cast are Lillian Hall, Irma Harrison and Maurice Powers.
Jans Films "Madonnas and Men" for Distribution By State Right Buyers

Herman F. Jans, president of Jans Pictures, Inc., announces that "Madonnas and Men," a specially elaborate production, is being made as the third picture under the Jans banner for distribution by state right buyers. B. A. Rolfe, who supervised the two previous pictures which featured Olive Tell, is directing the third.

Mr. Jans says this new feature will eclipse anything previously for his organization. The picture will be in eight parts.

No Player Featured

"Madonnas and Men" will be placed upon the screen, however, no one particular star used. It has been Mr. Jans' desire; it is said, to place a feature film on the market that was so big and so strong it would need no one star to make it a money-making attraction for the exhibitor. In this respect there is no one particular star mentioned in this production. Special stress, however, has been placed upon the selection of the cast, it is claimed.

The most prominent players mentioned in the cast are Evans Burroughs Fontaine, who has been making a name for herself in Ziegfeld's "Follies"; Edmund Love, leading man and now playing leads in some popular Broadway productions; Anders Randolph, Gustav von Seyffertitz, Raye Dean and Fair Binney, sister of Constance Binney.

An Appealing Story

The story, according to the producer, is one with an exceptional appeal to modern day picture patrons. It opens with scenes in Rome during the time when it was customary to feed Christian girls to the lions and perform other kinds of tortures upon them. It draws a parallel between the action of a certain Roman emperor and his disregard of the high ideals and virtues of womanhood as compared to similar characters during modern times.

It is understood that the nature of the story in dealing with the time of the Romans and also night life in a typical American city affords opportunity for the presentation of lavish and massive sets and, according to Mr. Jans, that no expense is being spared in supplying the best that can be had. The scenes in the amphitheatre, the lion's den, emperor's palace and many of the cabaret scenes, it is said, have been offered with a great expenditure of money.

"Madonnas and Men" will be finished in about four or five weeks, it is believed, and will then be offered to the independent exchanges.

Twelve Million Feet
Of Film Exported

WASHINGTON — Figures showing the exports of motion picture film during February have just been obtained by the Washington bureau of the Exhibitors Herald from the bureau of foreign and domestic commerce. A total of 1,172,294 linear feet of unexposed film, valued at $16,969, and 11,541,923 feet of exposed film, valued at $599,248, were shipped abroad during the month. The largest users of unexposed film were Argentina, Canada, Mexico and Brazil, while England, Australia and Canada were our most important markets for exposed film.

Character Pictures
Signs Hazel Hudson
For Important Role

Character Pictures Corporation announces the signing of Hazel Hudson for one of the principal roles in "The Isle of Destiny," which will be the first Character Picture featuring Paul Gilmore.

Though young in years Miss Hudson has had a long and varied career upon the stage, both in musical comedy and stock. She recently closed the season with "Maytime," and has also appeared in the following stage successes: "La, La Lucille," "Canary Cottage" and "Going Up."

Miss Hudson gained her early training as a dancer and following this went into vaudeville for several months. Her unusual beauty won the attention of several of America's foremost artists, with the result that she was much sought after as a model. Her likeness has appeared upon the covers of many of the leading periodicals.

Later Miss Hudson went into stock appearing in such plays as "War and Peace," "The Girl of the Golden West" and "Forty-five Minutes from Broadway," gaining for herself the experience and groundwork so necessary in dramatic expression. Miss Hudson was selected for the part in "The Isle of Destiny" only after the company officials had interviewed over one hundred prospects. The signing of Hazel Hudson is in line with the policy of Character Pictures to engage only the most suitable players for their plays. Miss Hudson is now at Oriental Island, Florida, with Paul Gilmore and the rest of the Character Company which is producing "The Isle of Destiny." The entire company will shortly travel into the interior of Florida to film some tropical scenes.

American Projectors
Preferred In Europe

Nicholas Pover Company says that not only are American pictures preferred abroad, but that American projectors, which cost more than foreign makes, also are in demand. The company announces that 50 per cent of the machines used in the United Kingdom are Pover's.
Cooperation of Papers Is Sought by A. M. P. A. in Acquisition of Spargo
Newspaperman Will Be Field Secretary in Drive to Establish Closer Relations Between Industry and Daily Press

John S. Spargo, well-known newspaperman, has been appointed field secretary of Associated Motion Picture Advertisers, Inc., to direct the organization's nation-wide campaign to establish closer co-operation between the daily newspapers and the film industry.

It was decided by a unanimous vote at a recent meeting of the advertisers to employ Mr. Spargo in the hope that the existing conditions which have made it difficult for the newspaper publishers and the motion picture advertisers to meet each other half way might be better.

Co-operation Has Been Slight

In the past each has felt that the other wanted it all; each has felt that the other was giving all and getting little back. Mr. Advertiser has felt lost in facing any kind of a country-wide newspaper campaign for the exploitation of films, while Mr. Publisher has felt that his paper was just as much entitled to consideration as 2,000 other similar publications.

The result has been that neither has got anywhere. There has been little co-operation, with the exception of a few brilliant exceptions. But these exceptions have proven the rule and finally have shown the way in which the two can be brought together, at a time when each needs the other more than ever before.

What the organization can do for the good of the industry and of the interests that are represented in its membership.

Once before we had a plan of national scope to assist the government in a great work at the time we entered the great war. Circumstances so shaped themselves at that time that our efforts were greatly circumscribed.

Financial Support Sought

"But nevertheless we earned the gratitude and thanks of a great general, who sincerely appreciated our efforts, though he was unable to use them to the extent we hoped. There is no such obstacle to our present plan. We have the whole industry. The financial plan has met with the support and approval of such companies as First National, Famous Players-Lasky, Universal, Pathé, Selznick, Metro, Reelart, D. W. Griffith, etc. They are whole-heartedly in sympathy with our object and committed to its prosecution.

"We are fortunate in securing the services of Mr. Spargo, whose acquaintance among newspapermen is of the widest and who has been connected with a score of the best papers in all parts of the country. He is an enthusiast on the possibility of bringing the newspaper and the screen into closer co-operation and has a sound and practical plan by which it may be accomplished.

"One of his purposes is to make a careful and analytical survey of all the larger cities from the standpoint of motion picture exploitation and the statistics will be of infinite value to every exploitation manager in the A. M. P. A."

LOS ANGELES, April 20—"What Women Love" is the title of the new Annette Kellermann comedy-drama Sol Lesser has just completed.

Milwaukee Dance to Attract Big Turnout F-I-L-M Club Ball April 24th Will Bring Many Visitors From Wide Area

MILWAUKEE, WIS., April 20.—With delegations from Chicago and Minneapolis promised as well as scores of visitors assured from nearby cities, the F-I-L-M Club's ball to be held here April 24 promises to be one of the brilliant social events of the year.

The event was originally planned as a "get-together" for Milwaukee's exchange men and exhibitors. Newspapers gave so much publicity to the ball that it became a "civic affair." Then out-of-town film men showed interest. Today there is considerable doubt as to whether everybody who is planning to go will be able to get in the hall.

Miss Alice Howell, comedienne, has promised to be present. She is working at the Emerald studio, Chicago, and will be accompanied to Milwaukee by Mr. and Mrs. Fred Ireland. The Minneapolis delegation will be led by Al Steffes, president of the T. P. A.

Officers of the F-I-L-M Club in charge of arrangements are: J. L. Souther, president; George Levine, vice-president; Robert Hesse, secretary; Harold J. Fitzgerald, treasurer; Walter Bauer, press representative, and Irvin Rink, sergeant-at-arms.

Edna Purviance Is Hurt In Automobile Accident

LOS ANGELES—Edna Purviance, who has supported Charlie Chaplin in several productions, was injured seriously recently when an automobile in which she was riding was struck by another car. The actress received a painful wound on the right side of her face.
Cut and Title "The Silent Barrier" For May Publication by Hodkinson

W. W. Hodkinson Corporation announces the completion of "The Silent Barrier," first of Louis Tracy's widely-read novels produced for the screen by Louis Tracy Productions, Inc. The new production is being cut and titled at the Leah Baird studios, Cliffside, N. J., under the supervision of William Worthington.

"The Silent Barrier," a drama of the Swiss Alps, was enacted for the most part at Lake Placid, N. Y., and Director Worthington had as his chief aid and art director Ernest Des Bailleux, the noted Swiss illustrator, specially engaged by Charles C. Burr, treasurer of Louis Tracy Productions, Inc., because of his wide reputation as an expert in all that pertains to scenery, costume, architecture and outdoor customs of Switzerland.

Some of the snow scenes are said to be of an unusual character, and all of them have a direct bearing on the gripping plot in the Tracy story, and include plunges over precipices, mountain sled races, skiing competitions and other difficult mountain-scene feats.

The production has its cast Sheldon Lewis, Gladys Hulette, Fuller Mellow, Florence Dixon, Donald Cameron, Corinne Barker, Mathilde Brundage, Jack Raymond and Joseph Burke.

The interior scenes were photographed at the American hotel, Lake Placid, the Gedney Farm hotel in Westchester, and finally at the Leah Baird studios, where an entire floor was transformed into a pretentious Swiss home for the enactment of the climaxes. Photography was handled by Adolph Mueller, former chief cinematographer at Universal City.

The first Louis Tracy production will in all probability be published by the Hodkinson organization the latter part of May, to be preceded by an extensive national advertising campaign.

Alexander Appointed Foreign Sales Agent For Special Pictures

William Alexander of Alexander Film Corporation has arranged with Louis W. Thompson to act as sales agent for the entire foreign rights of Special Pictures Corporation's output.

D. M. Thomas, eastern division manager of Special Pictures, announces the appointment of the following men and offices:

Selznick Takes Fans!

Scenes of Mack Story

Selznick Pictures Corporation announces that the final scenes of the Selznick-Willard Mack story, "The Valley of Doubt," have been completed. The story was written especially for Selznick by Mr. Mack, the noted playwright.

The leading roles were played by Thurston Hall, Arline Pretty and Anna Lehr under the direction of Burton George. R. Cecil Smith adapted the story.

Patterson Charges Plot to Defeat Plans

"The big-money effort to dominate the motion picture is not a bug bear. It is an actual danger, and if the exhibitors do not have facts and figures to reveal at the Chicago meeting to show that it is, unless the independent exhibitors fight, fights hard, fights now and fights together, there won't be an independent exhibitor in another two years. There have been efforts before to monopolize the business. These efforts were directed chiefly at a monopoly of production, and because production is an art and cannot be 'cornered,' the attempt failed. It is possible to monopolize theatres, to effect an absolute control of theatre ownership and control of the avenues of distribution, big capital will quickly accomplish what it has tried to do before. The prime effort now is centered on the worth-while independent exhibitor whose localities offer even half an opportunity to the would-be producer-exhibitors to get a foothold with houses of their own, cut prices, buy up the best film services, and do anything else necessary to force the present independent exhibitors down and out as competitors of consequence.

The exhibitor who doesn't fully appreciate the danger which confronts him, who says that the menace we see is 'bosh,' needs only to attend the Chicago meeting to convince himself. It is duty he owes to himself and his theatre. The independent exhibitors cannot be wiped out, forced to sell out, or frozen out, if they will stand up and fight together. There are enough of us to successfully protect our interests if we get into action, and we will—in Chicago.

"This meeting is not called for the purpose of forming an association, but to determine, in open conference and discussion, with facts and figures to reason from, the best method of combating the danger of producer monopoly in the theatre field, and it seems to me that the organization of a national, permanent association of the real independent exhibitors can accomplish this better than any other method.

Organization Will Be Fighting Body

"Whatever develops out of the Chicago meeting, you can be very sure that it will not be a passive organization, nor a social club, nor a political proposition. It will be, whatever form the meeting takes, an aggressive, hard-hitting fighting unit.

"From the responses I have received to date, it is certain that many of the biggest and most important exhibitors in the country will be there, and for every one of them there will be two or more of the independent theatre owners from the smaller cities and towns who have had sufficient experience with producer exhibitor theatres or producer-exhibitor agents, or who know exhibitors who have had this sort of opposition confronting them to realize the need for immediate action to check the encroachment.

"Mr. Sig Samuels, who owns the Criterion Theatre is behind me, heart and soul, in my call for a national mass meeting."
METRO OFFICIALS, AND A FEW OF THE STARS, AUTHORS AND WRITERS WHO WILL BE RESPONSIBLE FOR THE NEW YEAR'S OUTPUT

World Distribution Right Acquired By Capital Film for “Witch’s Gold”

Production Made in the Oil Fields of Texas Will Introduce a New Screen Star, Davide, to Motion Picture Patrons

The world distribution right for “Witch’s Gold,” a dramatic picture of life and environment in the great Texas oil fields, has been acquired by Capital Film Company, with headquarters in Chicago. The contract for this first of a series of productions made in the atmosphere of the gushers was closed by B. Herbert Milligan, general manager of Capital.

A new star is featured in this subject, her screen name being Davide. The story has been written around the personality of this new star, it is said. She was a student of dramatic art for several years and for three years she studied for Grand Opera in Paris. She has given up her ambition in this direction to devote herself entirely to motion picture work.

Motion picture men who have viewed the picture are loud in its praise of it. The exteriors were made in the oil fields where the greatest gushers have been brought in during the last year or two.

In making the production the company twice was taken to the fields in Northern Texas to complete exterior scenes. M. A. Dodge of M. A. Dodge Film Company, producer of the production, personally directed.

Executives declare that many inquiries have been received at the Chicago offices from the various exchange units throughout the United States and Canada. They believe that in the already noted situation of this picture Capital has one of the novelties of the year for publicity.

Second Blackwood Play Is Produced (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 29—John Blackwood, Ince scenario editor, had his newest play “Coal Oil Johnny” produced at San Diego last week. This makes two in three weeks, as his “A Dollar Down” was produced at the Majestic, Los Angeles, two weeks ago.

Doris Keane Is Completing Vehicle for Screen Debut

Doris Keane is finishing the last scenes of her latest stage success, “Romance,” by Edward Sheldon, in which she will make her screen debut. It will be published in May by the Artists Corporation, producer of the production, personally directed.

In a recent trip through Europe, where he was with the National Motion Picture Corporations, Chet Withey is again making plans for the production. Miss Keane plans to leave for Europe after completing the subject.

New Independent Chicago Exchange Opens Sales Drive on Six Pictures

The Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation, Chicago’s new independent exchange which is making a special appeal to exhibitors with the slogan “Contracts without the customary deposits,” has opened its sales drive for its first six pictures with signal success. Among the contracts announced is one with Lubliner and Trinz for a number of their houses.

“When I came west a short time ago and opened offices at 207 South Wahash avenue,” said T. S. Dodge, western division manager, “I felt that our policy would be popular and that our announce- ment of releases would meet with the approval of the exhibitors, but the rapidity and ease with which we have closed contracts are little less than astonishing to me.

Require No Deposits

“We are going to give the exhibitor the best that production affords and we ask for no deposits. This can’t fail to interest the exhibitor, who at the present time is almost ridden to death by the deposit system. With us, he comes to terms, books our pictures and puts up no money. We simply take the his money to capitalize our business.

“Our keynote is going to be a fair and square deal all around. I know this is heard on every hand, but our company on the very start proves its assertion by not requiring deposits. An exhibitor who deals with us don’t have to have enough money to retire on before he can even start in business.”

Phil H. Solomon has been appointed manager of the Chicago office. He is known throughout the territory because of his connection with Metro and George Keane exchanges which covers a period of several years. During this time he has built up an enviable record for fair dealing with the exhibitor.

As sales representatives, Daniel Ryan formerly with the Republic and also with the Wisconsin Film Distributing Corporation, Harold, Loeb, formerly attached to the selling force of the Republic, and George Weinberg, formerly with the Bee Hive Film Corporation have been engaged.

Solomon Is Pleased

In discussing the company’s affairs Mr. Solomon, the new manager, said: “The enthusiastic manner in which exhibitors have received our announcement of the first six releases, points ahead an exceptionally busy time for the Masterpiece organization. Already lar numbers of theatre owners have vis- ited our offices and have pledged their support of our policy and have asked us to pledge signing contracts.”

The first pictures offered by Masterpiece are: “The Trap,” “Friday the 13th,” “Souls Adrift,” “The Pawn’s Fate,” “The Dancer’s Peril,” and “The Man of the Hour.” The stars being used are Alice Brady, Robert Winkler, George Beban and Ethel Clayton.

Cline Leaves Fox (Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 29—Ed Cline has resigned from Fox Sun Studio comedies to head a new brand of comedies to be made for Metro.
Five Million Dollar British Firm Is Formed to Invade American Market

Vice President of Corporation Now in Los Angeles To Study U. S. Methods and to Discover Way of Introducing English Films

A $5,000,000 British concern, to be known as Alliance Film Corporation of England, has been organized for the expressed purpose of invading the American market with English made motion pictures.

The vice-president of the organization, W. Walter Crotch, who now is in this country, is financed in this new project by an English literary man who has entered the production field "because I want to see much better literature on the screen." He is said to be a scholar and writer of note and is one of the greatest Dickensonian authorities in England.

Crotch Studies American Methods

Mr. Crotch at present is in Los Angeles. His purpose in coming to the United States is to study American methods of production and distribution and to discover the best way to introduce English films to the American market.

Alliance Film Corporation is constructing just outside of London, a large film city. Work has been halted temporarily by labor troubles and the company has started production activities at the old London Film Company's studios at St. Margaret's-on-Thames.

Three prominent English actors will be featured by the company. Matheson Lang now is at work on "Carnival," Gerald de Manrier and A. E. Mathes also will be starred.

Supervised by Americans

"We must acknowledge the supremacy of American production methods and are willing and anxious to learn them," says Mr. Crotch. "We are out to perfect our organization in such a way that our English stories in films shall be produced under the supervision of American directors and our actors and actresses trained to act in the American way.

"We believe that Great Britain can supply stories and themes to the American people which will come to them with a freshness which, we are fully alive to the fact that such stories have not to be presented in the best possible way and must follow to a large extent American ideas and customs."

"The film can provide a real link between our two nations, between which here already is intercourse and sympathy."

No Distribution Agreement

"I confess that I have not yet come to a final decision as to how our products will be the most effectively distributed so that our main object may be attained. For several weeks I have been gathering facts on trade conditions and American methods of exploitation, advertising and distribution in New York.

"I hope later to be able to say authoritatively whether we shall pursue our purpose through one of your large distributing organizations or by the sale of territorial rights or by creating a distributing organization of our own."

A large expenditure has been made by Mr. Crotch for American studio equipment.

Vitagraph Will Issue In May Terhune Story Featuring Alice Joyce

Vitagraph will publish its next Alice Joyce production, "Dollars and The Woman," in May. Miss Joyce has completed the final scene at Vitagraph's Brooklyn studios and the finishing touches are being put on the film. The direction was by George Terwilliger. Robert Gordon is Miss Joyce's new leading man.

"Dollars and The Woman" is an adaptation of a story by Albert Payson Terhune, with the scenario by Lucien Hubbard.

The story revolves around the experiences of a young society pair whose original fortune dwindles rapidly from extravagance and who are compelled to use heroic methods to keep up appearances. More than 300 well dressed men and richly gowned women take part as extra players in hotel scenes in the picture, it is said.

Lesser to Distribute Inspirational Picture

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 20—Sol Lesser has taken over the world distribution of "That Something," an inspirational picture made by the Herman Film company and dedicated to the Rotary Clubs of the world.

HARRY HAM
Foreign representative for Marshall Neilan, who is making advance arrangements for making European subjects under Mr. Neilan's direction.

Harry Ham Arrives in London to Arrange for Neilan's Trip Abroad

Harry Ham, Marshall Neilan's foreign representative, has arrived in London to arrange for the production of European subjects made under Mr. Neilan's direction. Passage has been engaged for an entire producing unit which will accompany Mr. Neilan abroad. A large part of the boat, it is said, will be reserved for the use of the film people.

During the trip over it is planned to have the company study scripts of the pictures to be staged. Mr. Ham is enthusiastic in his cable reports regarding conditions abroad.

In addition to his producing staff Mr. Neilan will take over with him a complete outfit including several new machines in the way of electrical appliances on which he has been experimenting for the past six months. Activities at the Neilan studio in Hollywood are being speeded up so that a third production following "Don't Ever Marry," will be completed before he leaves.

Fourth National Picture Production Is Announced

Lewis J. Selznick, president of National Picture Theatres, Inc., announces that the fourth National Pictures' production will be "The Shadow of Darkened Windows." The first three pictures are: "Just a Wife," "Blind Youth" and "Invisible Divorce."

This fourth production, it is stated, will be produced on a lavish scale, and that the cast will include the names of photoplay stars. Henry Kolker will direct the production.

Garsson Buys Ascher Film

Fine Art Pictures, Inc., has purchased from Ascher Productions the five-part comedy feature, "Up in Mary's Attic," according to Murray W. Garsson, president of Fine Arts. The picture will be published under another title. Harry Gribbon and Eva Novak are the featured players.
THINKS STORY ONE OF HIS BEST
James Oliver Curwood Wires Albert E. Smith
That He Hopes Vitagraph Adaptation of "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" Makes a Million

James Oliver Curwood, famous author, has wired Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, that he considers "The Courage of Marge O'Doone" one of the best stories he has written. Vitag-graph has adapted the story into a big special production.
In his message to Mr. Smith, the author said:
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is one of my best books. I hope you make a million with it. All best wishes."
Production of the story was supervised personally on the West Coast by Mr. Smith. The film has arrived at the company's Brooklyn studio, and, according to John M. Quinn, general manager, prints will be distributed to the exchanges throughout the United States and Canada within a short time.

Typical Curwood Story
Mr. Curwood's statement is considered very interesting in view of the high prominence now enjoyed by him as a result of the success of "Back to God's Country," "Hare's Son of Kazan," "God's Country and the Woman" and "The River's End," which have already been published.
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" is now on the eve of its publication, according to Vitagraph, with big exploitation campaign behind it. It already has been given extensive advertising. The leading newspapers and magazines throughout the country have declared
"The Courage of Marge O'Doone" to be one of the literary triumphs of the decade. It is a story of the typical Cur-wood style, dealing with the wild country of the Northwest bordering on the Arctic. Its characters are rugged creatures who pit their courage and strength against the ferocious animals and the terrible rigors of blizzard and cold.

In order to reproduce in visual form the fascinating scenes of the story, Vitagraph sent its company into territory previously unscanned by the eye of the camera. David Smith, the director, induced his players to camp among the ridges of the Sierras in the very dead of winter and actually live for weeks the lives of Mr. Curwood's rugged characters. Pauline Marks has the title role, and co-starring with her is Nile Welch.

One Player Injured
The other notable characters are huge grizzly bears and a third is an outlaw dog, these animals enacting clashes of tusk and claw against bone and flesh.

It is a matter of comment throughout the film trade that a human life very nearly went into the price of this picture. This was on the occasion of the near escape of Tara, the grizzly. A score of film players and attaches of the company, led by Albert E. Smith, pursued the animal for miles in an effort to effect its recapture, but properly armed to kill the brute it necessary to protect the inhabitants of the surrounding countryside.

Vincente Howard, one of the players, came in close contact with the animal and was torn terribly by its claws. Almost the whole right side of his face was clawed away and it was necessary to graft skin from a fellow-player on the wound. Mr. Howard is now reported as recovering.
Mr. Curwood has been invited to be one of the first to see in finished form the film version of this story.

NEW FOX THEATRE FOR BROOKLYN

Handsome photoplay house to be erected at Flatbush Avenue and Albermarle Road, Brooklyn, N. Y., which will have a seating capacity of 3,500.

Somebody's on the Wire

William Collier's first production for Selznick Enterprises will be "The Servant Question," according to Myron Selznick. The subject is said to afford the comedian ample opportunity to inject his personality into many laughable situations.

William Fox to Complete Construction of Theatre
Just Leased in Brooklyn

NEW YORK.—William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, announces that he has leased the new Albermarle theatre at Flatbush avenue and Albermarle road, Brooklyn, and that he will make the structure one of the largest and most beautiful playhouses in the city. It will be devoted to pictures and vaudeville.

More than two months ago Mr. Fox completed plans for building a large theatre on Flatbush avenue, between Ti-den avenue and Beverly road. Representatives of the Albermarle theatre at the same time were planning their playhouse. In view of the fact that two large theatres were contemplated within such a short distance of each other, conferences were held between representatives of Mr. Fox and the Albermarle interests. After several meetings a lease was signed, under which Fox Theatrical Enterprises gets control of the new Albermarle. Mr. Fox will finish the construction of the new building.

The structure will be in the colonial style of architecture, and the interior will be in the Empire style. It will have a seating capacity of 3,500. The properity has a frontage of 104 feet and depth of 268 feet.
Intimate National Theatres May Get All Selznick Studio Output

President Tells Directors That He Is Determined to Make Organization One of the Most Powerful in the Industry

Intimation was given at the recent meeting of directors of National Pictures, Inc., New York, that in the near future the entire output of the Selznick studios might be turned over to National Theatres, placing the entire organization under exhibitor control.

Lewis J. Selznick, president, addressed the directors, who represent more than 1,200 exhibitors holding franchises in National Pictures. The convention was held on April 8, 9 and 10. In his talk, Mr. Selznick expressed the determination to make National Pictures one of the most powerful organizations in the industry.

Loyal Loyalty to Selznick

The convention pledged itself to stand behind Mr. Selznick, founder of the organization, and give him its utmost support. The sentiment of the exhibitors who spoke after the president was that while his leadership had always been followed since the inception of the organization, future purpose of the members to give concrete and substantial evidence of their interest by supporting every move the organization made.

It was announced at the meeting that a number of stars are under consideration for the National proposition and that sales tours for several extraordinares specials. Exhibitors present asserted that the first two National Picture publications, "Just a Wife" and "Blind Youth," had capacity to carry business all over the country, and that three more productions, "The Invisible Divorce," "The Palace of Darkened Shadows" and "Who Am I?" are to follow in respective order.

Exhibitors Now in Control

Complete control of the corporation was announced to the exhibitors by Mr. Selznick through the appointment of three leading exhibitors to frame by-laws which will govern all operations of the organization.

The strength of the organization, it was asserted, already had satisfied the fears of directors that National Pictures would be destined to be a leading factor in the motion picture business of the future. It was the opinion of the convention that the National Pictures plan was the only means yet devised whereby the exhibitor is insured against "theatre grabbers" and the individual theatre owner is protected against the constant danger of the formation of combinations to force him out of business or compel him to sell at somebody else's price.

The following were appointed a committee on by-laws: George Giles, Boston; and large theatres identified with other large business interests; Hectt M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis, a leading exhibitor; Ross D. Rogers, of the firm of Dye, Ford & Rogers, one of the largest exhibitor organizations in the southwest.

Directors Chosen

Before the convention the following directors had been chosen: Nat Ascher, Chicago; Aaron J. Jones of Jones, Limick & Schaefer, Chicago; Harry Lubliner of Lubliner & Trinz, Chicago; Jules Mast of the Players-Lasky Booking Company, Philadelphia; Tom Saxe of Milwaukee. This board was enlarged at the convention by the election of Harry Bernstein, Richmond, Va.; W. H. Clune, Los Angeles; Harry Crandall, Washington; Fred Dolle, Louisville; George Giles, Boston; John F. Harris, Pittsburgh; E. Libson, Cincinnati; Charles Olson, Indianapolis; Hector M. E. Pasmezoglu, St. Louis; E. S. Renner, Youngstown, Ohio; Ross B. Rogers, Wichita Falls, Tex.; George Simpson, Rochester, and Jake Wells, Richmond.

It was also announced at the next meeting William Swanson of Salt Lake City; Mike Shea of Buffalo, and Ruben & Finkelstein of Minneapolis would be elected, together with directors from Kansas City, Seattle, Omaha, Des Moines, Charlotte, N. C.; Oklahoma City, Newark, Atlantic City and New Orleans.

President Selznick told the directors that the unity of spirit and co-operation displayed since National Pictures was born had made him so enthusiastic concerning the future that he was contemplating a plan to pool his entire resources with the corporation. This would make all the output of the Selznick studios available to National on its profit-sharing basis.

Boston Directors to Decide

In regard to future production plans, the convention empowered Mr. Selznick to obtain the best available material in the way of stories, stars and directors, and approved the policy of providing National Pictures with the best productions on the market.

The question of the number of publications to be issued in the year by National Pictures was left to the decision of the board of directors who will take the matter up at their next meeting.

Among the managers present were Lloyd Willis, general sales manager; E. J. O'Donnell, general representative; Charles R. Gilman, western division manager; Stanley W. Hand, Boston; Milton Simon, Cincinnati; Sid Rosenthal, Chicago; J. Reeves, Dallas; G. T. Landis, Indianapolis; Phil Selznick, Kansas City; Jack Levy, New York; Harvey B. Day, Philadelphia; Ira Aronson, Pittsburgh; D. F. O'Donnell, Washington.

Wheeler Bill Would Increase Admissions

Exhibitors Oppose Measure Barring Ticket Sales For S. R. O.

WASHINGTON.—Declaring that the passage of the Wheeler bill, prohibiting the sale of motion picture admission tickets after all seats in a house were filled, would make necessary a big increase in the scale of admissions, Harry M. Crandall, president of Associated Exhibitors of America; Roland Robbins, manager of B. F. Keith's Washington theatre, and a number of other theatrical men appeared recently before the house district committee to urge that the measure be killed.

Proprietors of theatres are anxious to keep down the price of admissions as far as possible, it was declared, but if this bill became a law the theatres not only would have to increase prices but would have to discontinue the free passes to wounded soldiers and charitable institutions. It also would necessitate the discontinuance of the Sunday morning church services which are now held at several local houses.

It was contended that the bill, while purporting to work to the advantage of the public, really would work to their disadvantage. If standing room were denied a number of the smaller theatres open only during the rush hours of the evening would be forced out of business. It was pointed out, also, that baseball parks and other forms of amusement are allowed to sell tickets for standing room, and that a street car ticket in the District of Columbia, in ninety-nine cases out of one hundred, entitled the holder to standing room only.

Semon Completing Pictures

Vitagraph announces that "School-days" is the title of its next Larry Semon feature. The production virtually is completed and will be ready for the market at an early date.
Selznick Enterprises Will Produce And Issue 537 Productions in Year

Officials Declare that This Will Develop a New Record in Output with Subjects Covering Nearly Every Branch of the Field

A program, believed by executives of Selznick Enterprises never to have been equalled in scope by any single organization, calls for the production and distribution by the various Selznick units of 537 subjects within the next twelve months. An announcement to this effect has just been made by Lewis J. Selznick.

This gigantic program covers almost every branch of the field, it is said. Mr. Selznick's statement said that it must not be assumed that the announcement of the production and distribution of 537 subjects means that number of features, for that would result in over-production and a crowding of the markets. It does mean, he declares, that the field will be so covered that an exhibitor can book his entire program from one source.

Reaches His Objective

This, according to Mr. Selznick, has been his objective since he started producing. The program covers 116 star series pictures and specials, 416 short-subjects, four Republic serials and a possible Republic star series.

Selznick Enterprises includes Selznick Pictures, Select Pictures Corporation, National Picture Theatres, Inc., and Republic Distributing Corporation. The subjects to be issued beside the star series and specials are the Kaufman Weeklies, Kinograms, Selznick News, Prizmas and comedies.

In the division of subjects, Myron Selznick, in charge of productions, announced there will be forty of the star series. These will include, beside the Olive Thomas, Elaine Hammerstein, Englund and Owen Moore productions, pictures of the new star, William Faversham, and Louise Huff and Hobart Henley productions. Four more new stars may also be expected. These will all be issued by Select.

Other Pictures Included

There will be twelve Selznick specials to be distributed through Select, which include the Ralph Ince productions and the all-star and featured player pictures along the lines of "The Woman God Forgets" and "Valley of Doubt."

Sam E. Morris, vice-president and general manager, announces that twelve Select specials will be published beside twenty-six produced by National Picture Theatres, Inc.

Fifty-two Herbert Kaufman Weeklies, which now are ready, are to be published through Select. These will be issued until a sufficient number has been made so that weekly publications may follow without fear of an interruption.

Republic's program has been enlarged. It is announced. Twenty-six specials are to be issued by this company. Brinton N. Hirsch, president, has received out and gathered in several producing companies to make pictures during the year. Among them are Lawrence Weber and Lloyd Carlson Productions. An early publication will be "The Sowing of Anderson Creek," a mountain story, starring Bernard Durning.

To Issue 104 Kinograms

Republic also will issue 104 Kinograms weekly during the year and fifty-two one-reel comedies. There also will be four serials distributed. The first of the series, "The Whirlwind," Charles Hutchison, was published on April 16.

The Selznick News reel, which was published first on Easter Sunday, will be distributed through Select and 104 reels will be turned out during the year. There also will be 104 Prizma publications through Select. According to Sam E. Morris, the plans to make short-reel and five-reel dramatic subjects by the Prizma color process are well under way. A new series of twelve special productions soon will be ready for distribution, and in September, a series of Prizma five-reel dramatic productions will be announced for 1921.

"Champion" to Show for Two Weeks at Grauman's

A showing of two weeks or more will be given "The Champion," reissued Charlie Chaplin picture, by Sid Grauman at Grauman's theatre in Los Angeles. Such arrangements have been consummated between Mr. Grauman and Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc.

It is announced that an extensive publicity campaign, equal in scope to the exploitation given the average feature, is planned by Grauman. The picture is scheduled to open on April 26.

BERTRAM GRASSEBY

Well known character actor, who has appeared recently in "The Lone Wolf's Haunting," "The Inferior Sex," "Dangerous Days," "The Soul of Rafael" and other screen successes.

BUNNIE DERY is now manager of The Lafayette theatre.

SAM SCHWARTZ, formerly manager of The New Grand Central theatre, is now manager of The Shenandoah theatre.

BARNEY FEGAN, manager of The Standard Film exchange, just bought a Buick.

Cecil Maverry, manager of The Goldwyn exchange, bought a Nash car. Cheer Stewart and Sam Henley, salesmen for Pathe, also bought cars last week.

The Famous Players Missouri Corporation, has just taken over the entire Koplar circuit of houses. William Goldman is managing director and Harry Koplar is business manager. F. L. Cornwall is president.

Bracken Will Direct

Bertram Bracken has been engaged by Louis B. Mayer to direct Anita Stewart in her next First National production in a role of which has not yet been announced. Miss Stewart has just finished "The Yellow Typhoon," and is a present taking a rest.

POPULAR "HEAVY"
SCREEN NEEDS SENSIBLE CRITICISM

Rex Beach Declares that Some Critics are Guilty of Far More Dangerous Misuse of Words than the Present Day Producer Is of Pictures—Author Says Film Acting Often Superior to Stage Work

A caustic criticism of motion pictures which appeared recently in one of the magazines of the country has aroused Rex Beach, author of the famous play, "Street Called Straight," which is proving an artistic and financial triumph of the industry, and the advancement being made by it. What the screen most needs, he declares, is intelligent criticism.

By REX BEACH

The critics of motion pictures are up on their hind legs. One of them writes in a current magazine that more than any other force, the moving picture in the last half dozen years has had most brilliantly in reducing the taste, the sense and the general culture of the American nation. He refers to a gushing flood of bilge and scum, the flag-doodle of the films, which has swept over the country.

Another critic, who is also a state censor, describes the producers as seeking the patronage of the curious young, of our adolescents and of older persons who are eager to look into usually forbidden fields. He predicts that "the future is dark with the prospect of efforts, new, yet ever the same, of these dilettants who traffic in half-veiled indecency in the name of social service."

Critic Describes Producer.

The control of the films is described by the critic first named as belonging to "the most ignorant octopists, to the spawn of push-cart immigration, hereditary toothpick suckers and six-day sock wavers." The business in which men in motion pictures are engaged is described as "crawling up alleys and side streets and for thirty pieces of copper selling American youth into artistic corruption."

The reply to such a critic is that he is guilty of far more dangerous misuse of words than the present day producer is of pictures. To my knowledge the future of the art of motion pictures never has been brighter and more wholesome. Men and women of distinction are engaged actively in making motion pictures. A fairly large number of directors insist upon producing only those pictures of which they may be proud. A considerable number of authors are guiding the course of their characters from book to screen and producers are intelligently cooperating to secure better films built on ideas and ideals. The fact has been demonstrated frequently to them that the better the picture the greater the profit.

Successful Productions.

Basil King recently has brought to the screen a spiritual drama entitled "The Street Called Straight." It is having a splendid response all over the country. No better illustration could be cited than "The Street Called Straight" as an evidence of the wholesome taste of the American motion picture public. They also are crowding the theaters to see "Dangerous Days," by Mary Roberts Rinehart; "The Cup of Fury," by Rupert Hughes, and "Partners of the Night," by Leroy Scott.

These are all photoplays with an idea behind them, written and produced with the co-operation of the individual author working in the studio with the actors and directors. I have no apology to make for my own pictures. "The Girl Friend Outside," "The Silver Horde," and so on, although the censors of Pennsylvania did pronounce "The Brand" immoral, and what not?

The most severe criticism is passed upon the comedies that find their way to the screen. I hold no brief for much of the slapstick comedy that is thrown on the screen, but I can point with genuine satisfaction to Booth Tarkington's contribution to screen comedy. His Edgar comedies which now are being introduced to the theatre public are the work of a genius, simple, natural and thoroughly wholesome. They prove the motion picture to be an ideal medium for the man who wishes to present real characters to the public in the most vivid and life-like way that the inventive power of man has conceived.

At a time when the acting of the screen is often superior to anything seen on the stage, it is absurd for the ranting critic to talk about mechanical dolls. That period in the history of the screen is at an end. The most illustrious names in the theatre, such as the Barrymore family, are to be found also inscribed in the titles of screen production.

It is said that the motion picture industry has enlisted as directors of pictures "an imposing array of ex-stage butlers, assistant stage managers of tank town troupes, discharged pantaloons and the riffraff of Broadway street corners." These are harsh words that could be said down only by a critic in acute stage of indigestion. It is a fairer observation that many college graduates are working in the studios and striving their best to eliminate from stock companies and traveling troupes into motion pictures. The interest of the public is not in the origin of these men, but to their power to master the technique of screen production.

Newspapers Denounced.

It is no more true to denounce the motion picture in terms that we have quoted than it is for a critic in a current magazine to say what he has said of the average American newspaper. These are his words: "The average American newspaper, especially of the better sort, has the intelligence of a Baptist evangelist, the courage of a rat, the fairness of a prohibition boob-bumper, the information of a high school janitor, the taste of a designer of celluloid valentines, and the honor of a police-station lawyer.

Such language as this is a reminder that words and sentences have frequently been employed by men suffering from auto-intoxication who indulge in statements more dishonest than those told in pictures caught in the eye of the camera and represented on the screen.

What the art of the screen requires is intelligent criticism.

Wealthy Chicagoans May Build Playhouse

Experiment at Auditorium to Try Out Combination Program Plan

An experiment of four weeks' duration, which if successful may result in the erection of a $5,000,000 playhouse in the heart of Chicago for the presentation for one admission price of symphony concerts, grand opera and first-run motion pictures, is to be undertaken at the Auditorium theatre, Chicago, beginning May 23, under the management of Andreas Dippel of the Chicago Grand Opera Company.

Backed by Wealthy Chicagoans

The venture has the financial as well as the moral support of a group of wealthy Chicagoans. Complete details of the experiment have not yet been decided upon. It is expected that the top price charge will not exceed $1 or $1.50. During the four weeks the grand opera and motion picture program is to be changed each week, and a picture to be presented will be "For the Soul of Raphael," Clara Kimball Young's third Equity production.

Schedule Not Yet Certain

The tentative schedule of pictures includes "Blindness of Youth" for the second week and "The Fall of Napoleon," an Italian-made picture, for the fourth week. "The Boomerang" may be shown the third week.
"Democracy, The Vision Restored" May Reach Public as a Road Show

A proposition to take "Democracy, The Vision Restored" before the people as a road attraction is being considered by Democracy Photoplay Company, producer of this thought drama, according to Lee Francis Lybarger.

Many inquiries from distributors, state right buyers and exhibitors are being received at the New York offices of the company, it is said, but as yet no distribution plan has been decided upon.

In No Haste to Tie-Up

"The eagerness of shred state right buyers in many parts of the country for this screen attraction would seem to point to that field as the logical avenue of release," states M. Lybarger. "However, I am in no haste to tie-up my picture with exclusive contracts in any territory, at least for the present time."

"Primarily, I am considering an excellent offer advanced by a leading theatrical manager to present 'Democracy, The Vision Restored' as a regular legitimate theatre attraction in New York and other important cities of the United States. This manager is convinced that with a symphony orchestra playing special music written for the thought drama, it would prove as popular an attraction as any big screen special of recent years."

Theme Is Timely

"'Democracy, The Vision Restored' as directed by William Nigh, is a world vision of the new order which is to come wherein lies the solution of humanity's greatest problem, the elimination of class hatred. In all lands and ages there has existed an increasing conflict between democracy and autocracy. In a delightful, soul-gripping manner of graphic realism is portrayed this conflict as it exists in our modern civilization wherein men and women of today continue unabated the long struggle for more room, greater opportunity—freedom!"

"With such a timely and popular theme interpreted by a stellar cast with a leader who intensifies the human interest, every scene teems with those elements which have audience appeal."

Thirty Exchanges to Distribute Reelcraft

Cropper Claims Independents Will Cover 95 Per Cent Of Exhibitorial Field

Reelcraft Pictures Corporation lists thirty independent exchanges as distributors of the Reelcraft program.

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft, claims this distribution combination places the Reelcraft program in touch of over 95 per cent of all the exhibitors in the United States, and represents a selling organization equalled by but few of the largest companies.

Reelcraft has gone forward along the lines of work with the independent exchanges, it is said, and backs up the cooperation with a national advertising campaign listing the names and locations of its distributors. The idea is to be a service department also to assist the local exchanges.

The exchanges listed include, besides the five Reelcraft exchanges in New York, Chicago, Milwaukee, Minneapolis and Indianapolis, Standard Film Service, 217 Noon building, Cleveland; Standard Film Company, 309 Mack building, Detroit; Standard Film Company, Film Exchange building, Cincinnati; R. D. Lewis Film Company, 19-135 commerce street, Dallas; R. D. Lewis Film Company, 114 South Hudson street, Oakland; R. D. Lewis Film Company, 1125 Solida street, San Antonio, Tex.; R. D. Lewis Film Company, 110 South Market street, Little Rock; Atlantic; Arrow Photoplay Company, 1735 walnut street, Denver; Arrow Film Company, 48 Piedmont street, Boston; Consolidated Film Company, 90 Golden Gate avenue, San Francisco; Consolidated Film Company, 738 South Oliver street, Los Angeles; Crescent Film Company, 315 Good building, Kansas City, Mo.; Dooley Exchange, Inc., 445 South Warren street, Syracuse, N. Y.; Dooley Exchange, Inc., 524 Pearl street, Buffalo, N. Y.; E. & H. Distributing Company, 73 Walton street, Atlanta; Il Strader Film Company, 1735 South Olive street, St. Louis; Mission Film Company, 411 South Olive street, Chicago; Movieland Film Company, 355 Sutter street, San Francisco; Reelcraft Film Company, 418 Harrison street, Davenport, Ia.; Masterpiece Film Company, 1735 Pennsylvania Avenue, Philadelphia; Quality Film Company, 414 Ferry street, Pittsburgh; United Film Service, 3625 Olive street, St. Louis, and the Samuel exchanges in Canada.

Reelcraft publications already on the market include the Billy West two-reel comedies, the Thomas Gurney two-reel westerns and the Alice Howell two-reel comedies. The first three of the series of William Franey two-reel comedies have been completed and issuance date will be announced shortly.

Stereoptic Projection On GIFLOGRAPH Screen

Larger Theatres and Circuits Are Installing This New Silver Sheet

Since the screen was placed on the market seven weeks ago by Giflograph Corporation, company executives say that the sceptical theatre managers have been convinced that it is not an experiment, but a screen built upon scientific principles which are basically sound.

Within seven weeks the Giflograph screen is being installed in Loew's entire circuit of theatres; Keith's theatres; Palace theatre, Washington, D. C.; Bijou Theatre, Brooklyn; Brevoort theatre, Brooklyn; Plaza theatre, New York; De Luxe theatre, Utica, N. Y.; Metropolitain theatre, Philadelphia; Castors theatres, Havana, Cuba, and many others. It is also being installed in France, projection rooms, New York Rialto projection rooms, as well as the display rooms of First National Exhibitors Circuit.

This screen has been installed at Loew's Rialto, New York, for the past four weeks. There have been many out-of-town exhibitors, it is said, who have come in expressly to see the screen operate at Loew's theatre.

"The projection is stereopic in effect and at the same time there are no distortions. The spectators seated in the first rows and viewing the picture get the same effect from the screen as those further back, it is claimed. The view is not only improved for the first row spectators, but experience has proved to all the managers of the theatres in which the Giflograph Screen has been erected, are testifying to the fact that the spectators in the box seats very near the screen are viewing not only an acceptable picture, but a picture which will not cause eye strain.

A "LEGITIMATE" IDEA

Advertising is based upon ideas.
Advertisers realize perhaps more fully than any other class of business men the importance of new ideas and the necessity for keeping abreast of the latest developments in their field.

One good idea serves a novelist for a book, the writing of which usually occupies his time for from three to six months.

One good idea serves a motion picture producer for the producing of a feature, a matter of several weeks occupation, or a serial, which runs into months.

One good idea serves an inventor for a lifetime. But a good idea can be used by the advertiser for just one advertisement successfully. It can sometimes be made the basis of a campaign to extend over several days, but it is true that the successful advertiser must be supplied with more ideas than any other workman.

Because of this condition, and because an idea used loses its value to the user without losing its value to other advertising men, free exchange of ideas is more common among advertising men than any other class.

When a novelist, a producer or an inventor finds that another novelist, producer or inventor has adopted his idea the adoption is considered cause for indignant denunciation and frequently legal prosecution.

When an advertiser finds that another advertiser has adopted his idea he feels a thrill of pride and exhibits the evidence to his friends.

Exhibitors are violating no ethics and breaking no rules of tradition, therefore, in adopting the idea upon which the "legitimate" advertisements reproduced herewith are based.

Solves Paper Problem

With a newsprint shortage seriously interfering with the newspapers of the country, a shortage that has forced curtailment of news and stringent limitations upon advertisers, it is a doubly valuable suggestion that is set forth in the advertisements used by New York theatres.

If the paper scarcity has not yet affected your individual advertising you are fortunate, but it is well to be prepared for the notice from your newspapers limiting you to a certain amount of space each week. Unless unexpected relief is speedily forthcoming you are certain to receive such notification.

The advertising man or agency responsible for the advertisements in question has solved the problem of making a little space well used bringing satisfactory returns as big space carrying mediocre copy.

The idea is good.

The best of economies underlies the solution. It is certain to work out successfully.

Saving Pays Expense

When less space is used less money is expended. When the decrease is sufficient to warrant adoption of a special style, as it is in practically all cases, the amount that represents the enforced saving is sufficient to cover the added expense of adopting the style suggested.

The reproductions presented herewith are actual size.

They appeared upon a page set solid with theatre advertisements. The size of these was standardized. There was little positional advantage owing to the general uniformity.

But the four theatres represented in these advertisements drew first attention.

Attractiveness and readability are the qualities responsible for this power. Desirable qualities under any circumstances, they are especially so when editorial limitations compel every theatre to use the same amount of space.
The city exhibitor will have no difficulty in putting the plan into operation at the first need. It is a simple matter to the man situated where artists are available and engravers guarantee twenty-four hour service.

All May Use Idea

The exhibitor not so situated need not abandon the idea however, simply because there is no engraving plant in his locality.

It is for the benefit of such exhibitors that we have reproduced four of the advertisements when two would have served for purposes of illustration.

Such an exhibitor need only draw up layouts for coming productions, using the reproductions as style sheets, and send them to the nearest city where such service is maintained.

It will be found that the total expense of the work will not exceed the amount customarily required for newspaper representation.

A co-operative page used for "Down on the Farm" at the Strand theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind., of a class not commonly associated with co-operative advertising were brought into line because of the nature of the picture.

Another reproduction accompanying this article shows the manner in which a straight advertisement was placed upon an apparently independent page, dominating the page.

On the day preceding the picture's opening every door knob in Fort Wayne was decorated with a cardboard cutout chicken, the name of the picture and the playing dates being printed thereon.

To carry on the good work thus begun, a cow was led through the streets bearing the printed information, "This is no bull. It's in the Farm," Mack Sennett's super-comedy, the fastest and funniest comedy ever given the screen, will be shown at the Strand theatre seven days, starting Sunday.

Thus much for the preparation.

When the picture opened a huge wagonload of hay was introduced, being drawn through the streets by horses that looked as though they had just come in from the field.

Upon the top of the load a troupe of acrobats, dressed in rube costumes, went through the funny antics and tricks typical of the well-known vaudeville acts of this nature.

Just to brace the main feature, and to make sure that no citizen failed to learn of the picture's presentation, a rube character walked through the less frequented streets, making it a point, also, to be seen in all of the principal places of business.

The stage setting was no less well thought out and effective.

A typical barnyard was represented, farming implements were used to give it color, a cow, a horse, a flock of chickens and several sheep were used to give the utmost realism to the scene.

A barn was seen at one side, with the door to the hay mow standing open. In the hay mow, grouped about the door, the house orchestra in rube attire was stationed.

Before the picture started milkmaids and farm hands danced a "hoe down" to the classic "Turkey In the Straw," and the audience was worked into a properly receptive mood before the lights were dimmed.

A detached display so placed as to draw the benefit of the motion picture publicity upon the page.

Milwaukee Exhibitor Sets Precedent
For Exploitation of “The Idol Dancer”

One of the most intensive and comprehensive exploitation campaigns in the history of the Alhambra theatre, Milwaukee, Wis., was that recently conducted in behalf of “The Idol Dancer,” D. W. Griffith’s First National attraction.

George Fischer, manager of the Alhambra, is an able showman. He is a showman who may be trusted with the premiere of any production. Exhibitors who contemplate the showing of “The Idol Dancer” will do well to read the account of his campaign and its results.

The fascinating South Sea atmosphere was carried out through art suggestions in display advertising and the transformation of the theatre into a straw-thatched South Sea village.

The huts were of beaver board, painted brown and yellow, in imitation of grass sides, confined with tiny strips of bark. Small square windows and low, narrow doors bordered with six-inch strips of real tanbark were arranged in the sides of the hut, and the entire affair was natural size. The sloping roofs of the huts were arranged a trifle higher than a man’s head and were thatched with yellow straw, which gave a distinctly unusual and pleasing appearance to the entire display.

The palm trees, which “waved” between and above the houses were the masterpieces of the decoration. They, too, were made of beaver board, cut with waving branches and slender trunks to stand considerably higher than the huts and extend into the lobby, thus making the theatre entrance a veritable slice of the jungle with the patrons walking between the rows of quaint huts sheltered by the palms, whose branches met overhead. The trees were painted on both sides, making them decidedly realistic.

Cutouts were used sparingly but effectively. Figures of Richard Barthelmess and Creighton Hale, taken from a scene in the play, were seated beside the door of one hut, while the open door disclosed the dancing figure of Mary, “The Idol Dancer.” Other figures, in poses from the play, were placed behind the windows of the huts, giving one the impression that he was witnessing little dramas of life in the tiny houses as he passed through the lobby.

The entrance doors to the theatre, also under a thatched roof, bore short remarks concerning the play, one calling attention to the fact that it was while filming scenes for this picture that the well-nigh fatal disaster to Griffith and his party occurred.

The teaser campaign began five days previous to the initial showing of “The Idol Dancer.” Small ads two inches square, showing a Hula dancer in an illuring pose, a totem pole and several palm trees, varied word matter each day leading up until the final smash. For instance, word matter used with the first ad stated, “You never saw her equal.” printed four times, one line directly under the other. The rhythm of Hawaiian music could almost be seen in the novel arrangement of a verse that said the same thing four times.

And the other word matter used with the remaining five teaser ads stated: “Go to see her at it,” “secret’s out tomorrow,” “see ‘The Idol Dancer,’” “‘Twill be at the Alhambra” and then, on the Monday following the Sunday’s show, the word matter stated, “Everybody’s talking,” proving that it was a teaser campaign in its true sense.

Probably the most interesting ad from the exhibitor viewpoint, and one which will be a natural aid to other showmen, was the display published Sunday in conjunction with the opening of “The Idol Dancer.” This ad ran eight columns wide by eight inches long and for clever arrangement of art and display matter is almost an exhibitor gem. On the right side the figure of Clarine Seymour in her striking Hula dance pose, the figure being offset by a background of palm trees and a thatched hut, and on the left side the unique figure of a totem pole were connected by a thin strip of South Sea Island scenery that skirted along the bottom of the ad.

Hodkinson Productions Stimulate Des Moines Exploitation Activity

Productions bearing the W. W. Hodkinson imprint claimed Des Moines as their box office recently, seven Hodkinson pictures holding the screens at four of the big first run houses and three at prominent neighborhood theatres, two of the best runs having the marks of exploitation drives that evoked public interest in pictures as seldom has been done in the Iowa metropolis.

Of equal power were the Hodkinson week campaigns waged on J. Parker Read, Jr.'s, Louise Glauin production, "The Lone Wolf's Daughter," which made its stand at the Rialto, the Blank-Frankle house, and on Zane Grey's "Desert Gold," the attraction at the Royal theatre. J. Warren Kerrigan in "820,000" also came in for some effective exploitation and big advertising spreads from the Blank-Frankle forces during its week's presentation at the Casino.

The most spectacular promotion drive of the week in Des Moines fell to "Desert Gold," the outstanding feature of which was a daily circus parade arranged by B. I. Van Dyke of the Royal and C. D. Hill, manager of the Hodkinson Des Moines exchange. The cost of staging a circus pageant in ordinary circumstances would be prohibitive, but learning that the Yankee Robinson Circus was still in winter quarters in one of the suburbs, Van Dyke and Hill communicating with the circus executives and obtained their cooperation, the arrangement giving the "big show" outfit over to the picture folk for three hours daily during the run.

The procession passed through the principal streets and then by different routes daily reached the Royal, where a pickanniny band and a troupe of Tasmania troubadours joined in rendering two songs, concluding with Waterston, Berlin & Snyder's "Desert Gold," dedicated to the Benjamin B. Hampton production. In addition to the circus stunt the Royal management had a mule pack train, representing one of the big scenes, parading through the streets. The Messrs. Van Dyke and Hill also evoked interest in "Desert Gold" through bookshop co-operation, display window drives at the department stores and big book stores being given over to promoting the sale of the novel during the presentation.

Meanwhile Abe Frankle and his efficient exploitation staff, including E. H. Helms, manager of the Rialto, were setting Des Moines fans agog for a sight of "The Lone Wolf's Daughter." A lobby exhibit higer than anything previously devised by the Blank-Frankle forces, was one feature of the spectacular promotion drive. In the center of the lobby was a life size portrait in oil of Louise Glauin, and surrounding it were scenes from the production reproduced in water colors. A Prelude, showing a coffee house typical of the Limehouse district, London, and requiring twenty people, was another glowing feature of the record-breaking engagement.

Des Moines exhibitors, whether or not identified with the interests responsible for this remarkable showing, are the better off for the events chronicled. Des Moines has long been in need of something of the sort to stimulate activity in exploitation.

Few cities where exploitation has been developed to a high point of efficiency have the natural advantages of the Iowa capital.

The theatres are bunched within a very few blocks. There are surprisingly few neighborhood houses. The public comes to the heart of the city to shop for amusement.

The splendid opportunities for rival theatres to conduct strong competitive campaigns on the crowded streets, where the very competitive nature of the events would be strong forces for the increase of theatre attendance generally, have not been grasped as they should be.

The present account indicates that a good beginning has been made. Every Des Moines showman should follow it up.

Moore's Strand Display Makes Sentimental Bid

Sentiment and business are notoriously fatal when paired. But sentiment and the motion picture cannot be divorced. It follows that sentiment and advertising, which is largely the representation of the motion picture, must always be closely allied. It is proper, then, that the theatre advertisements shall appeal when possible to the sentiment which is appealed to most strongly by the photoplay represented.

Moore's Strand theatre, Washington, D. C., carried the sentimental appeal that is the chief strength of "Judy of Rogues' Harbor." Mary Miles Minter's Realart production, to the Washington public in a recent three-column advertisement that is reproduced herewith. This is good advertising.

Other theatres in other sections of the country have attempted to camouflage the sentiment in motion pictures by wordy dissertations upon the merit of the star, the beauty of the production, all of the superstructural elements that go into the make-up of the well-produced motion picture. Frequently much greater sums have been expended in advertising by such theatres. There is no record of their having attained better results at the box office window.

The sentimental appeal is justified. In this picture, as in the majority of productions, it is by playing upon the sentiment that the author has made his book a success. It is right and proper that the showman who is to make the picturization of that novel a success should employ the same tactics. It is strange that more exhibitors have not made the attempt.

“Everywoman” Dramatized for Minneapolis

CHARLES C. PERRY, manager of the New Lyric theatre, Minneapolis, personified the allegorical characters in “Everywoman” in his presentation. “Nobody” spoke from the center of the stage in a green spotlight, addressing “Vanity,” “Vice,” “Modesty” and other characters as scrim-covered boxes were lighted from within making the models visible. An unusual feature was the carrying of the presentation into the auditorium proper, thus gaining the effect of intimacy.
Big Co-operative Campaign Features Record Showing of “His Wife’s Money”

C. H. Wuerz, manager of the Rivoli theatre in Denver, is authority for the statement that the days of mediocre motion picture showmanship are past and that the future will see even a greater improvement in exploitation methods than has the past.

Mr. Wuerz has backed up his statement with one of the finest examples of showmanship ever attempted in the West. He has been one of the leading exhibitors of the country for some time and has always realized the value of getting new patrons. His latest campaign is eminently qualified to perform this office for all exhibitors.

Every known angle of exploitation was carried out in Mr. Wuerz’s campaign on the Eugene O’Brien production, “His Wife’s Money.” The Select Company sent L. A. Young, exploitation representative, from Philadelphia to Denver to assist Mr. Wuerz. Together they planned the campaign that caused all Denver to sit up and take notice.

Tie-ups with stores were first arranged for. The Woolworth store agreed to a window display showing a hat trimmed with real money. An accompanying sign read, “Don’t put all your money in trimmings, but buy at Woolworth’s millinery department.” The hat was a center of attraction during the campaign.

A sporting goods store displayed photographs of Eugene O’Brien and stills taken from his current production. These were mounted on cardboard announcing the picture and the store benefited by the use of the phrase, which was credited to O’Brien—“I attribute my success on the screen to keeping fit physically.”

The tie-up with the Frameless jewelry store was one of the cleverest of the campaign. The window display consisted of a large money bag labeled with the title of the picture. Above this on white cardboard were mounted cutouts of O’Brien and his leading lady. A silk cord ran from the O’Brien cut-out to a wedding ring set well to the front in the window. A similar cord ran from the other cutout to an engagement ring in a position similar to the wedding ring. Between the cutout figures was the wording, “Can Money Keep Them Apart?”

Besides a large canvas sign over the lobby announcing the coming of the picture, attractive three-sheet posters were placed in every available section of the town.

One of the best newspaper tie-ups ever accomplished was engineered by Mr. Young in connection with the Denver Express. As is the case in many large cities, newspaper competition is keen in Denver and the editor saw a chance to benefit his paper by co-operating with Mr. Wuerz and Mr. Young. Four days prior to the opening of “His Wife’s Money” a front-page news story was carried which was in reality the synopsis of the picture. No reference was made to Eugene O’Brien, but on the second day a picture of O’Brien brought to light the fact that he was concerned in this domestic wrangle. In addition to this, a news story with a New York date line was carried on the break page of the Express.

On Saturday, the day before the opening, a plane was seen hovering over Denver and the aviator was showering the city with certificates advertising the picture and copies of an “extra” edition of the Denver Express. Twenty-five thousand certificates, some of which were redeemable for cash at the Rivoli box office, were thrown from the plane and hundreds of copies of the paper, which carried coupons good for admission into the theatre, fell in the residence section of Denver.

The “extra,” which was also distributed on the streets of Denver after the plane had completed its flight, carried an eight-column banner head which read, “Throws ‘His Wife’s Money’ From Plane.” A two-column cut over a two-column cut of O’Brien read, “Selznick Aviator Opens Purse As He Hovers in Clouds.” A half-page ad was carried on an inside page by the Rivoli management.

Needless to say, the Rivoli records for the following week were broken. Denver was sold, sold to the last seat in the last row, and the cashier at the Rivoli now believes that one of every two persons in Denver saw “His Wife’s Money.”

The Wuerz campaign can be adopted, with the possible exception of the airplane feature, by any exhibitor who plays the picture. It is, no, like many exploitation campaigns, suitable only for the larger cities.

A small town newspaper, in even greater degree than the metropolis, daily, is inclined to favor the furtherance of motion picture interest by whatever methods are suggested.

Any jeweler in the country should be glad to decorate a window as outlined above.

And it should not be unreasonably expensive to bring the plane to the city, especially if the expense and benefit is shared by the newspaper or a merchant.

The outstanding feature of the campaign is its practicality.

“A Fool and His Money,” the succeeding Eugene O’Brien production, has just been given its first showings through the country. Comparatively few of the exhibitors who have it booked have laid exploitation plans at this time.

Because of the similarity in title, a similarity which has borne out in pilot sufficiently for exploitation purposes, the Denver campaign may be duplicated with the later production. Every exhibitor who plays the picture should take advantage of the opportunity.

“Overalls”

The “Overalls” craze is sweeping the country.
You can capitalize it.
It may prove a nine-day wonder. It is just possible that it will develop into the movement that is to bring down the H. C. L.
That doesn’t matter.
The exhibitor who is the first man in his community to don overalls, the exhibitor who puts his ushers and his orchestra in overalls, on the street as well as in the theatre, the man who identifies himself and his institution with the movement because of its purpose—the lowering of living costs—will see the result plainly indicated in his box office records.
It’s a “hot” opportunity.
Don’t let it get cold.

Richmond "Pollyanna" Campaign Brings Lock-Out Crowds to Isis

Harry Bernstein of Richmond, Va., set his entire community agog, talking, writing and going to the picture shows by the manner in which he put over "Pollyanna," Mary Pickford's first United Artists' production.

"It was a production that primarily interested the children," he said, "so it was to the children that I made my first appeal. I knew that if I got the children started the grown-ups would come along, and I certainly hit the bull's-eye this time. I had them lined up outside of the theatre for hours, and it was capacity business during the entire run of the engagement."

His first appeal in his campaign was to the school children through the News Leader, the leading newspaper of the city. Through it he offered four cash prizes, $10 for the best comment on "Pollyanna" as a production, $7.50 for the best story about Mary Pickford, $5 for the best "glad" thought any school child ever had, and $2.50 for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

Hundreds of people entered the contest and submitted contributions, with the result that the following prizes were awarded by the judging committee, composed of Henry S. Hatzler, T. Elwood Tragle and J. H. Binford, assistant superintendent of schools:

First prize, $10, to Lelia Graham Hobson, nine years old, of 805 West Grace street, for the best comment on the picture.

Second prize, $7.50, to Martha Letitia Woodson, 13 years old, of 2211 Jefferson avenue, for the best story about Mary Pickford.

Third prize, $5, to Charles Allen, 13 years old, of 1223 Dance street, for the best "glad" thought.

Fourth prize, $2.50, to Mary Phillips, 12 years old, for the best essay on "Pollyanna."

The contribution which won the biggest prize is typical of the work submitted. It follows:

"I went to "Pollyanna" and stood in line two hours and twenty minutes. When the curtain finally tore itself away, I forgot how long outside. It was worth while waiting all day. Pollyanna had made me want to play the glad game. I have never seen such a happy little girl. I wish I had her for a playmate. The play differed a little from the book, but I liked it better. I laughed a lot. When Pollyanna was met by Nancy at the station; it was so funny to see them blow about in the rain. And then again when she told Mr. Penfield that she could not return fifteen of his apples because she had eaten them, don't you know she was uncomfortable? It was funny all the way through, and my mother laughed as much as I did. Mary Pickford made a perfect Pollyanna and Jimmy Bean was just fine. I am so glad that he and Pollyanna were married. The book did not have it that way. That was some family that Pollyanna had! They must have kept her busy playing the glad game. The only fault that I have to find with the play is that it was too short. I am glad the News Leader brought it back to Richmond, as I was sick when it was here before and could not see it. I thank you for giving me this pleasure."

Lelia Graham Hobson 803 West Grace.

"Nine years old.
"Please excuse these blots, as my grade does not use ink."

The newspapers responded admirably to all of the exploitation, and first-page double and triple-column stories were the result. When the children came in droves from the schools in the afternoons, in some cases the teacher bringing her entire student body, the papers commented on it with headlines like this: "Living Lines of Children Took Turns Waiting Outside to Get a Chance to Enjoy "Pollyanna.""

Jake Wells was there during the rush and one of the papers carried this story: "Jake Wells, the directing personality in the leading picture houses here, was in the city yesterday and arranged the impressive turnout of children to see 'Pollyanna' at the price of 10 cents (plus 1 cent war tax) arranged by the News Leader with the Isis management. He announced this morning that in view of the tremendous success of yesterday he had decided to make a permanent arrangement whereby a children's picture will be shown several afternoons each week at an attractive special admission price."

House records at the Isis were broken and "Pollyanna" will be remembered for many years to come as the production that brought much joy to the entire community.

Now

Now is the time to do just about anything that is worth doing.

Now, incidentally, is the time to begin thinking about the exploitation possibilities offered by "Down on the Farm," starring the Mack Sennett comedy distributed by United Artists.

The animals common to the barnyard, the hardware implements used by the farmer, the classic "rube," the country band, the hay rake, the milk maid and the threshing outfit are forces for building business that suggest themselves at once.

Others will follow.

Not many attractions are so rich in possibilities.

If you are going to exhibit the picture the time to begin thinking about your exploitation is now.

Crisp Instead of Woods

To Direct Wanda Hawley

Sam Woods, because of other work, will be unable to direct Wanda Hawley in "Miss Hoolah," her first production for Readart Pictures Corporation. Donald Crisp has been obtained in her place.

Intensive exploitation brought this crowd into line when "Pollyanna" was given its first showing at the Isis.
These are custardpieless days at Mack Sennett’s Edendale, Cal., studios. There are five companies of beautiful bathing girls, working under a new system of lights, making a series of two-reel comedies, sans slapstick, nowadays. Charlie Murray, Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling and Louise Fazenda are deeply interested in the new turn of affairs.

Journeys to the Homes of Great Pictures
No. 1—The Sennett Studios

By HARRY HAMMOND BEALL.

THE Sennett bathing queens are to come into their own. No longer are they to be used as beautiful atmosphere in the comedy creations, but the maids who made Los Angeles famous are to be featured in a series of two-reel productions, sans slapstick, by the dean of fun film producers.

Such was the announcement made by Mack Sennett at his Edendale studio when I visited there this week, and just to prove it he led me to one of the light studios where E. A. Abbe, the New York photographer was directing several of the Sennett beauties under an entirely new system of lighting, which hithertofoe has been used only for still photos.

Mr. Abbe, with an accent on the final "e," has sold Mack Sennett on his lighting, and he has also sold the comedy producer on the idea of making two-reel fairy fantasies combining the beauty of the girls with most bizarre and picturesque lighting effects. And Sennett is giving him carte blanche at the studio, while Ben Turpin, Ford Sterling and Louise Fazenda sit around and marvel at the possibilities of custardpieless comedies.

Mr. Sennett himself, J. A. Waldron, studio manager and watchdog of the treasury, and Walter Anthony, who resigned the dramatic editorship of a San Francisco paper to become P. A. extraordi­nary for the Sennett seaside sirens, seem to be the kingspins and chief executives of the studio.

Charlie Murray was busy around the lot and stages looking pleased at hav­ing signed a new long-term contract with Sennett, setting aside all rumors that he was to leave the old plantation and Marse Mack.

Exhibitors are going to have plenty of photos of the Sennett beauties in beach toggery to make the hot days of the East and Middle West seem cooler, for Mr. Abbe has shot thousands of plates on the bathing girls in daring but alluring costumes, and the prints are soon to be ready for distribution.

Ben Turpin had just returned from a three weeks’ vacation, while pulchritudin­ous Phyllis Haver also looked fresh and rosy after a short leave of absence.

Sennett confided to me that his first Associated Producers’ picture will be a six or seven reel comedy. The story has already been secured, and shooting is soon to commence with all the Sennett favorites in the cast. It will be several months in production, the comedy chief stated, and will be along different lines from anything he has previously done.

Even though “Down on the Farm” is already being exhibited, the farm remains intact at the studios, with a Turk named Abdul in charge. Abdul takes agriculture most seriously and is most annoyed when some thought­less scenario scribbler writes in a sequence which calls upon the dairy maid to chase a cow through his cabbage patch. “Teddy,” the comedy canine, must have been away on location the day I went to Sennett’s, but “Pepper,” the trick feline, and John Henry, Jr., the infant­tile prodigy, were much in evidence.

Ford Sterling was idling about a bit after completing “Fresh from the City,” under Walter Wright’s direction, in which Marie Prevost played opposite. Louise Fazenda had just finished “Let ‘er Go,” and was awaiting her next script.

Altogether five companies are now working on the Sennett lot, for the mirth monarch admitted that he owes the Paramount Artcraft program humorous two­reelers before his contract expires in August and he casts his lot with the Associated Producers.

Exploit Serico Serial
by Novel Puzzle Device

Geo. H. Wiley, president of the Serico Producing Corp., has completed the details for a “Woman in Grey” puzzle tie­up with the “A Woman in Grey” serial starring Arline Pretty supported by Henry G. Sell and a cast of well known serial favorites.

The puzzle, states Mr. Wiley, will prove a banner exploitation novelty and business getter for the serial. It is constructed along highly entertaining lines and is bound to arouse considerable interest in the fact that it contains the solution of the mystery embodied in the “A Woman in Grey” serial. The exhibi­tor can arrange to supply his patrons with the last link of the puzzle upon the showing of the fourteenth episode and then tax their cleverness in solving the mystery before the showing of the fifteen­th and last episode of the serial in which the mystery is finally revealed.

Eminent Authors Sue Ince
To Change Picture’s Title

It is alleged in the bill of complaint that Eminent Authors Pictures, Inc., has the exclusive and prior right to the use of the title, “Dangerous Days,” and that the Ince title, “Dangerous Hours,” is so close in point of resemblance that its use will deceive and mislead the public and will enable the Ince picture to appropriate the benefit of the deservedly widespread popularity and reputation of Mrs. Rinehart’s novel.
Volplaning Around N'Yawk

With J. B.

M. J. Abbott, president of the Castro Amusement Company of Havana, Cuba, has been in town for the past week buying equipment for his two new theatres in Havana. Among other things Mr. Abbott purchased two Typoon fan ventilating systems and several Nicholas Power projectors. Mr. Abbott also looked over the organ market, as in one of his theatres he desires to install a large pipe organ. Mr. Abbott will also install several Gliograph screens upon his return to Cuba. The Castro Amusement Company are the largest film exhibitors in Cuba. They contemplate the erection of several other up-to-date theatres during the coming year.

A revolution in the presentation of motion pictures is promised when H. C. Rosenfeldt opens the Criterion theatre Saturday, April 24, as the first long-run de luxe motion picture house in America.

William S. Hart, in the first of his own productions, entitled "The Toll Gate," is at the Rivoli theatre this week.

Albert A. Kaufman has been in New York for the past week.

Randall White of Select, who drives a Royal roadster, can be seen most any Sunday on the Jericho Turnpike tuning up his car. Once in a while Earl Hudson, who pilots an Arrow, makes Randall take his dust, but not often. One Sunday not long ago Jim Grainer joined the sprinters with his "Fleet Wing," but at the end of the race Jim had to send his brother Edmund back over the track to pick up the parts. After the car was reassembled Jim found that he had three carburetors and four sets of differentials left over. "Well, I'll be ——" said James, "that settles it; Marshall Neilan's got to come through with a new car."

E. M. de Beers has been assigned to the post of Albany branch manager for the National Picture theatres.

Alfred C. Crosby of the Welch Films Co., arrived in New York April 17 from London. Mr. Crosby brought a print of a six-reel educational picture with him which was made in Wales.

Jules Brulatour rendered a luncheon to the trade and daily press at the Kienker-looker hotel recently. He introduced Hope Hampton and announced that he would pay $15,000 for a good story from which to make a scenario for Miss Hampton. He also suggested that the newspaper gang get together and write a scenario in collaboration for her. During the luncheon Mr. Brulatour opened a can of film and the fresh fumes gave the guests a most exhilarating kick.

Charles Galyn has completed "The Tiger's Cub," starring Pearl White. It is said that we are soon to see Miss White as we have never seen her shine before. Considerable interest is manifest in Mr. Galyn's next directorial duties, but he states that he is not yet ready to announce them.

The completion of the Reeves and Grey serial which has claimed the services of Peggy Shanon for the past eight months, will turn Peggy loose for a vacation. Miss Shanon denies the rumor that she has already signed for a forthcoming production and declares she feels duly entitled to a week off.

George Irving, formerly the director of the M. P. D. A., who has spent the last four months in California directing Lawrence Weber productions, has returned to New York. Mr. Irving has not yet announced when he will depart for Europe, but according to original plans he is now three weeks' late in sailing.

It is anniversary week at the Rialto theatre this week and Hugo Rosenfeldt has prepared what he regards as the most attractive program of many months. Charles Ray in "Paris Green" is the feature attraction and "The Pawshop," a Chaplin revival, also is being shown. As a special anniversary feature there is a motion picture showing the Rialto orchestra in action, playing Lizst's Sixth Rhapsody, with close-ups of the various soloists doing their parts. The same number is played by the orchestra with the same conductor wielding the baton.

Sidney Olcott surprised his brother members of the M. P. D. A. by his sudden appearance at the first ball. It is predicted his presence will swell the attendance of the meeting of M. P. D. A. on April 20, since his report will want to hear the details of his several months' stay on the coast as well as his future plans.

Jas. Hansen, Pathé star and heralded for her work in "The Lost City," appeared at a recent social function in a raspberry colored gown which attracted an amount of attention most aspirants for stardom would pay a great deal for. "My new gown has nothing on my new car," said the blonde actress. "Wait until you see it. I never expect to use the 'hunk.' You can hear it coming.

Everything indicates that the First National will establish a convention record at Chicago.

Frank W. Thring, director of the motion picture department of J. C. Williamson Ltd., of Australia and New Zealand, is in New York staying at the Hotel Astor. The house of Williamson, Ltd., is planning to build four motion picture theatres in Melbourne and Sydney, Australia. The houses are to seat 3,000. Charles L. Ballentine, a well known English architect, is in America consulting with American theatre constructors on plans for the new houses. Mr. Thring and Mr. Ballentine will soon leave New York for San Francisco for a three weeks' sojourn.

The Cheese Club members have taken to wearing "Never Rips" in order to bring down the high cost of clothing. This matter is liable to be considered seriously by the members of the M. P. D. A. at the next meeting for the same reason.

Joe Sameth of the Fordward Films Distributors, Inc., reports that since the rate of exchange has gone up the export business has improved greatly. Mr. Sameth reports two large trades during the past week.

Majority of Studios in Los Angeles Use Power's

The New York office of Nicholas Power Company has affidavits showing that 95 per cent of the studios and laboratories in Los Angeles use Power projectors.
"Hole in the Wall" and "Big Game"
Are New Screen Material for Metro
Acquisition of Additional Plays and Novels Made on Fifth Anniversary of the Organization—
Policy Is to Acquire Notable Works

Additional well known novels and plays have been added to Metro Pictures Corporation's list of literary works purchased for early production. Announcement of the new acquisitions was made coincident with the fifth anniversary of the organization.

Purchases of further screen material marks a continuation of the Loew-Metro policy of great plays by great authors, it is supplementary to the notable collection of titles that already has been made public.

Prominent Plays Purchased

Prominent in the list of new plays recently acquired by Metro for production are the "Hole in the Wall," Fred Jackson's drama of the supernatural, which is playing to packed houses in the Punch and Judy theatre in New York; with Martha Hedman in the leading role; and "Big Game," by Willard Robertson and Kilbourne Gordon, which was one of the season's productions at the Fulton theatre, with Allan Dinehart, Pauline Lord and Reginald Barlow in the cast.

Further additions to the Metro schedule are the "Four Horsemen" by George Kibbe Turner's mystery serial, which is appearing by monthly installments in the Red Book Magazine, and "June Jeopardy" by Inez Haynes. The latter is a fascinating novel of social life. Other purchases include "The Gay and Festive Claverhouse," which was written by Isadora Duncan, published by Little, Brown & Company, and "Head and Shoulders," a short story by F. Scott Fitzgerald, which appeared recently in the Saturday Evening Post.

Buys French Play

Metro also made the purchase of Adolphe Belot's celebrated French drama, "L'article 47." This famous old play was first produced at the Ambigu Comique in Paris Oct. 20, 1917. Its New York appearance at Daly's theatre followed the next year, with Clara Morris, W. J. Le Moyne, Louis James and Mrs. C. H. Gilbert in the cast.

"The Girl Patsy," J. Mauding Fiegl's well known stage play, which enjoyed a successful New York production, completes the list of recent purchases made by Metro that up to the present time have been made public.

The foregoing list of purchases of screen material of the highest order is quite wholly in line with what Metro's former policy has been, it is declared. This policy is illustrated by the names of forthcoming productions already announced, and which includes "The Four Horsemen of the Apocalypse," by Vicente Blasco Ibanez. Metro will give this great novel a magnificent production with an all-star cast.

Ina Claire to Star

"Polly With a Past," by George Middleton and Guy Bolton, will be still another big Metro serial production, starring Ina Claire, who played the title part in the original David Belasco stage presentation of the play. Other names on the Metro list which are now in preparation for production on the screen are "Fine Feathers," by Eugene Walter; "Parlor, Bedroom and Bath," by W. Bell and Mark Swan; "The Temple of Dawn," by I. A. R. Wylde, and "Indiscreet Wives," by Julie Herne, daughter of James A. Herne, whose famous drama, "Shore Acres," is one of Metro's most recent productions.

Three more Jack London novels will reach the screen through Metro to follow "Burnings Daylight," which will be issued shortly, with Mitchell Lewis as the featured player. Those novels include "Smoke Belcher," "The Mutiny of the Elsinore" and "A Daughter of the Snows." "The Best of Luck," another Drury Lane melodrama by Cecil Raleigh and Henry Hamilton, will succeed "The Hope," which is about to be published and will be followed in turn by "The Great Millionaire" and "The Marriages of Mayfair."

One forthcoming Metro production of merit is "Clothes," the famous stage play by Avery Hopwood and Channing Pollock.

Mexican Town Reproduced
In Connecticut Hills for Ethel Barrymore Picture

Construction work has begun in the Connecticut hills on a "life-size replica" of a Mexican village, for use in filming a number of dramatic incidents in "The Super-Woman," the feature in which Ethel Barrymore is being starred by Directors Joseph Byron Totten and Joseph W. Smiley for Tri-Star Pictures.

The village as laid out by George B. Chennells, technical director, is a duplicate of the village of Los Buenos, a settlement near the Tampico oil fields. The American reproduction of Los Buenes is located at Pendleton Hill, Conn., on the ninety-five acre grounds of Director Totten's New England studios.

"Legend of the Corn",
Produced by Rothacker
As Greiver Educational

"Legend of the Corn," is the first one-reel subject which Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company produced for the Greiver Educational Weekly. This picture had its first showing at the Randolph theatre, Chicago.

The first quarter of the film is an interpretation of the Indian legend of how the Great Spirit first gave maize, or Indian corn, to his children. The legend as told in Longfellow's "Hia-watha" is closely followed. For some of these scenes, Ray Aitken, director, took a company of Redskins to Deer Creek and Starved Rock, Illinois, a locality of primeval scenery and rich in Indian history.

Following the legend of corn's coming to earth, the picture visualizes how man in the twentieth century converts this gift of nature into tasteful breakfast foods. Watterson R. Rothacker has arranged to produce for Greiver Distributing Corporation an extensive series of educational films on diversified topics.

Change Date of Issue
For Owen Moore Film

Owen Moore's fourth Selznick production will be "Love Among the Chickens," and not "Stop That Man," as previously announced, according to advices received from Selznick headquarter.

"Love Among the Chickens" is reported as in the course of production at the Selznick West Coast studios. The story was written by Pelham Grenville Wodehouse whose "Piccadilly Jim" was Mr. Moore's first Selznick production. "Stop That Man" will follow "Love Among the Chickens" on the Selznick schedule.
AGNES AYRES was educated at Chicago University and received her early stage training in stock. Her picture career started with Essanay, and she has appeared in leading roles in Selig, Mutual and Vitagraph productions. Miss Ayres is to be starred in Marshall Neilan and Albert Kaufman productions.

Agnes Ayres New Kaufman Star to Be Featured Also in Neilan Plays

Announcement of Acquisition Follows Forming of a Cooperative Producing Alliance Between the Two Interests

Agnes Ayres has signed a long term contract with Albert A. Kaufman and will be featured in a series of special productions. This announcement follows the formation of a co-operative production alliance between Marshall Neilan and Kaufman, and it is said that the former has an option on the services of the star whenever she is available.

Miss Ayres now is playing the leading role in Neilan's third independent production. The Kaufman company will be the second under the Kaufman banner. Allan Holubar having been signed recently to direct a series of specials starring Dorothy Phillips.

Both Neilan and Kaufman were desirous of obtaining the services of Miss Ayres, it is said, but it was amicably agreed that the latter should make the bid for the new star. It was then that the option proviso was agreed to.

Plans are under way to establish an extensive exploitation and publicity campaign to back up Miss Ayres. Her sponsors predict that within the next year she will be one of the big box office drawing cards.

Starts at Essanay

After her graduation from high school in Chicago, Miss Ayres was intent on entering the University of Chicago to take up the study of law or medicine. While on a visit to the Essanay studio, however, her attractiveness was noted by the director, it is said, and she was asked to play a small part in a picture. A permanent engagement then was offered her and she accepted. She then determined to make the screen her life work.

By conscientious application to her work Miss Ayres advanced steadily and with each succeeding picture she was given roles of more importance. After her engagement with Essanay she joined Mutual Film Company and under the direction of Frank Powell she supported Nance O'Neill in one production and Marjorie Rambeau in live. Then she went to the Eastern Vitagraph Company where she remained two years.

Supports Alice Joyce

During this period Miss Ayres supported Alice Joyce in "Richard the Brazen," Harry Morey in "The Gamblers" and "Honor's Web," co-starred in one production with Edward Earle and played the lead in twenty of Vitagraph's series of O. Henry's pictures.

It was during her engagement with Vitagraph that Marshall Neilan, after viewing a picture in which Miss Ayres appeared, commented on her beauty and talent to a mutual friend and predicted a great future for her. The friend told Mr. Neilan's compliment to Miss Ayres, and it served to instill a self-confidence which she had not possessed.

After leaving Vitagraph, Miss Ayres was cast as a lead for a while, playing leads opposite William Russell in "Sacred Silence" with E. K. Lincoln in "The Inner Voice" and in the Famous Players-Lasky Production of "Held By the Enemy."

Increased Demand for Typhoon Fans Caused By Theatre Building

Increased theatre construction over the country has had a direct result of increasing the demand for large diameter Typhoons, according to an announcement by Typhoon Fan Company of New York.

This particular Typhoon is 12 feet in diameter. Two such Typhoons are being made ready for shipment to the Cozy theatre, Okmulgee, Okla.

One fan 10 feet in diameter recently has been shipped to Harry Crandall's new Strand theatre, Cambridge, Md., together with several of smaller size.

Four other 16-foot Typhoons have been shipped to the Victory theatre, Tampa, Fla.

One Typhoon with a diameter of 12 feet and one 12-foot Typhoon Twin Set, together with two 8-foot Typhoon Twin Sets recently have been shipped for installation in Marcus Loew's new Metropolitan theatre, Memphis, Tenn. Marcus Loew also has purchased two 12-foot Typhoons for his Vendome theatre, Nashville, Tenn.

These are only a few of the many theatres throughout the country that are going to be cool and comfortable this summer, through the installation of the Typhoon cooling system.
Patron Wires Sennett That People
Go Wild Over "Down On the Farm"

Packs Fort Wayne Theatre at Pre-View Showing
During Stormy Weather.—Many Contracts
Already Have Been Signed by United

Mack Sennett some weeks ago wired Hiram Abrams of United Artists Corporation that his five-part comedy,
"Down on the Farm," was the greatest thing he ever had accomplished.

Since the receipt of that telegram the pro-ication has had a pre-view showing at the Strand theatre, Fort Wayne, Ind. What the manager of the house and a patron thought of the comedy is expressed in the following telegram to Mr. Sennett:

W. C. Quimby of the Strand wired:
"Opened 'Down on the Farm' Easter Sunday. Complete turn away busness despite severe snow storm raging which swept entire middle west. Opposition very strong. On third day with miserable weather still standing them up. Using barn yard setting, produce and rube orchestra and live animals.
Expect tremendous week. Regards."

Original and Funny

W. H. Cone, a patron, wired: "Happened to be in Strand theatre, Fort Wayne, yesterday, and saw 'Down on the Farm.' It is the greatest picture made as yet. Original and funny. The audience went wild when the place was packed. This picture ought to make you more famous than you now are."

Predictions are made by United Officials that the comedy will exceed the popularity of any of Mr. Sennett's former big pictures.

In exploiting this production at the Strand the management tied a cardboard chicken cut-out on every doorknob in the town, bearing the title and name of the picture. A cow led up and down the main streets, carrying this inscription: "This is no bull, 'Down on the Farm.' Mack Sennett's super-comedy, the funniest and fastest comedy ever given the screen, will be shown at the Strand theatre, seven days starting Easter."

The success of the stage comedy augurs well for the screen version, it is said. Besides playing in every city of importance in the country, the play also gained great popularity in London and other leading European cities. The many odd situations, necessarily constrained to the limits of the stage settings, are expanded in the screen production so that they can be appreciated at their true value.

Parade the Streets

A wagon-load of hay, with acrobats performing on top, was driven up and down the main streets. "Rubes" walked through the streets with signs on their backs. On the stage was a typical barnyard with all the farming implements, a cow, a horse, a score of chickens and sheep. In the hay-mow of the barn, in this setting was stationed the orchestra, dressed in "rube" attire and for the premiere, the management had a regular country "hoe-down" with milk maids and farm hands.

An enormous amount of contracts already have been signed and accepted by Hiram Abrams, it is announced.

"Down on the Farm" reveals the entire Sennett equipment at its best: chck-en's that never saw Broadway; cows not of the "prop" variety; ducks, geese, turkeys and all the rest of the feathered creatures of Mr. Sennett's farm, became
-o to say, a background for the romance of Louise Fazenda and the funny incidents in the life of Ben Turpin and his faithful "wife," Marie Prevost.

Teddy: "Mack Sennett's celebrated great Dane, who acts not as a trained animal, but as an intelligent member of the cast, is enrolled in an effective part.

New Vitagraph Serial

Gets 105-Day Booking

Vitagraph issues the report that its latest serial, "The Silent Avenger," of which William Duncan is star, has been booked for a solid week-run or 105-day continuous showing at a big theatre.
The Majestic Theatre of Hartford, Conn., is the showhouse which has un-taken this exploit.

It is declared to be altogether unique in the New York district, if not in the whole country, for a serial to be booked solidly. Hitherto three and four-day runs were the longest a serial ever attained, it is said and one-day-a-week showings have always been the rule in ordinary houses.

Vitagraph further declares that "The Silent Avenger" had reached, in the third week of its booking campaign, double the amount of bookings signed in a similar period for any previous chaptersed productions.

Announcement of Distribution Arrangement for England
Made at Convention

Walturdaw Company, Ltd., London, England, has taken over the distribution of Sennett pictures in the British Isles, according to announcement made by Lewis J. Selznick at the second annual convention of the organization in New York.

The contract provides for a minimum of seventy-eight pictures a year. This deal is said to involve more than $2,000-000.

The contract was closed with Col.
A. H. Brown, who came from London to New York especially to confer with Mr.
Selznick regarding the proposition.
The contract contemplates the broadest reciprocity between the English distributors and exhibitors and the American producer, it is said. It also is the intention under the contract for Mr. Selznick to begin soon active production work in England.

Republic Plans Intensive

Exploitation for Serials

Complete exploitation aids will accompany the distribution of all Republic Distributing Corporation serials, according to an announcement by Briton N.
Busch, president of the company. Exhibitors will be given the services of experienced exploitation men.

The first serial that will be shown throughout the country within a short time backed by weeks of intensive advertising is "The Whirlwind," it is said.
Charles Hutchinson is the feature of the production.

SCREEN BRINGS NATIONS CLOSER

Northcliffe Representative Says Charles Ray Is Attaining Popularity in England and Is Looked Upon as Typical American Personality

W. G. Faulkner, personal representative of Lord Northcliffe, while visiting the Los Angeles studios of Charles Ray, declared that the nations of the world were learning to know and to sympathize with each other through the medium of the screen.

He hailed Mr. Ray as a typical American character and said that his screen studies of rugged Americanism were doing a great deal to establish a better understanding of this country among the rank and file of the United Kingdom.

Brings Mutual Understanding

Mr. Faulkner, who is studying the production of motion pictures in this country, expressed his views on the desirability of closer relationship between American and English film interests.

In an interchange of views with the First National star, he stated his belief that the expansion of films in every corner of the world eventually would prove a powerful factor in the establishment of mutual understanding among the various nationalities. An example of this trend was evidenced, he said, in the reception of British audiences of the pictures of Mr. Ray, who makes sympathetic and real the character of honest American manhood.

Mr. Ray is attaining a rapid popularity in the British Isles, declared Mr. Faulkner, and his studies of the country boy have broken through the reserve of English audiences who have come to look upon him as a typically American personality, with all the rough genuineness of the pioneer, and the tender sympathies of the man close to nature. Mr. Ray appeals to the British mind, in the opinion of Mr. Faulkner, as an old-fashioned American country type, in contradiction to the aggressive modern product of the cities.

Can Cement Friendship

This understanding of a distant people brought about through the medium of the screen can do a great deal to cement the friendships, according to Mr. Faulkner, and in an indirect way will help to prevent future wars. From the photodrama alien peoples will come to understand the aspirations, the ideals, the habits of nations in other parts of the world, and in this way build up not only a greater mutual respect but a finer spirit of toleration on the earth.

Lord Northcliffe's representative evinced a great interest in the details of the new Ray studio, in course of erection by Charles Ray Productions, Inc., and was amazed to note the technical progress which had been made in studio innovations and improvements.

Mr. Faulkner made an addition to the current film vocabulary by naming Los Angeles the "Movielopolis" of the world.

"The Miracle of Money"

New Hobart Henley Film

"The Miracle of Money" is the title of the next film being produced for Pathé distribution, work upon which has been completed. It is an adaptation of the story, "The Barrying of Envy," by Beulah Peyton.

A story of American life, with two spinster characters, the play is said to have the same characteristics that distinguished "The Gay Old Dog," by Henry H. Stockley.

Goldwyn Pictures Will Adapt Books By Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley

Screen rights to ten books by E. Phillips Oppenheim and Cynthia Stockley have been obtained by Goldwyn Pictures Corporation under a contract which extends over a number of years.

Mr. Oppenheim's novels for some time have held a high place in the "best seller" class. Only a few of them have been done in pictures. They are rich in dramatic material of the kind that lends itself particularly well to screen interpretation.

In selecting the most suitable works of the novelist, the Goldwyn company may turn to some of his earlier stories as well as those of a more recent date, it is announced by long-time friends, Mr. Oppenheim, who has been a prolific writer with a seemingly inexhaustible fertility of imagination. His works are marked by fast action and dramatic incident.

Although Cynthia Stockley is not so well known in America as is Mr. Oppenheim, "Wild Honey," "Poppy," "The Claw," and other works from her pen, published in this country by G. P. Putnam's Sons, have had a large sale. She has been a best seller in England and most of her books deal with the free state and its people.

Goldwyn has announced its selection of the first works of the two English novelists to be filmed.

Four Publicity Agents Are Added to Universal Staff

Joseph H. Mayer, director of publicity for Universal, is back in New York after a week's trip through Ohio, Illinois and Indiana, where he met with publicity representatives to Universal force.

They are Marie C. Blanchard of Toledo, Ohio, Miss Carol Burdawood and L. V. Schneider of Indianapolis, and Ann McMurphy of Milwaukee. They will represent Universal in their respective territories.
Fox Recalls Days When Kennedy, Comedian, Was 'Big Tom,' Fighter Producer Watches Screening of Several Episodes of the Forthcoming Five-Part Sunshine Comedy Directed by Del Ruth

William Fox, president of Fox Film Corporation, together with a group of other executives, were startled in one of the projection rooms at the new Fox studio on West Fifty-fifth street recently looking over some of the films released throughout the year in the studio and ability to take punishment that he was urged by sportsmen to become a professional. The time of his father's career near terminating Tom's pugilistic career before it was started.

Professional honor overcame his high regard for his father's wishes and he went on with his first fight and he went "on" with Al Falzar and got a kicking for his trouble. His side of the fight netted him $1,000 and a deal of encouragement from his friends.

Those He Has Fought

Among those with whom Kennedy has boxed are Jack Johnson, Carl Morris, Bomhaider White, English champion heavyweight; Frank Moran, Gunboat Smith, and Max Robert, French heavy.

Both last three fights were against Al Reich, Jim Coffey and Tony Ross. It was due to the latter fight that he entered the picture field. Ross fouled him in the first round and he went to the hospital for six weeks. During his recuperation he met a motion picture director, got his first part and remained.

Director Ireland and Alice Howell Support Million Dollar Drive

Alice Howell, comedienne under the direction of Frederick J. Ireland, vice president and supervising director of Reelcraft Pictures Corporation, has the distinction of being one of the first photographers stars to ever use Marshall's Field's retail store in Chicago as a setting for her forthcoming publication, "Bargain Day." At the same time, she became a factor in the final week of the million dollar drive to boost Chicago by helping Mr. Ireland, who was chairman of the film division of the drive. State street was crowded from curb to curb, traffic was suspended, and the police kept on edge for blocks diverting vehicles through other channels.

Burston's Slides and Posters Are Without "Bally-Hoo" Slogans

Louis Burston some time ago promised exhibitors "something new" in the way of slides and posters for advertising King Baggot's new serial, "The Hawk's Trail." The first shipment of this "something new" has been made and it is announced, and is slides and posters with a noticeable absence of "hurrah, sham-bang, bally-hoo slogans.

Exhibitors who have received their material say it draws more money than the 'old hectic, melodramatic manner and matter of former Burston serials,' it is said.
Crandon Appeals to Exhibitors to Assist Americanization Movement

Chairman of One Branch Delighted With Response On Part of Showmen Over the Country—Sends Message to Theatre Owners

Harry X. Crandon of Washington, D. C., chairman of the exhibitors branch of the Americanization committee of the motion picture industry, in a message to the exhibitors of the country, urges everyone "to take off his coat and do his share" in combating bolshevism.

The Washington showman has returned East from a trip which took him as far West as California. He conferred with exhibitors in every part of the country, and returned to the capital enthusiastic over the way the exhibitors are taking hold of the Americanization program, and has set to work on a plan in the hopes that every single exhibitor will get behind the movement and will make it a success.

Crandon Issues Statement

The following statement has been sent out by Mr. Crandon to the exhibitors of the country:

"I am proud of the way that the exhibitors of the country are responding to the appeal of our government in its fight against bolshevism. I find that the exhibitors are solidly behind this movement and intend to make a success of it.

"However, there yet remains a great deal of work to be done. Several months ago the United States government called upon the motion picture industry to fight the great spirit of unrest that was sweeping the country.

"To have been selected for this important work was the result of the wonderful results that the industry obtained for the government during the war. We were called upon at that time and we proved to be 100 per cent Americans."

"We exhibitors in the country have an opportunity that we cannot afford to ignore. Every single exhibitor must take off his coat and do his share. We must put aside all differences that we may have had with our competitors—the mere fact that he may play an Americanization picture before we do does not mean that we are not obligated to play this picture. We must get away from the dollars and cents idea and must respond to the call of our country."

Exhibitors Must Not Fail

"We cannot afford to fail in this emergency. To do so would be a severe indictment to the industry. Unless we can muster our forces and stand united in this movement we are very apt to be legislated against as was the liquor business."

"This is the first real test to show to the country that we are a great force and that we can be united to fight the enemy.

"The producers have agreed to make fifty-two pictures and they will be produced at the rate of one a week. It is our duty to see that we show every single one of these pictures in our theaters."

"I want to impress upon you at this time that not a single cent of profit is to be made by anyone connected with the industry. Instead, I know that producers and distributors will lose thousands of their own dollars in order that this campaign shall be a success.

"The first of the Americanization pictures, 'The Land of Opportunity,' proved to be a big winner, not only from a box office standpoint, but from the point of view of the public. I played the picture in my eight houses and could repeat the same as I have had many requests to do so. If you have not already played this picture it is your duty to do so.

"I also want to impress upon the exhibitors the importance of using the trailers that have been made. They are now being sent out by the various distributing companies and should be used at the end of all bug feature pictures."

Urges Use of Trailers

"The Hon. Franklin K. Lane, former secretary of the interior, and chairman of the Americanization committee of the motion picture industry spent much time preparing these trailers himself. The trade papers of February 28 very kindly devoted much space and reproduced the quotations. If you have not already done so, will you call all slides made at once containing the subject matters of these trailers and show them in every corner of the land."

"The eyes of the country are now watching us and it is up to us to make good."

Charles Ray Buys Four Riley Poems For Feature Use

From the Arthur S. Kane offices comes the news that Charles Ray has just completed purchase in Los Angeles of four of James Whitcomb Riley's poems of American country life. The star, it is said, has for a long time been anxious to annex these vehicles suited to his screen personality, and the conclusion of negotiations this week will give him stories for rural dramas with titles famous in every corner of the land.

The Riley poems which have been purchased by the First National star are, "The Old Swimming Hole," "The Girl I Loved," "Home Again," and "Out to Old Aunt Mary's."

In a statement issued from his Los Angeles studios announcing the purchase of the Riley poems, Charles Ray declares that the acquisition of these American classics represents the culmination of a long time ambition to put the works of the beloved Hoosier bard on the screen.

Pathe Will Issue Keenan and Henley Films in May

Pathe Exchange, Inc., announces that Frank Keenan's 'Dollar for Dollar,' will be published on May 2. The following week, Hobart Henley's production, "The Miracle of Money," will make its first appearance.

"Dollar for Dollar" was adapted by Mr. Keenan from a well known story by Ethen Watts Mumford, playwright and magazine writer. Prominent in the supporting cast are Kathleen Kirkham, Harry Van Meter, Kate Van Buron, Jay Beatle and Gerda Siegrist. Hobart Henley adapted his play from Beulah Poynter's "The Marrying of Emmy."

 Territory Disposed of By Film Market, Inc.

Robert W. Priest reports the following sales through Film Market, Inc., New York: "Who Shall Take My Life," to Associated Feature Film Company; "The Spoiliers" to Independent Master Films, Inc., Detroit, for Michigan; "The Spoilers" to F. J. A. Harter, Thomas Pollock, Wyo., Colorado, Wyoming, Utah and New Mexico; (by assignment) "The Spoilers" to Harry F. Grele, Pittsburgh, for Delaware, Maryland, District of Columbia and Virginia.
"SINCLAIR’S IDEA IS NOT NEW"

Selznick Declares News Reels Follow General Plan of Improvement in American Journalism Sought by Novelist in a Published Article

Lewis J. Selznick, in discussing the published assertions of Upton Sinclair, the novelist, who proposes what he believes to be an original plan for the improvement of American journalism, declares that the idea is not wholly new.

Mr. Sinclair is quoted in the New York Tribune as branding the press of the country as dishonest and suggesting that a national weekly publication to be known as "The National News," free from advertising and editorials, be published setting forth the truth and nothing but the truth.

Journalism Is Improved

Mr. Selznick, in answering Mr. Sinclair, states that American journalism is being improved and that nothing but the truth is being placed before the public week after week. Elaborating his statement, Mr. Selznick says: "It might interest everyone to know that the definite plan of action to improve American journalism, as quoted in the New York Tribune from Upton Sinclair’s book, 'The Brass Check,' is neither new nor original.

There have been several periodicals before the public for some time whose sole purpose has been to give the people the truth about the world's events. These periodicals carry neither advertisements nor editorials. They cannot help but be non-partisan, and they are never the propaganda organ of any cause. They watch the entire world, and any item of news which they record must of necessity be recorded truthfully.

That Deal to All

"It is true that none of them can boast an editorial board such as Mr. Sinclair suggests, but that is hardly necessary. The men who control these periodicals are quite capable of giving a square deal to all, from William H. Anderson and the Anti-Saloon League down to Connie Mack and the Philadelphia Athletics."

"The only difference between the periodicals referred to and Mr. Sinclair's ‘National News’ is that these publications are not gotten out in the cheapest form, nor are they printed on poor paper. Nor expense is spared in presenting them to the public and their stories are unerringly preserved on celluloid. They are distributed in places where the majority of persons see them, namely, the country's moving picture theatres."

Published Semi-Weekly

"The real heartly favor receivin the world's news in this form is evidenced by the fact that the enormous demand has led to the creation of the American News, a periodical dedicated to the principles which Mr. Sinclair has outlined, which was given to the public on Easter Sunday. The fact that it is issued semi-weekly instead of weekly will give the people an opportunity of seeing the news, while it is new, and not after it has become history."

"Mr. Sinclair, or anyone else who feels the need of a publication such as he describes, have only to go to the nearest moving picture theatre to obtain what they desire."

Mildred Harris Chaplin’s Next First National Film Finished for Publication

Mildred Harris Chaplin’s second First National production, 'Folly of the Storm Country,' is complete and the publication date probably will be set shortly. It is said to be entirely different in theme and in treatment from ‘The Interior Sex.’

James Kirkwood Selected To Support Louise Glaum

James Kirkwood has been assigned the leading male role in Louise Glaum’s latest J. Parker Reed Jr. production now under way at the Thomas H. Ince West Coast studios. Kirkwood has announced his intention of deserting the directorial field for the actor’s role.

James Kilgour also will support Miss Glaum. Wesley Ruggles is directing Miss Glaum’s latest effort. Charles Stumar is photographing the production.

Corinne Griffith Becomes Dansuse
In Vitagraph Picture ‘Garter Girl’

Corinne Griffith has become a dansuse. The Vitagraph star became officially established in her new profession when her latest Vitagraph feature, ‘The Garter Girl,’ completes another chapter in her own history. The production will have its opportunity to present several big dancing scenes. The movements of her little figure and the gliding movements of her feet constituted an exhibition in the art of dancing.

Mr. Kosloff may be credited with special arrangements designed to bring the performance into being. He is a brother of the well-known stage celebrity, Theodore Kosloff.

Big Dancing Scenes

Playing the title role of “The Garter Girl,” Miss Griffith had occasion to present several big dancing scenes. The movements of her little figure and the gliding movements of her feet constituted an exhibition in the art of dancing.

Mr. Kosloff may be credited with special arrangements designed to bring the performance into being. He is a brother of the well-known stage celebrity, Theodore Kosloff.

Adaptation of O. Henry

"The Garter Girl" was adapted from O. Henry’s famous short story, entitled "The Memento." It presents the romance of Rosalie Ray, the vaudeville actress.

Rosalie Ray, played by Miss Griffith, is known as the Garter Girl from the fact that during her vaudeville act she sings out over the audience suspended from a wire, and kicks a garter loose upon the audience beneath.

The girl becomes revoluted at the shams and make-believe of her surroundings in the city and goes to the country to forget these things. There she encounters a remarkable romance.

Cincinnati Paper Gives Space to Film Column

The Cincinnati Post has just devoted space to a daily motion picture column. Frank Roostock, editor, and Ralph Chandler, advertising manager, are staunch advocates of motion picture news as circulation and advertising builders, it is said. So firm was their belief that the photoplay fans should be catered to, that they decided in the face of the paper shortage to run a daily film column, headed by a cut of a star and containing gossip of the new pictures and players.

The new daily feature started off with a two column cut and story on Violet Henning in "Everywoman," and stories about "The Copperhead" and "April Folly.”
Pathe Will Publish Max Linder's Production as Special Attraction

French Comedian Is Said to Do Some of the Best Work of His Career in "The Little Cafe" Which Had Successful Broadway Run

"The Little Cafe," the famous stage success featuring Max Linder, the French comedian, will be published by Pathe Exchange, Inc., as a special production. The picture is said to bring out some of the finest work of Linder's career.

Although the original stage part was played by John E. Young at the New Amsterdam theatre in New York, it is said that the star character fits the talents of the French comedian to perfection. His touches of humor throughout, his mannerisms, and eccentricities are all given full play in the part of a millionaire waiter who is compelled to remain at work in a restaurant by the terms of his contract.

New Star in Support

With the publication of the production a new star is introduced in the person of Wanda Lyon, who plays opposite Linder. Miss Lyon has played in Winter Garden shows in New York and in M. Jolson's show, "Robinson Crusoe, Jr."

Linder plays the part of a waiter in "The Little Cafe." The proprietor of the cafe and an accomplice have tricked him into signing a contract agreeing to pay them a forfeit of 500,000 francs if he quits his job as a waiter. He signs for twenty years and when the contract is in effect they tell him that he is heir to 2,000,000 francs. The conspirators expect the waiter to pay the 500,000 francs and quit.

Picture Is Colorful

The millionaire waiter, however, decides not to be blackmailed and he stays on his job from 8 a.m. to 10 p.m. Between those hours he is a gay lothario of the restaurants and a figure in the night life of Paris. The picture is full of color and life, showing the adventures of a hero in the cabarets and among the Parisian actresses. It is difficult for a single man to lead a double life, according to Linder's roles, and in that line we find many of the complications which make the comedy.

The leading characters are Max, who is a gay waiter, and his friend, the constable, who is a comical figure. The daughter of the cafe proprietor, in the person of Miss Lyon, loves her waiter even if he is a millionaire and the love leads the way out of the tangle.

Reelcraft to Include

William Franey Series As Third on Schedule

R. C. Cropper, president of Reelcraft Pictures Corp., 729 Seventh Ave., New York, announces that word has been received from Nat Spetter, West Coast manager, to the effect that arrangements have been completed whereby the Franey Comedies will be distributed by Reelcraft.

The Franey comedies are to be one reel in length and will be published every other week. William Franey is the comedian pictured.

This is the third comedy series to be announced on the Reelcraft program. Billy West and Charlie Hunsol being the stars already listed. Another series, it is said, will be announced shortly.

Reelcraft exchanges are now in operation in New York, Milwaukee, Indianapolis and Minneapolis, arrangements pending for openings in other distribution centers.

Pearce to Issue in South

"House Without Children"

Eugene Pearce of Pearce Films, New Orleans, visited the Film Market in New York recently and after viewing Robert McLaughlin's stage right production "The House Without Children," bought the rights to Louisiana and Mississippi.

Mr. Pearce intends to open the picture in all three of his Causal Street theatres simultaneously. He will wage an extensive billboard and newspaper advertising campaign to introduce the picture.

National Gets Revier to Direct "Son of Tarzan"

Harry Revier, who directed the "Return of Tarzan" for Numa, has been engaged by National Film Corporation of America to supervise the production "The Son of Tarzan," the latest serial to be announced by this company.

"The Son of Tarzan" is the first of the Edgar Rice Burroughs books to be adapted for the screen in serial form. The picture will be filmed on an island in the South Pacific.
ROBERT GORDON
DIGEST
OF PICTURES OF THE WEEK

COMPETITION invariably improves business conditions. Effort expended in the contest for supremacy between competitors develops the skill and resourcefulness of both.

A wave of theatre building unprecedented in the history of the industry is sweeping the country.

Competition between producers and distributors is keener today than ever before.

But one result of this activity—bettered business conditions, heightened prosperity and more satisfactory business relationships for every individual in the industry.

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Paramount Artcraft) with John Barrymore in the title role, will be recorded in film annals as an artistic triumph for Mr. Barrymore and a screen classic. The skillful handling of the Stevenson story brings out in vivid manner the remarkable tale of a dual personality. Not a pleasant story nor one for weak nerves persons, but mightily fine melodrama.

"THE HEART OF A CHILD" (Metro-Classics) affords Nazimova ample opportunity for the display of her unquestioned talents and is qualified to duplicate the best of her previous successes. It is a thoroughly modern story and has been produced carefully and with sure effect.

"DOWN ON THE FARM" (United Artists) was cordially received at its Chicago premiere in the new and capably conducted Barber's Loop theatre. Mack Sennett's slapstick in five-reel length is a distinct novelty and the production has almost unprecedented exploitation and presentation possibilities.

"A FOOL AND HIS MONEY" (Select) tells an interesting little story against unusual and magnificent backgrounds. Eugene O'Brien is the star, Ruby de Rienner supplying an intelligent opposite. It compares favorably with any of the star's previous productions and occupies a higher plane than most of them.

"PASSION'S PLAYGROUND" (First National) presents Katherine MacDonald as a convent bred orphan set down in the world amidst the surroundings of Monte Carlo. The story, which follows is highly dramatic and absorbing.

"SEX" (Hodkinson) is a fine production in more than one sense of the word. Story value figures strongly in making the picture one of the most interesting of recent publication, with adept handling of the situations by director and players giving a satisfactory finish. Elaborate settings have been furnished. Louise Glauin's portrayal is excellent.

"SINNERS" (Realart), while not the best production made by Alice Brady, is a picture that will afford temporary diversion for theatre-goers. A very capable cast has been given the star, included in which is James L. Crane, her husband.

"THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN" (Fox) is a picture in which the settings are finer than those generally furnished for the scenes in Gladys Brockwell productions. The story is enveloped entirely by Parisian atmosphere and presents the star in some beautiful gowns.

"ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE" (Metro), although of a different nature, gives Bert Lytell a chance to do the same fine work that made "The Right of Way" a success. This police crime play has been adapted in a very satisfactory manner and convincingly.

"BOTTOM OF THE WORLD" (Robertson-Cole) is a rather tardy pictorial record of the Shackleton expedition of 1914-1916 in the Antarctic circle. It has many meritorious points, but hardly qualifies as a feature, and would be more suitable for an exhibitor's program if held within two reels instead of 3,800 feet.

"BLIND YOUTH" (National Picture Theatres) is the second offering of Lewis J. Selznick's co-operative organization and makes good the many advance promises. Walter McGrail and Leatrice Joy make a particularly pleasing impression as the sculptor and his model, who is also his inspiration.

"THE FIGHTING SHEPHERDESS" (First National) satisfies all demands as a "follow-up" for "In Old Kentucky," Anita Stewart's previous production. It is a Montana story with great dramatic power and fine production elements. Walter Long and Noah Beery give excellent portrayal in difficult supporting roles.

"THE DEADLIER SEX" (Hodkinson) deals with sex cleanly and entertainingly. It is free from the slightest taint, a modern story of big business, with Blanche Sweet well cast in the leading role. It should please generally.

"DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR" (Pathe) displays the absorbing and entertaining work of Frank Keenan. Like the majority of Keenan pictures, "Dollar for Dollar" should find universal favor. The production has been well directed, cast and photographed.

"SHE LOVES AND LIES" (Select) is the last picture made by Norma Talmadge for Selznick. It presents the star in a very light comedy role in which her pleasing mannerisms are displayed to advantage. Conway Tearle plays opposite Miss Talmadge.

"THE ROAD TO DIVORCE" (Universal) contains beautiful settings brilliantly photographed, a story that stops just short of achieving dramatic success, and a cast of well chosen players in support of Mary MacLaren. It is pleasant to the eye and the not too exacting will find it a satisfactory evening's entertainment.

"NEGLECTED WIVES" (Wistaria) concerns a politically ambitious husband and a neglected wife who is made the tool of his political opponents. Anna Luther is the star, and a capable cast aids with intelligent support. The picture is well made and the story holds interest throughout.

"DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE" (Pioneer) differs from the Famous Players-Lasky version in that it has a happy ending, a feature which many will consider desirable. Sheldon Lewis, who also played the role upon the stage, gives a realistic and convincing portrayal of both personalities. The production is high class throughout.
Blanche Sweet in
THE DEADLIER SEX
Five-part drama; J. D. Hampton.
Directed by Robert Thornby.
Published by Selznick.

OPINION: If there is prevalent a belief that "The Deadlier Sex" is what is commonly termed "a sex picture" it should be corrected at once. If there is prevalent a desire for good, clean drama, human in its appeal and as far removed from the indecorous, pandering type of play which is done with the title as it is possible to be removed—that desire may be gratified.

It is sex in its finer meaning that is concerned in the story. There is at no time a descent into the suggestive to gain power, at no time an appeal to the baser appetites, at no time by subtilty, scene or incident, effort made to introduce the so-called "punch." There is, instead, a well told story in which every business man is pitted against a woman of the sort that everybody knows in his daily life, an intelligent woman, thrown into possession of a railroad, whose defense of her stockholders gives rise to the incidents which make up the action.

Blanche Sweet, as that woman, has a role demanding exactly the sort of work for which she is best qualified. As a result her performance is convincing and entertaining.

Mahlon Hamilton, a leading man who has a certain following in his own account, plays the opposing rail magnate with satisfactory seriousness.

There are many novel incidents involved in the struggle between the two. Interest is sustained evenly throughout, rising to its highest point just before the conclusion, as is proper and in line with existing requirements.

The Northern scenery which forms the background for the better part of the footage is attractive and excellently photographed.

The play should give complete satisfaction.

SYNOPSIS: At the death of her father Mary Willard takes over the management of his railroad, which is threatened by an opposition headed by Harvey Judson, a young capitalist, who believes that money will gain him his every end. To protect her stockholders when Judson's plans seem about to succeed, in a forced amalgamation of interests, she causes him to be abducted and taken to a shack in the North woods. Here she poses as daughter of a guide and they refuse his offer of money to take him back to New York. When he has fallen in love with her and she begins to believe her identity. A race for New York follows his denunciation of her, but they are informed, as they reach the railroad station, that their roads have been taken over by the government. The happy ending follows.

Eugene O'Brien in
A FOOL AND HIS MONEY
Five-part drama; Select.
Directed by Robert Ellis.
Published in April.

OPINION: By sheer strength of technical excellence. "A Fool and His Money" is qualified to win wide favor. The Selznick production staff, already famous for its sumptuous settings and brilliant photography, has surpassed its best previous efforts.

Practically all of the action takes place within and about a castle in the Swiss Alps. Just where the castle used was actually located is not known, but had the pilgrimage been made to the country represented no better result could have been obtained. Even the foreign railroad train, one of the severest trials of the American producer's ability is faithfully reproduced.

The story is not as strong as others that have been given the star, but a capable supporting cast makes it interesting. In the acting of the players against the attractive background provided that entertains.

As projected at the State-Lake Theatre, Chicago, where the picture was given its opening, the production suffered from the operator's hands. It is reasonable to believe that a little more than customary speed will greatly improve the general effect.

SYNOPSIS: Robert Bellmany Grant, American novelist, buys a castle in the Swiss Alps and goes there to live alone and write a novel. He discovers living in an abandoned wing of the castle what he first believes to be a ghost, but later learns is a former American girl whose marriage to a foreign nobleman has resulted in divorce and who has stolen her child from its father, hiding here until she can escape across the border. The Count, her former husband, is one of a party later visiting the castle, but she manages to escape detection. When her father and mother arrive to rescue her, however, the Count learns of the plan and interferes with official support. The exciting finish is provided by a race to the border in which Grant wins the lady's freedom and hand in marriage.

Five parts; Robertson-Cole.
Published in April.

OPINION: It is doubtful that the pictorial record of the Shackleton expedition into the Antarctic seas, which took place from 1914 to 1916, can be successfully exploited at this late date as a five-reel feature. It has many fine points, but to make feature length it is apparent that the scissors have been used sparingly—too sparingly, perhaps.

Scenic pictures have attained a high standard. People have been educated to expect spectacular views of the odd corners of the world as a part of a well balanced program. The Shackleton picture, cut to 2,000 feet, would be a scenic of unusual merit. As a feature, it is a doubtful quantity.

In Martin Johnson's pictures of the South Sea cannibals Robertson-Cole experimented with five-reel features, but is issuing the second series in one-reel quantities.

The Shackleton pictures contain many highly educational and interesting features. The sub-titling, clever in spots, is not carefully done. The ending is very abrupt. It is a novelty, but hardly a feature.
Gladys Brockwell in
THE MOTHER OF HIS CHILDREN

Five-part drama; Fox.
Directed by Edward Le Saint.
Published in April.

OPINION: Finer settings are provided in this Gladys Brockwell vehicle than in any of her recent productions. The Oriental atmosphere predominates, the furnishings accomplishing this in satisfactory manner.

The Bohemian section of Paris serves as the locale of the story, which was written by Barbara Le Marr Deely. It is the story of a princess, loved by one sculptor, but in love with another, and an American who has left his wife and two children in New York while he journeys to Paris hoping to win the Grand Prix with a statue inspired by the mother of his children.

The emotional work of Miss Brockwell makes the dramatic scenes very convincing. The action at times is tense, the picture as a whole offering an hour of pleasant diversion.

Two statuettes, "The Mother of His Children" and "The Eternal Eve," were molded especially for this production, it is said, Miss Brockwell posing for the latter and Golda Madden for the former. Commendable portrayal is done by William Scott as the American sculptor, Richard Arnold; Frank Leugh, another sculptor named Count Joachim Tolstoff; Nigel de Brullier, as Princess Yve's slave; Golda Madden, as Beatrice Arnold, and Nancy Caswell and Jean Eaton, who portrays Arnold's children.

SYNOPSIS: Yve, an Arabian princess, is living in Paris with her slave, Hadji. Count Tolstoff is madly in love with her, but she prefers the hand of Richard Arnold, an American sculptor. Both men have statues at a Paris exhibition, Tolstoff's being "The Eternal Eve," which has Yve's features. Jealous personally and professionally after Arnold wins the Grand Prix, Tolstoff indicates that Yve posed for his nude statue. Arnold, who has fallen in love with the princess, obtains the statue, so as not to humiliate her. Maddened, Tolstoff makes an effort to demolish Arnold's "The Mother of His Children," but is killed in doing so. Arnold is exonerated when Hadji confesses that he committed the crime. The death of Arnold's wife while aboard ship on her way to Paris permits the marriage of the princess and Arnold.

Anne Luther in
NEGLECTED WIVES

Five-part drama; Wistaria.
Published in April.

OPINION: "Neglected Wives," for which is provided the alternate title, "Why Women Sin," is a valuable acquisition to the independent field. It has box office qualities that cannot be denied.

The plot holds interest from start to finish, setting forth the events in lavish settings excellently photographed. Technicians have received especial attention throughout, and the result is a smooth-running, logical narrative.

Anne Luther and E. J. Radcliffe lead a cast in which are listed such names as Claire Whitney and Charles Gerard, veteran players both. Their performance is well rounded and succeeds in giving unusual depth to the production.

While marital differences are made the basis of the story the idea is handled in a clean way, no suggestive or unnecessarily pointed situations being allowed to detract from the presentability of the attraction.

Upon this foundation is erected a superstructure in which a political element figures prominently. Exhibitors will find this angle valuable at the present time.

SYNOPSIS: Philip Pemberton, candidate for Governor, becomes so absorbed in his business that he neglects his wife and child. They grow weary of the situation, but are loyal. Opposing forces, seeking to wreck Pemberton's campaign by marrying his domestic happiness, lure Mrs. Pemberton to a country inn. Here she is forced into a compromising situation and her husband summoned. First denouncing her, he realizes his error when the chauffeur, a detective, discloses the situation. Returning home to his wife, he is convinced that he has done wrong in neglecting her and gives up his political campaign.

Norma Talmadge in
SHE LOVES AND LIES

Five-part comedy-drama; Select.
Directed by Chester Withey.
Published in April.

OPINION: Despite the improbability of the story adapted, Norma Talmadge, with her inviting mannerisms and the absolute freedom in her portrayal, makes satisfying it temporarily, amusement of "She Loves and Lies." Ably supported by Conway Tearle, she gives a humorous characterization of Marie Callender, who poses throughout the picture as three different persons.

"She Loves and Lies" is the last picture made by Miss Talmadge for Select. There is no doubt of the welcome it will receive for the publication of Miss Talmadge's name, combined with the picture has box office value in itself. Wilkie Collins wrote the short story from which the picture was adapted. It is a good leap year picture, for it is Marie Callender's proposal of marriage to Ernest Lismore that results in the humorous incident which forms the end of the subject. The fact that no effort is made to make the story seem plausible has its psychological effect in creating fun in the picture and relieving it of absurdity.

The scenes in the picture, from a room in a fashionable residence to a studio in the Bohemian quarter of a large city are well chosen. Supporting the star because Mr. Tearle is well engaged in the picture, Broske, Phillips Tead and Ida Darling.

SYNOPSIS: Marie Callender becomes engaged to a wealthy Lothario, but regrets it after Ernest Lismore, who is in financial difficulties, rescues her from a burning home. She breaks her engagement to the Lothario, but is left with the quarter of the city in order that he may save himself from financial ruin. He agrees and after their marriage Marie poses for a painter in the studio which is situated in a quarter of the city in order to see if Lismore will love her. One difficulty after another follows and finally Marie realizes her love for Lismore, and Lismore is happy to find that she is the painter who had won his heart.

Johnny Ray in
JIGGS IN SOCIETY

Two-part comedy; Christie.
Directed by Reggie Norris.
Published in April.

OPINION: The popularity of George McManus' newspaper comics may be taken by exhibitors as assurance that the first showing of the Christie comedies will be well attended. If "Jiggs in Society" is the first production used it reasonably certain that patrons will prove thoroughly of the series.

Johnny Ray's make-up, as that of the supporting players, is remarkable. All settings also seem to have been constructed with a page of McManus' drawings in hand.

The comedy itself is a curious mixture of polite humor and downright slapstick the two styles being alternated in effective quantities.

With "Mutt and Jeff," "The Gumps" and other newspaper comics appearing in cartoon form upon the screen it may be advisable to include in satirical mention of the fact that the Jiggs series is not of this character.

Gladys Brockwell in "The Mother of His Children," a drama of Paris studio life (Fox).
John Barrymore in
DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE
Six-part drama; Paramount Artcraft.
Directed by John S. Robertson.
Published and April 26.

OPINION: There are those who will not care for "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," Robert Louis Stevenson's remarkable story of a man with a dual personality, because it is not a pleasant picture and it does not have a happy ending. This, however, does not detract from the artistry of Mr. Barrymore nor from the beauty of the picture as a picture. It is a artistic triumph. Nothing Mr. Barrymore has ever done upon the screen has quite equaled it and the meritorious manner in which it is presented reflects great credit upon the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation.

Richard Mansfield and a number of other well known actresses from time to time included the Stevenson story in their repertoire and it is therefore more or less familiar to theatre-goers of the country. These will see and enjoy the screen version without shock to their nervous systems and those who have read the story will be prepared for the dramatic scenes enacted in a most telling and effective manner for nothing is spared in the silent drama's version. If anything it is more horrifying than the stage version and the transition from Dr. Jekyll, the lovable, kind physician, to the detestable, hideous Hyde is even more vivid by means of the double exposure than any stage make-up could possibly convey. The photography is very skillfully handled by Cameraman Roy Overbaugh in each instance.

Most of the acting falls upon the shoulders of Mr. Barrymore but a very capable cast appears in his support, including Martha Mansfield, Brandon Hurst, Charles Lane, Malcolm Dunn, Cecil Clodely, Nita Naldi and George Stevens.

SYNOPSIS: Dr. Jekyll, a young London physician, who devotes his every moment to helping the poor, discovers a drug that transforms him into a lustful brute. He assumes the name of Hyde and frequents the underworld of London, where he satisfies his craving for the company of lustful women. He is in love with Millicent Carew, a sweet, young girl who returns his love. Gradually, however, the fluid gets such a hold on him that he neglects Millicent and as Hyde turns to a music hall dancer, whom he drags down and then casts off entirely. In a fit of temper while talking to Millicent's father, he changes to Hyde and murders him. As Dr. Jekyll, he swears to Millicent that he will avenge her father's death. One of the ingredients of the mixture that he takes becomes extinct and when he learns that he can obtain no more he shoots himself in his laboratory and will admit to one. Millicent calls and is admitted and she is horrified to find the detestable Hyde. She escapes and as her friends inter they see him take poison and die a terrible death.

Frank Keenan in
DOLLAR FOR DOLLAR
Five-part drama; Pathe.
Directed by Frank Keenan.
Published in April.

OPINION: Frank Keenan is one of the few screen actors who is consistent in his efforts to produce photographs containing a high production standard and universal appeal. His productions, in the vernacular of the street, are never just slapped together. Keenan ranked high in his stage work and this undoubtedly has influenced him in giving to the motion picture public his best efforts. He seems determined to prove to the skeptical that the silent drama is an art that should receive the same consideration as the stage.

In his more recent productions, Keenan has dwelt considerably on phases of father love. The heart interest aroused by his pictures because of this aspect gives them the power to please not only the feminine patrons who usually make up the majority in a theatre, but also the men.

"Dollar, for Dollar" brings out this characteristic to a marked degree. Kee- nan, unusual, is exact in portrayal, and the production is a good example of his handiwork. His directorial methods merit the highest praise.

It is noticeable throughout Keenan productions that they are constructed without resorting to the suggestive, the device developing along wholesome lines and creating a tone of refinement. While it is to be expected that the story characterization stands out most prominently in the picture, the capable cast he has chosen as support deserves commendation. Kathleen Kirkham, in the leading feminine role, is fine both in the tense moments of motion and in the scenes depicting the lighter vein.

In the cast are Kate Van Bur- en, Jay Belasco, Harry Kendall and Harry Van Meter.

SYNOPSIS: Marcus Gard is a millionaire because of the unscrupulous business methods that he has resorted to. Mrs. Marteen and her daughter have seen his cunning in that Marteen was financially ruined by Gard. To get dollar for dollar, Mrs. Marteen becomes, a blackmailer and collects $50,000 from Gard. A man who is an enemy of Gard and who also mules money from Marteen fears blackmail and places a detective in Marteen's house. Gard reforms, makes it his duty to be the foster father of his enemy's son and Mrs. Marteen's daughter, and protects Mrs. Marteen from the clutches of a mutual enemy. Escape from an asylum of the enemy's first and legal wife, who sells him, develops the picture into a haplog ending for the four principals.

Katherine MacDonald in
PASSION'S PLAYGROUND
Six-part drama; First National.
Directed by J. A. Barry.
Published in May.

OPINION: If the lure of the gaming table were not strong ministers would be deprived of an ever-ready text. If the gambling instinct were not deeply implanted in human beings of all classes the press would be deprived of a but many lead stories. It is upon this human frailty that "Passion's Playground," is based, its appeal seems universal.

"The Guests of Hercules," the book by C. X. and A. M. Williamson from which the play was made, is doubtless well known to readers. It is a story of Monte Carlo, of the roulette table and the people who yield to its appeal.

The locale gives Katherine MacDonald an opportunity to appear at her best. Her magnificent gowns, in which she is photographed against the magnificent settings provided, make her striking beauty more than ever effective.

The story is based upon an unusual plot that not only could picture without overstressing incident to the detriment of characteri- zation. As directed by J. A. Barry, however, the work of the players scores less strongly than the story itself.

Katherine Kerry is admirably cast as Prince Vanno Della Robbia. In the half-dozen remaining important roles, for the picture involves a large cast. Nell Craig, Edith Stevens, Virginia Ainsworth, Rudolphine Valentine, Walt Whitman, Alice Wilson and Sylvia Jocelyn give satisfaction in their characterizations.

SYNOPSIS: Mary Grant, an orphan, leaves an Italian convent and goes to Monte Carlo, where, with beginner's luck, she breaks the bank. When her unsophisticated ways lead men to make unseemly advances she is protected by Prince Vanno Della Robbia, whom she later promises to marry. His brother's wife comes to visit her, and she learns that she is Marie Grant, formerly a student of the same convent, who eloped with a man who deserted her some years before. When a former sweetheart of her husband accuses her of the deed she places the blame upon Mary. Mary goes to a chateau in the mountains, where, when her life is threatened by crooks, the Prince, learning the truth of the matter, comes to her rescue. The happy ending follows.

Louise Glaum in

SEX

Seven-part drama: Hodkinson. Directed by Fred Niblo. Published in April.

OPINION: There is every reason to believe that this J. Parker Read, Jr., production will satisfy in every respect the diversified types of audiences that patronize theaters throughout the country. This satisfaction will not result, however, from any deliberate attempt on the part of the producer to include in the picture the ultra-modern aspect which, in the end, amounts only to display without actual story and pictorial value.

Contrary to the inference contained in the title, "Sex" does not blazon forth as an endeavor to produce box office value by sensational appeal.

Of paramount significance is the story from which the adaptation has been made. It is a forceful theme from the pen of C. Gardner Sullivan, forceful because it is so different from the usual plot development and because there is a lesson to be learned. It is not an effort, however, to moralize.

With the unusual in plot as a basis, elaborate settings have been supplied and a truly beautiful production has resulted. These factors, supplemented by creditable acting and direction make a play worthy of serious consideration by exhibitors who are seeking the best in the field.

The work of Louise Glaum is very commendable. She is convincing both as the first and as the second of the two principals, and as the wholesome, home-loving wife in the latter part. The gowns worn by Miss Glaum will please the masculine mind and will be as delightful to the eyes of the women as a fashion show.

Players that lend fine support are William Conklin, Myrtle Stedman, Irving Cummings and Peggy Pearce.

For its historical and interesting scenes in the picture is the prologue. It might be considered as representing the plot of the story in tableau form.

SYNOPSIS: Adrienne Renaut is the principal in a musical revue at a metropolitan cafe. Philip Overman becomes infatuated with her and when he finds his wife pleading with Adrienne not to break up their home life he divorces her. Meanwhile, Adrienne has fallen in love with Dave Wallace, a young millionaire, and they marry. Adrienne then is made to suffer as did Mrs. Overman, for Dave spends his days and nights with Daisy. She goes to plead with Daisy, and, like Mrs. Overman, she is found in the apartment by her husband. A divorce follows, and Adrienne takes the first boat for distant lands. On the vessel she sees Philip Overman and his wife, who are on their second honeymoon.

Mary MacLaren in

THE ROAD TO DIVORCE

Five-part drama: Universal. Directed by Philip Rosen. Published in April.

OPINION: Extreme care has been taken in the development of the simple story that is "The Road to Divorce." Subplots have been written deliberately and photographed neatly, a skillful use of a coon and sometimes quarreling doves giving them individuality. The story development is of extraordinary brilliancy, making enjoyable the commonplace settings and enhancing the more beautiful ones. Mary MacLaren looks her best when it is in the order of things and fails to look as miserable as the story demands that she should at other times, a feature which will be pardoned by all. Her acting is finished and effective, as it is also that of Bonnie Hill, a new player of promise.

The story is something of a disappointment considering the title. The road to divorce is not a gray one, and the principals step foot upon it the picture is near the end, and the turning back comes before any great suspense is created.

It is here, if anywhere that the production falls short. Its title promises something approaching the sensational. It is at least expected that a strong emotional element will be found in the picture. It, however, does not materialize. Instead, a logical story of matrimonial relations is unfolded in orderly sequence, the end, as the body incidents, occurring naturally and as expected.

A bit too much emphasis is given the sentimental side. If it were stronger it might be entertaining. If it were less prominent it would be detrimental. As it has been introduced it robs the story of much of its power.

SYNOPSIS: Dr. and Mrs. Shaw approach the parting of the ways after the birth of their second child, the attention the mother gives to the little ones causing her husband to grow away from her. When they are visited by Pauline Dall, a former chum of Mrs. Shaw, the husband finds it easy to become infatuated with her. On the last afternoon of her visit he takes her sailing, declaring his love and finding it reciprocated. But a storm arises and they return to shore, realizing that Mrs. Shaw is out in a row boat. He immediately realizes that he loves his wife more than anyone else and goes into the storm to find her. He fails and they bring him home, exhausted. Mrs. Shaw returns safely and the result is a reconciliation.

Walter McGrail in

BLIND YOUTH

Six-part drama: National Picture Theatres. Directed by Ted Sloman. Published in April.

SYNOPSIS: Walter McGrail and Leatrice Joy, who have been advancing rapidly in popular favor during the past six months, are responsible in a large measure to the unusual appeal which "Blind Youth," the second of the National Picture Theatres productions, should have to the theatre-going public.

Both are ideally fitted for the parts assigned them, he as a talented sculptor who loses his ambition but finds it again through his principal's inspiration, and she as an artist's model.

The story centers around the sculptor's masterpiece, entitled "Blind Youth," which represents his youthful folly. The incident is well handled, being emphasized sufficiently to carry the theme, but not enough to detract from the coherence of the story development.

The picture has every essential of a well made production. Aside from the two principals, the cast includes Claire McDowell, Joseph Swickard, Ora Crev, Colin Kenny, Clara Horton, Bobby Post and Leo White. The photography and titling are well done. The settings are appropriate and in several instances elaborate.

SYNOPSIS: When Elizabeth and Pierre Monnier part, the mother takes Henry and the father takes the other son, Maurice, to Paris with him. Maurice shows promise as a sculptor, but life is ruined when he marries Clarice and she deserts him to go with Jule Chardoc, a returned soldier.

At the death of his father, Maurice returns to New York, but finds his mother and brother ashamed of him. He walks the street for a time contemplating suicide, but is given new hope by the interest shown in him by Hope Martin, an artist's model. With her posing for him he makes a figure called "Blind Youth," which brings him fame over night.

tells her of his unfortunate marriage. Clara reappears to share his troubles, but finally realizing that his happiness means more to her than wealth, she confesses that her marriage to him had been a mistake. She admits her love to Bygland and they become engaged, and Maurice weds Hope.

Bert Lytell in ALIAS JIMMY VALENTINE
Six-part drama; Metro. Script by Maxwell Karger. Published in April.

OPINION: This adaptation of a well known and popular melodrama gives Bert Lytell another opportunity to display his skill in realistic characterization. While the screen story might succeed with some competent players in the stellar role, the fact that Lytell gave such an excellent portrayal in "The Right of Way" will give added value to the picture.

It is safe to predict that Metro will find a ready market for this production, for it is one that an exhibitor will want to screen to satisfy his patrons. Metro's announced policy of giving the people screen versions of the best in plays and stories has paid dividends, and the future has been amply fulfilled. And this picture is further indication of the company's good determination.

Besides carrying the name of Lytell with it to give it box office power, "Alias Jimmy Valentine" is an intensely interesting story of a type of story that always has had a universal following. Paul Armstrong's melodrama is not a dime novel, but a clever with a killing on every page. Instead, it is a polite crook play with plot development relying upon the battle of wits between Jimmy Valentine, a detective, and Lytell's portrayal of the reformed criminal is exacting. His work demands attention at all times. Aiding in the success of the picture are Vola Vale, Eugene Pallette, William Taylor, Marc Robbins, Robert Dunbar, Winter Hall and James Farley.

SYNOPSIS: Lee Randall, alias Jimmy Valentine, is confined in Sing Sing prison for robbery. He is pardoned however, by the lieutenant governor and his niece, Rose Lane, who had been saved from assault by Lytell. Lee's girl, Kate, and urges two of his fellow criminals to go straight. Rose, who has fallen in love with Lee, induces her father to employ him in his store. Lytell employs another reformed criminal, Red Jocelyn, as watchman, he story then develops into a battle of wits between Lee and Detective Doyle. When it seems as though Randall has outwitted the sleuth, he is compelled to use his skill in opening a vault in order to save Rose's little sister from suffocation. The detective catches him in the act of opening the vault, but when he asks of the love that exists between Rose and Lee he departs.

Selznick officials declare that their offices have been swamped with complimentary messages from exhibitors throughout the country lauding the new star.
Alice Brady in

SINNERS

Five-part drama; Realart.
Directed by Kenneth Webb.
Published in April.

OPINION: The story told in “Sinn-ers” is of the unsophisticated girl who meets with untoward circumstances in the city where she has gone to earn a livelihood for herself and her mother; of her struggle against these adverse conditions, and finally of her return home and subsequent marriage to the man who had proved himself her friend.

A large and very capable cast assisting in the adaptation includes Miss Brady’s husband,James L. Crane, Agnes Ever-ett, Augusta Anderson, Lorraine Frost, Nor Reed, William P. Carleton, Frank Losee, Crauford Kent and Robert Scha- blo.

While this is not Miss Brady’s best picture, it has qualities which place it in the entertaining class. Particularly notable is the work of Augusta Anderson, Agnes Everett and Lorraine Frost. They fit well into their respective roles and lend color to the production.

The list of men in the cast includes several popular players and the work of each prompts words of commendation. The small town scenes in the production have been well chosen and add to the general appeal of the subject.

SYNOPSIS: Mary Horton, finding that the family funds are diminishing, goes to New York to find work. Failing to get employment with friends of the banker in her home town, she accepts the invitation to live with Hilda Newton, whose character is considered question-able by residents of the sleepy little town. Bob Merrick, a millionaire, falls in love with Mary. Discouraged with life, Mary is leaning toward the primrose path. The news that her mother is very sick takes her back home. Her city friends journey to the little town one Sunday and with them is Merrick and Hilda. Hilda reforms and Mary and Bob wed in the small town.

Nazimova in

THE HEART OF A CHILD

Five-part drama; Metro-Classics
Directed by Ray C. Smallwood
Published in April.

OPINION: Fan expectations based upon previous Nazimova performances are fulfilled in “The Heart Of A Child.” The production can be submitted to your audience with full confidence that the popular verdict will be one of approval.

As Sally Snape, the product of Lon- don’s Limehouse district, leading her way through adventure after adventure into the position of Lady Kiddemister, the star has ample scope for her talents. Her naturally headlong style of acting isaccommodated by swift contri- minuity and the action embraces several incidents that would have served many producers for a separate feature each.

Charles Bryant, who plays the masu-cle lead, is credited with the adaptation. It is one of which he may well be proud. Toward the end there is a slight deviation from style that may be construed by some as a “slowing up.” It is not that.

It is, if the picture is properly presented, an effective interjection of better class drama into what has been until then rather robust melodrama.

Though the entire story is represented as having taken place in England, capable actors make all characterizations intelligible to American audiences and settings are sufficiently cosmopolitan as to cause no discomfort.

An excellent device has been used in dispensing with stereotyped subtitles, an impressionistic picture the significance of which is unmistakable serving to carry the thought. Picture producers should give the picture attention with this feature in mind.

Excellent suggestions for the exploi-tation and presentation designers are contained in the picture itself. The exhibitor should view it some time before playing date and lay his plans accordingly.

The production is worthy of the best additional features that can be provided.

SYNOPSIS: Sally Snape, child of the Limehouse district, London, is left when her father murders her mother in a drunken rage. Lady Doro-thea Lytham, dill-tante charity worker, whose car later injures the girl, obtains employment for her in a modiste’s shop as model. Here she is observed by Lord Kidderminster, cousin of Lady Dorothea, who falls in love with her. When he declares his interest in marrying her Lady Dorothea, thinking to protect the family from such an alliance, arranges it so that the two will spend a night alone in a mountain lodge. Next morning they motor to the home of Lord Kidderminster’s father, where Lady Dorothea has been rejected by him.

For example, only to find that his parents heartily dis-approve of such methods. When the couple arrive parental permission is ob-tained and the wedding follows.

Sheldon Lewis in

DR. JEKYLL AND MR. HYDE

Five-part drama; Pioneer.
Published on a State Rights Basis.

OPINION: Sheldon Lewis, whose stage portrayal of Robert Louis-Stev- enson’s famous dual personality gained considerable press comment, brings to the screen a strong convincing portr-ayal.

The famous old play, which has struck terror to the young people of the world for years, ignites power in film form because of the greater facilities offered by that medium of expression. The cast is well executed and more suggested rather than presented within the limits of the three-wall stage. Upon the screen his descents into the crim-inal character are more vividly, and hence more dramatically, represented.

A well-balanced cast renders adequate support without in any degree dimin-ishing the star’s appeal. The work of the various members is in the factory, though limited by the nature of the story.

A dream ending has been supplied which many exhibitors will doubtless believe better suited to their purpose than the tragic one written by the author and used in the stage version.

Another slight change is made, the elec-tric chair being brought into play as the instrument of execution. Interest is at its highest point when, with HYde strapped in the chair and about to be electrocuted, a wholly unexpected di-scovery brings about the story ending.

SYNOPSIS: Dr. Jekyll is a respectable physician and an earnest worker for th-ehfterment of humanity, is engaged t Bernice Lamont, daughter of another physician. Following out a series of ex-periments calculated to prove the there is no soul, he discovers a drug that changes his nature into one of base-brutality and an antidote which restores him to his normal self. While in h-secondary personality he commits mur-ders, robberies and other crimes wi-definite purpose save the satisfac-tion of his brutal lust. Bernice, neglect-bring is left to deal with the mon-sters of his life. Captured by the police his dual personality is discovered and he is placed in the electric chair for execution, when he awakens to find that all has been a dream.
Managing Director Chris Glumm of the Victory theatre has announced that his house will be closed for two weeks, during which time extensive remodelling will take place. It is planned to make the Victory one of the finest and most comfortable of the smaller theatres in the city. The interior and front of the building will be completely redecorated.

Colleen Moore has started work in a Marshall Wilde production at the Hollywood studios. She has one of the two leading feminine roles, the other being played by Marjorie Dale.

Jesse L. Lasky has returned to New York. He declared before leaving that he expected to see the opening of the new Long Island studio, which his London studios are also completed," said Mr. Lasky. "Adolph Zukor, president of Famous Players-Lasky, is there for the opening. Hugh Ford is sailing for England to make the first production in the new studio, which will be a film version of Marie Corelli's "The Sorrows of Satan." The Jerome K. Jerome story, "Miss Hobbs," which Annie Russell made famous, will be the first starring vehicle for Wanda Hawley, who has just been placed under contract by Realart.

"The Texas Steer," which has had a rest of two decades or more, is to be revived for the films by Sam Rork, who will present it under the National banner with an all-star cast. James Young will direct the feature. "The Texas Steer" was one of the original fourteen farces by Charles H. Hoyt, which were purchased for Charles Ray, but were found unsuitable for him.

Tom Geraghty, one of our prize young scenario writers, has left Douglas Fairbanks to join Lasky's. He is reported to have signed a long term contract.

More property has been acquired by Metro for additional buildings. One entire city block, making the total space covered by the studio more than seventeen acres, exclusive of the sixty-four-acre park at Rose Hill.

Mildred Harris Chaplin is the envy of film colony. She went to San Diego at the invitation of Lady Stuart MacKenzie--meet the Prince of Wales at the big ball given in his honor at the Coronado hotel.

William Desmond, Hampton star, has resumed work on his current produc- tion, "Man From Make-Believe," after having been ill with the influenza.

Cleo Ridgley (Mrs. James Horne) has turned to the screen after an absence of three years. She is to appear with Lew Ay in "The Mischief Man."

Florence Turner has just completed her starring role in "The Ugly Duckling," G. B. Samuelson photodrama, one of the six pictures made in America by the British producer. Upon his return to Los Angeles in September, when he will build a studio, it is probable that Miss Turner will keep the contract offered her by Samuelson.

Hope Loring, under whose supervision serial and western productions are made, has sent out an S. O. S. for snappy originals. Miss Loring, herself the author of many screen successes, has suggested to screen writers that the comedy relief is particularly desirable in fast-moving western scripts.

William C. Dowlan, who directed Volta Muriel's last picture, "Dangerous to Men," is to produce "Head and Shoulders" with the same star.

Carol Holloway apparently has forsaken the serial field. The former lead for William Duncan has joined William H. Crane's cast for "The New Henrietta" at Metro.

May Allison took Helen Taft, president of Bryn Mawr, in tow during her recent visit here and showed her through the Metro studio.

Bert Grassby has just finished playing lead opposite Clara Kimball Young in "The Soul of Raisel." He achieved credit recently for his work with Louise Glaum in "The Lone Wolf's Daughter" and with Mildred Harris Chaplin in "The Interior Sex."

Pauline Curley has just completed "The Invisible Hand" with Antonio Moreno, and will be feminine lead in the new Vitaphone serial "The Veiled Woman."

Eyre Powell, special representative of the Frontier Days committee of Cheyenne, Wyoming, is in Los Angeles to induce Al Jennings and Emmett Dalton to be present at the big celebration at the western city.

The first of a new series of Sherlock Holmes comedies starring Polly Moran are now being shot at the National studios.

Bob Thorne is getting ready to film his first Jesse D. Hampton special, "Half a Chance" from Frederick Isham's widely read novel. Thorne made his "purse" by his ability of Blanche Sweet features.

Jack Dempsey is a member of the local film colony no more. His serial is finished at Brutton's and none of the Rankhoites seem to be worrying about his present whereabouts.

Captain R. B. Kidd, the major domo of the Brutton studio, is busy titling the latest Mae Marsh production "Mary Carey," adapted from Kate Landley Posner's novel.

Pat Dowlings is wearing a happy smile. He paraded his Christie beauties before a hundred thousand persons at the Spring Fashion Revue at Venice on Easter Sunday.

Carl Laemmle, the Universal chief, is finding a few spare weeks ends to commute to Tia Juana. He is said to be ahead of the pari-mutuel machines and the faro dealers.

Hoot Gibson, the western star, has a feminine lead. It is Alma Bennett, formerly seen in Lyons and Moran comedies.

Elmo Lincoln, the strong man of the "U," is back from a two weeks' location trip to Yosemite Valley.

Olga Linke Scholl, who collaborates with Allen Holubar on "The Heart of Humanity" and "The Right to Happiness," is in daily conference with the young producer at his new Beverly Hills home of the story which he is to do for Al Kaufman, with Dorothy Phillips as the star.

Carlyle Robinson, Douglas Fairbanks' mouthpiece, is on his way to Minneapolis to supervise some special exploitation for "When the Clouds Roll By."

"Chub" Florence and "Hank" Petters, former Chicagoans now located at San Francisco, are buying black bordered handkerchiefs, as they will soon mourn the loss of their boss and manager of the Pathe 'Frisco office, H. J. Henriouille, who is getting ready for his annual trip to New York City. But they are thankful that it will be for only a few weeks, as they say he is the best boss ever.

Even as Eve, with a special cast.—A good thriller for the audiences that like thrillers.—H. G. Grant, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—Not much to it. Very poor card for second day.—A. G. Hauge, Happy Hour theatre, Walnut, Ia.—Local patronage.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—Constance in a very cute role. About her second appearance. Will please 90% of your audience at least.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Human Desire, with Anita Stewart.—Fair business first day on name of star. Second day fell away down. Anita Stewart is not doing up the good.—Meyers & Ford, Arcade theatre, La Grande, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—Played this two days. Doubled admission. Drew well and pleased well.—J. J. Goedert, Opera house, Mapleton, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Mary Regan, with Anita Stewart.—Good. Poor card for second day.—F. W. Jones, Palace theatre, Austin, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Patrons say best Mary Pickford yet. Capacity business in spite of a free show at another house.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Heart o’ the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—Very good picture. Pleased them all six reels.—Louis Frana, Olympic theatre, Sanford, Kans.

The Hoodlum, with Mary Pickford.—Good picture to fair business. I think Amarily of Clothes Line Alley just as good.—Rae Peacock, Mystic theatre, Sanford, Kans.

Two Weeks, with Constance Talmadge.—Good picture and pleased a large audience.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Auction of Souls, with Aurora Mardigan.—Picture excellent, but leaves too terrible an impression. Not a picture for children.—G. D. Rogers, Gem theatre, Lynden, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Back to God’s Country, with Nell Shipman.—Very good picture. Will please them all. Advance prices.—Louis Frana, Olympic theatre, Calmar, Ia.

IN OLD KENTUCKY

With Anita Stewart

Class “A.” A picture you can exploit. Everyone has heard of the play. Boost it big, as you will not be overrating it to your patrons. Get out theropes when you run it. Hope we have a few more big pictures like it before 1920 rolls out.—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theater, 2844 Madison St., Chicago, III.

It’s a pleasure to get hold of a picture like this one. 100% book it and spend mony on exploitation and you will clean up. It’s sure fire ammunition.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.

Very good. Played this on percentage. Don’t do it. boys. This is one of the few they all like.—J. J. Goedert, Opera house, Mapleton, Ia.

One of the best pictures we ever ran. No chance to go wrong on this one.—E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.

Fox

Eastward Ho, with William Russell.—Good. Full of pep.—W. J. Wilke, Plaza theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.—General patronage.

Heartstrings, with William Farnum.—Very good picture to big business.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Evangeline, with Miriam Cooper.—I broke my house record with this picture. Extra good picture for classics. I used our big screen for this picture, which gave me good publicity.—R. H. Stephens, Royal theatre, Sheridan, Ark.—Small town patronage.

The Love That Dares, with Madelaine Traverse.—This is a good picture, and pleased all. Do not like a title with the word “love” in it. I made up my mind this would be a fake, but happy to say I was fooled. Bad roads, but full house.—John Alsbop, Columbia-Hall, Grace, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hell Ship, with Madelaine Traverse.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Durand of the Bad Lands, with Dustin Farnum.—Drew well and seemed to please.—Knickler theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Broken Commandment, with Gladys Brockwell.—Good picture. Good story if your audience likes heavy stuff.—Alvin S. Frank, Jewel theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Manhattan Knight, with George Walsh.—George Walsh is shipping here. Business fair. Picture the same.—Pfeifer Bros., Opera house, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hell Roarin’ Reform, with Tom Mix.—A very good picture. Mix is the best drawing card I have. I can always fill my house with Mix. Patrons are always satisfied.—E. E. Harman, Opera house, Elgin, Ore.—Small town patronage.

A Manhattan Knight, with George Walsh.—The acting was fair enough, but entirely too much blood and thunder. Not the right kind of a picture for Walsh.—Chuck Townsend, Lyceum theatre, Leavenworth, Kans.—General patronage.

Be a Little Sport, with Albert Ray and Elmer Fair.—Good program picture that everyone liked.—Whitman & Graffot, Princess theatre, Buchanan, Mich.—General patronage.

Wings of the Morning, with William Farnum.—Very good. Photography clear. My audience likes this star much better than his brothers Dustin or Franklin.—Chas. Biggle, Moorean theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

Faith, with Peggy Hyland.—Not as good as other Hyland pictures. Good story, but something is wrong.—Ernest Stelling, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Rough Riding Romance, with Tom Mix.—One of the most sensational scenes ever pictured. Sure to please. Advertise it big. A Sunday record-breaker for me.—J. E. Stocker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Tim Pan Alley, with Albert Ray and Elmer Fair.—Same class with Words and Music. Very poor. Am losing patrons on their pictures.—C. F. Hancock, Lyric theatre, Stuart, Fla.—Small town patronage.

Caught in the Act, with Peggy Hyland.—A good comedy-drama. Stars’ work good.—C. N. Bartow, Opera house, Medora, III.—Small town patronage.

business to good weather.—E. Gailey.
Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—General patronage.

Rose of the West, with Madlaine Traverse.—This may shock some people's modesty, but it will please those who like strong dramas.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE RAINBOW TRAIL, with William Farnum.—If you have not used Riders of The Purple Sage and The Rainbow Trail, by all means do so to please your patrons and make some money for your house. Don't be afraid to advertise.—E. E. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.

The Plunderer, with William Farnum.—Book it. It pays. Pleases them all. Star especially well liked here.—Harr & Ottmar,Idle Hour theatre, Eureka, S. Dak.

Be a Little Sport, with Albert Ray and Eluinor Fair.—Finest comedy-drama I have ever run. Little Old Wild Man great.—A. B. Bird, Opera House, Arlington, la.—Rural patronage.

Goldwyn

Through the Wrong Door, with Madge Kennedy.—A very pleasing comedy-drama. One of Madge's best pictures.—C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

One of the Finest, with Tom Moore.—This will please them all. This comedy is fine, and this star puts it over good. Good business.—Will Perry, Grand theatre, Alvin, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jubilo, with Will Rogers. Fine. Rogers is a comer.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

Pinto, with Mabel Normand.—Fair picture. Normand not so popular now.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

A House Divided, with Ruby de Remer.—Another picture that is not what it is cracked up to be. It is a good picture, but not good enough to be put in the class of specials.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—This one did not go over as good as former Moore pictures.—Peter Krant, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Perfect 36, with Mabel Normand.—Picture disappointing. Star failed to register. Pictures like this and Mabel Normand will no longer be a drawing card.—A. C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Water, Water Everywhere, with Will Rogers.—Rogers is good. He is different and they like him. Big business on this with Arlunkle in The Garage.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

One Week of Life, with Pauline Frederick.—Picture fair. Half reel more would improve it 50%.—A. G. Hauge, Happy Hour theatre, Walnut, la.—Local patronage.

A Perfect 36, with Mabel Normand.—Pleased about half and half. Too silly for the educated classes. Consider it just fair.—Harold Daspit, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with Jack Pickford.—Best production in months. Everybody enjoyed it. Book it. Ran two days to big business. —Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Hallmark

When a Woman Strikes, with Ben Wilson.—Good Western picture with a good star. If your patrons like Western pictures, book this one.—Joseph Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Win Wins, with Florence Billington.—Fine picture that holds suspense to last.—W. J. Wilks, Plaza theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.—General patronage.

The Heart of a Gypsy, with Florence Billington.—This one is just fair. Not as good as Win Wins with same star.—E. X. Brown, Stocking theatre, Grand Rapids, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Good Dividend, with Sylvia Dreamer.—Good picture, but clothes are out of date. Everyone was pleased.—Joseph Adcock, Grand theatre, Princeton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The young lady watering the ferns and the one with the lipstick, is Bessie DeLitch, while the one with the ruffled bathing costume is Enza Letrich. They appear in late Christie comedies.
Treated Rough—Likes It

Arlene Pretty

In a between-scenes frolic in New Hampshire during the filming of "The Timber Wolf," a Selznick production.

Selfish Yates, with William S. Hart.

An average Hart that pleased his admirers.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.—Small town patronage.

Male and Female, a Cecil B. DeMille production.

Good picture, but disappointed some.—A. C. Moore, Alamо theatre, Bartlett, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

—Book it. Advertise it big. We raised admission. Plenty of comedies.—Pfeiffer Bros., Crescent theatre, Anaduho, ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Thou Gavest Me, with Katherine MacDonald.

If properly exploited this picture will bring them back strength and circulation and gross more than the first.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera house, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

All-of-a-Sudden Peggy, with Marguerite Clark.

Stepping Out, with Enid Bennett.

—Pleasing picture.—Meyers & Ford, Arcade theatre, La Grande, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Putting It Over, with Bryant Washburn.

—This was A-1. Washburn goes very well here. Can sound a return connection.—Annie Lee, Detention theatre, which is a peach. I have more compliments on this program than any for a long time.—H. H. Burden, Mirage theatre, Axtell, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.

—One of the best pictures ever played and biggest drawing card this house has ever had.—Oaklawn theatre, Danville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

THE SIX BEST CELLARS, with Bryant Washburn.

It is a joy to present pictures that evoke as much hearty approval as this. Without a helpful compos.—P. E. Morris, Regent theatre, Cleveland, Miss.

La Apache, with Dorothy Dalton.

The picture is not the best she ever made, but the name drew good.—J. C. Lattom, American theatre, Breck-eridge, Tex.—General patronage.

Crooked Straight, with Charles Ray.

False Faces, with Henry B. Wathall.

—Very good. Pleased those who saw it. However, not much of a drawing card.—C. Oldham, Dixie theatre, McMinnville, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sadie Love, with Billie Burke.

—Good interesting picture. Average business.—Will F. Krahn, Lorin theatre, Berkeley, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

True Heart Susie, a D. W. Griffith production.

A Society Exile, with Elsie Ferguson.

This star does not draw.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Roaring Road, with Wallace Reid.

—Was just fine. Everybody liked it. Good business.—W. B. Endert theatre, Lake City, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Career of Katherine Bush, with Gwen Calverley.

—Classy picture but there was something lacking. Audience indifferent.—E. F. Franck, Oasis theatre, Ajo, Ariz.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Official Fiancee, with Vivian Martin.

—It's her last picture on Paramount program. Too bad after her last two. The Third Kiss and Her Official Fiancee. They boosted her stock.—B. M. Cotton, Opera house, Florence, Ky.—General patronage.

The Danger Mark, with Elsie Ferguson.

—Very poor. Our patrons were disgusted with star and picture. Paramount Artcraft pictures do not draw in our town.—Chas. F. Dale, Topic theatre, Fairfax, Mo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Witness for the Defense, with Elsie Ferguson. Although this picture seemed to please, it did not draw any business.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera house, Kenton, Ohio.—General patronage.

What Every Woman Wants, with Enid Bennett.

—Impossible. Next year they will be unsellable. Artcraft, but story 32.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Miracle Man, with a special cast.

—We lost money on this picture.—C. X. Jacobs, Kozy theatre, Chatsworth, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

Arizona, with Douglas Fairbanks.

One of Fairbanks' best. That isn't saying much. His average pictures are good mamee stuff; brings the kids out.—B. Endert's Endert theatre, Crescent City, Cal.—General patronage.

Men, Women and Money, with Ethel Clayton.

—A fine title that drew them in, and a picture that entertains.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.
Pathe

Smouldering Embers, with Frank Keenan.—A typical Keenan production. More than pleased a packed house. Give us more like this.—Knickerbocker theatre, Jefferson and Belle Isle Bridge, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Other Men's Shoes, an Edgar Lewis production.—A fine picture. One any house should be proud to show. Preach-ers endorsed this one.—H. G. Ramsey, Royal theatre, El Dorado, Kans.—General patronage.

Smouldering Embers, with Frank Keenan.—All Keenan pictures are good, and this is well up to the standard. Business good.—C. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The A. B. C. of Love, with Mae Murray.—Good picture. Pleased all.—E. Gailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—General patronage.

The Love Cheat, with June Caprice.—A light comedy-drama. Not a poor one. Average good. Pathe will help the small exhibitors.—Harry Pace, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

Respectable By Proxy, with Sylvia Breamer.—We showed this and a Larry Semon comedy, The Grocery Clerk, for a Sunday program. Never had more favorable comments on any show. The comedy is a scream.—Chuck Townsend, Lyceum theatre, Leavenworth, Kans.—General patronage.

The Midnight Stage, with Frank Keenan.—Admittedly good character work, but the picture did not please. Good business.—H. W. Kerr, Opera house, Little Sioux, la.

Impossible Catherine, with Virginia Pearson.—This is a good comedy-drama and it will please the average audience. Good business two days on this one.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

Realert

The Luck of the Irish, an Allan Dwan production.—Big business for four days and very good picture.—Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore.

Sinners, with Alice Brady.—A good regular program picture. Good for matinées. Not so well for male audiences.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—Splendid production that pleased every one who saw it, and went over big at advanced prices.—Whitman & Graffiot, Princess theatre, Buchanan, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Soldiers of Fortune, with a special cast.—Pretty fair picture. Title must have hurt it here because it failed to draw.—Alton S. Frank, Jewet theatre, Lafayette, Colo.—Neighborhood patronage.

Nurse Marjorie, with Mary Miles Minter.—Most too high class for average audience. Miss Minter does good work, but not a subject she is at home in. Not up to her two previous subjects.—Fred Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Judy of Rogue's Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—Good picture. Business fair for four days.—Majestic theatre, Portland, Ore.

Robertson-Cole

The Third Generation, with a special cast.—First film picture. First from a special.—Knickerbocker theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Prodigal Liar, with William Russell.—Fair picture. Good business.—W. J. Wilke, Plaza theatre, Wichita Falls, Tex.

Poor Relations, with Florence Vidor. —An excellent production.—H. H. Billings, Pleasant Hour theatre, Pine Island, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Beloved Cheater, with Lew Cody.—Failed to please.—Knickerbocker theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Woman Michael Married, with Bessie Barricale.—Gave good satisfaction, but not up to her average with us.—H. H. Billings, Pleasant Hour theatre, Pine Island, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Select

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—An excellent, entertaining picture. Pleased everyone. Good business three days. This star always gets the money.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Studio Girl, with Constance Talmadge.—Rather old picture, but pretty good.—J. L. Meyers, Liberty theatre, Livedale, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—Patrons praised it highly. Drew extra well for two days.—J. E. Stoker, Myrtle theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The House of Glass, with Clara Kimball Young.—This was a good one for a small town. Everyone was pleased. A good program.—Jno. I. Saunders, Che-nex theatre, Meneny, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Death Dance, with Alice Brady.—A very good picture. Right next to The Redhead. It is a picture that will please all classes. It's old but good.—E. R. McMullen, A-Muse-U theatre, Las Cruces, N. M.—General patronage.

FLORIDIAN DESIRE

As Kate Leder in the Maurice Tourneur production of F. Hopkinson Smith's novel, 'Curly West, Master Diver,' which is now being filmed at Universal City.

Cecelia of the Pink Roses, with Mac Dowi-son Davies.—Good picture. Pleased everyone. Did not draw very good.—E. D. Luna, Hubert theatre, Hubert, Okla.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Veiled Adventure, with Constance Talmadge.—A good program picture.—A. J. Stiegcall, Opera house, Fayette, la.—College town patronage.

His Bridal Night, with Alice Brady.—Pleased everyone. Good comedy.—H. H. Billings, Pleasant Hour theatre, Pine Island, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Savage Woman, with C. K. Young.—They kidded this picture. Photography and everything else was poor.—Raymond Piper, Piper's Opera House, Virginia, Neb.

Good Night Paul, with Constance Tal-madge.—Don't fail to get this picture and send your patrons out smiling, and be sure to see them back for the next one.—Geo. S. Tuttle, Postville theatre, Postville, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Universal

His Divorced Wife, with Monroe Sal-sbury.—Good picture, and pleased pa-trons. Bad weather and snow made me lose money.—E. Dewhirst, Beverly Pic-ture theatre, Beverly, Kans.—Small town patronage.

Ace of the Saddle, with Harry Carey.—Worst storm ever and opposition across the street. Had full house. All well pleased; was well advertised. My patrons like Harry. Book 'em all; they are good.—John Allsop, Columbia Hall, Grace, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

Marked Men, with Harry Carey.—A real production, and if anyone but Universal had it would be rated as an extra-special, at an advance in rental. Carey gets the money.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

MARKED MEN, with Harry Carey.—If you are not pictured in this star, why not? He has them all heat. This is his best picture yet.—H. L. Liggett, National theatre, McRae, Ga.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stroheim.—Good picture. Fair attendance.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

The Brute BREAKER, with Frank Mayo.—The Brute BREAKER, Under Suspicion, Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie, The Peddler of Lies, Gun Fighting Gentleman—all good clean pictures better than the average.—H. Pace, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

The Unpainted Woman, with Mary MacLaren.—Very entertaining picture, but keeping very poor in places. Seemed like production had been hurried to picture's detriment.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.—Small town patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stroheim.—Drew well and was well liked. One of Universal's best.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Marked Men, with Harry Carey.—One of the best Carey features we have ever run. It is 100% entertainment and above the average.—T. C. Shipley, Essaness theatre, Rushville, Nebr.

The Man in the Moonlight, with Monroe Salisbury.—No plot to the picture. Scene was good but not enough to the picture to keep the audience interested.—Kenneth Snyder, Pastime theatre, Mapleton, Minn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Sundown Trail, with Monroe Salisbury.—Nice clean picture. We are well pleased with Universal productions.—Frank Allen, Rose theatre, Byron, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Brute BREAKER, with Frank Mayo.—Full of action. What you would call a fine picture. Fine scenery. Business only fair.—Wm. Thacher, Royal theatre, Solna, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Blinding Trail, with Monroe Salisbury.—Forgot about this one. Nothing to it. Poor story. Salisbury not a drawing card here.—E. E. Harman, Opera House, Elgin, Ore.—Small town patronage.

Lasca, with Frank Mayo.—Played this three days to good business. This is one of the keenest pictures of a Western subject I have ever run. Edith Roberts is a coming star.—Fred McCoy, Liberty theatre, Ft. Scott, Kans.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Big Little Person, with Mae Murray.—Boys, this is awful. If you have it any more, substitute something else for it.—K. J. Uglow, Strand theatre, Whitewater, Wis.

The Phantom Melody, with Monroe Salisbury.—Poor for Salisbury. Story on the war order is not popular.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Specials

The Forbidden Woman, with Clara Kimball Young.—Very good picture. Good money-getter. Good business for two days. Clara is a big star in this city.—Major theatre, Portland, Ore.

Mickey with Mabel Normand.—I played this picture to the best house I have ever run. Kept them waiting for second show. They came from ten to fifteet miles just to see Mickey. Don't fail to book this one. They will never forget it. It pleased all.—R. H. Stephens, Royal theatre, Sheridan, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Your Wife and Mine, with Eva Dorrington.—Very good melodrama, but photography very poor in some scenes. Good for Friday and Saturday patrons. Some very good stunts in it. Good business two nights.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Bargain, with William S. Hart.—Drew the largest house this star ever brought me. and pleased the Hart fans.—Harold Dyer, Atherton theatre, Kentwood, La.—Neighborhood patronage.

Human Passions, with Lottie Tolford.—Went over big at raised admission prices.—Vincent Sazama, Cornell Square theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Confession, with Henry B. Waithall.—Broke all records. Stood them up in the rain for three days' record business all week. People going wild over this.—Major theatre, Portland, Ore.

Atonement, with a special card.—Good picture. Fine photography. Liked by all who saw it. You can advertise this and make good.—R. H. Stephens, Royal theatre, Sheridan, Ark.

Custer's Last Fight, with a special card.—Chief Bull Bear and his squaw visited the schools. Easy and very effective advertising. Picture old but very well produced. Big business tho very bad weather.—Mrs. K. B. Ransley, Park Ridge theatre, Park Ridge, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Serials

Daredevil Jack (Pathé), with Jack Dempsey.—Last night we played the sixth episode and business has been getting bigger right along. Go to it, boys, and book this serial. A clean-up.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, Ohio.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lightning Bryce (Arrow), with Jack Hoxie and Anne Little.—On episode 4 and holding up fine. I class this serial as a money-getter for any exhibitor.—H. J. Doody, Atlas theatre, Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Man of Might (Vitagraph), with William Duncan.—First episode Tuesday night. Worst storm of season. Business much better than expected. Picture starts well.—Hardin Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

The Trail of the Octopus (Hallmark), with Ben Wilson.—S. R. D. on third episode. Still more on fourth.—J. W. Lumpkin, Cupid theatre, Miles, Tex.—Small town patronage.

PORTABLE STUDIO SWITCHBOARD
New Lighting System Installed in New York Plant of International Film Company—It Is Said That Remarkable Effects are Produced

One of the essentials of artistic motion picture filming is light. The unreliability of Old Sol has eliminated that source of supply and once again electricity, through the medium of the arc light, has been called into play. Every modern studio has its quota of powerful arc lights with skillful operators, and any scene can be photographed irrespective of dull, cloudy weather or darkness outside.

The operation of the arc light, however, demands the attention of experts and it is further necessary that these experts have efficient equipment at their disposal in order to obtain the best results. Progress in the electrical field has been reflected in better production on the screen and it naturally follows that the practice of today is to give every attention to the electrical equipment of the studio.

Installed by International
International Film Company of New York has installed in its modern studio, an elaborate lighting system capable of producing some remarkable effects. A typical part of this installation is a switchboard combining mechanical efficiency and serviceability.

This switchboard is a Westinghouse-Krantz product and is designed specially for work of this nature. It consists of a slate panel on which are mounted six three-pole single throw 125-ampere knife switches. Each knife feeds to a three point Kliegl receptacle capable of taking care of one six-way Kliegl spider box. The switches, receptacles and plugs are contained in a No. 12 gauge steel box and two swinging doors permit access to the switches. The doors may be secured and contact with live parts thus made impossible.

Switchboard Is Portable
Connection is made to the main line at the top of the switchboard and six circuits may be operated simultaneously if required.

The outstanding feature of this switchboard is its portability. It is mounted on four wheels and can be quickly and easily removed from one part of the studio to another. When it is stated that considerable shifting is required for even a minor piece of work, the time and labor saving value of this feature can be appreciated.

National Theatre Exhibitors Confer
Progress of Organization Is Reviewed at Meeting in New York City
Exhibitor members of National Picture Theatres, Inc., met in New York on April 8, 9 and 10 at the Astor hotel with Lewis J. Selznick, president, and home office executives and reviewed the progress made by the organization.

President Selznick presided at the meetings, at which were present also several of the branch managers of National who were in New York attending the Selznick convention. It is reported that everyone present expressed themselves as highly gratified with the strides made by National.

Many compliments were heard on the initial production, "Just a Wife," which has been published throughout the country and which has resulted in scores of telegrams and messages being received at the home offices in commendation of the story and the way it was produced. Declaration was made that more is to be expected of "Blind Youth," the second production of this organization. "Invisible Divorce" has been announced as the third.

Among the exhibitors present were Messrs. Simpson; Bernstein of Richmond; Franklin of Buffalo, representing the Shear interests; Jiles of Boston; and Greeves of Denver. Others attending the conference were: Jake Wells; John P. Harris of Pittsburgh and Cincinnati; Charles Olson of Indianapolis; Fred Dolle of Louisville; and Ross Rogers of Texas.

Industrial Theme in New Universal Film
"Man to Man" By Leitch Is To Be Adapted as Educational Feature
"Man to Man, the Story of Industrial Democracy," by John Leitch will be picturized by Universal as an educational feature. The author whose book has gone into twenty-three English editions and has been translated into seven languages, added in writing the scenario and will play the lead.

The production will be made under the supervision of Harry Levey of Universal's educational department. In speak-

Mixes Music With Pictures

How Hugo Riesenfeld worked out a system at his two big Broadway houses that has been emulated by many others

WHEN Hugo Riesenfeld takes over the Criterion theatre at 43rd street and 9th avenue, New York, on April 24, as the first long-run motion-picture-music house in Manhattan, he will have another triumph under the management of the music which he has harbored since he broke into the motion picture business with S. L. Rothafel in 1915.

Mr. Riesenfeld's first ambition was to direct an orchestra that would dispense music to millions instead of thousands. He satisfied his desires when he organized and directed the orchestras of the Rialto and Rivoli theatres, New York, which play to more than 4,000,000 persons annually, it is estimated.

His second ambition was to see a theatre in which the musical setting that he worked out for the feature film would have a long run, so that he might have plenty of time to work out the next setting. The weekly change made it extremely difficult to provide the music, lights and stage settings that he felt the super-pictures like "Male and Female," "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde," and "Why Change Your Wife?" deserved. The opening of the Criterion makes his second hope come true and may result in a revolution in motion picture exhibition.

His third ambition was to find sufficient time to write good music.

Oscar Hammerstein's Protege

Hugo Riesenfeld came to America in 1907 and went looking for a job as violinist and composer in a second-rate orchestra in New York. He found what he was looking for in a position at the Manhattan Opera orchestra. What the young man did in that position is part of the musical history of Manhattan.

From that post he went to the Century Opera Company as assistant conductor and later as conductor. And when the Century, after a season that was an artistic triumph and a financial failure, closed its doors, Riesenfeld joined the Klaw and Erlanger forces as director of their musical comedies and also produced his own operettas. But all the time he was seeking some way to carry better music to the people, or to bring the people to better music. The opportunity came when S. L. Rothafel offered him the job as his musical director. The music end of the motion picture business was then an undeveloped field. Riesenfeld, with a free hand from his employer, worked out a system and a program that is in use practically everywhere in the world today. It was he who first decided the classics offered the best field for music with which to score the pictures, when everybody scoffed at his plan.

Introduced New Ideas

Up to that time the one or two houses that scored with pictures at all had men who wrote pictures for the music. It was Riesenfeld who decided that with an inexhaustible store of music available it was foolish to play the same theme and the same tune for months; to put on the same gallop when a horse raced across the screen and the same old minor tune when the mother was swept before him by the traveling salesman. In other words, it was the young musical director of the Rialto and Rivoli later of the Rivoli also, who put the music into motion pictures.

When S. L. Rothafel retired from the managing directorship of the Rivoli and Rialto theatres there was only one logical successor for him and the mantle fell upon Riesenfeld. How the two theatres have thrived under his management the records of the last year show better than the adjectives in the world. Business has increased, it is said, almost forty per cent.

At the Criterion Riesenfeld hopes to establish what he prefers to call a unified program. Nothing will appear that is not a part of the feature picture. If there is to be music—and there will be—it will be only the type of music that will set off the feature. Dancing may be used, but it will have to bring out something that is connected with the picture. There will be no music that is separate or that does not have some reference to what is to come. There will be no news reels, no comedy in two reels—nothing but the main dish with trimmings. He will treat a picture as a good musical comedy is treated or as a good tragedy is treated. His first picture in the new house will be, "Why Change Your Wife?"

Never Exaggerates

The methods of Hugo Riesenfeld, who now controls three of the six first run houses in New York, are of interest to exhibitors. First and foremost, he never exaggerates in his appeals to the public. Throughout his career as a motion picture exhibitor Riesenfeld has told the public only twice that he had a picture of unusual merit, once when "The Miracle Man" opened at the Rivoli theatre and the second time when he showed John Barrymore in "Dr. Jekyll and Mr. Hyde." Only twice has he received such a public response that he felt he had confidence in his judgment.

At all other times his advertising carries an announcement with the title of the picture, the name of the star, the comedy and the principal music number. There is never an adjective. His lobby displays the model sheet of the advertiser. Stunts are unknown at his houses. Exploitation? Riesenfeld uses means which differ somewhat from other showmen's, but the results are satisfactory. One critic summed up the situation recently when he said: "Where others use a brass hat, he uses a violin." And the violin is effective.

Film "Old Homestead"

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

LOS ANGELES, April 20—George Melford is to film "The Old Homestead" for Paramount.

Business Activities Would be Retarded By Advertising Tax

WASHINGTON—A tax on advertising, even though it might result in considerable revenue to the government and in some conservation of the supply of newsprint paper, would have a most disastrous influence upon the business of the country, according to the many protests received in congress against the bill now pending in the house to place a tax upon all classes of advertising.

Appeals to oppose the measure are being received from congressmen from all classes of business. While retail establishments are interested especially in the measure, its enactment would affect practically every business concern in the country.

The proposed measure is characterized by one business man as "the most destructive form of tax possible. It is a tax on promotion." He wrote: "Its influence would be felt in the ratio of the advertising cost to the volume of business promoted. It would slow up all business activities and strike at the morale of America."

Production In West Now Awaits Brandt's Arrival

PENDING the final approval of Joe Brandt, director general, all production matters pertaining to the 1920 serial of the National Film Corporation of America, "The Son of Tarzan," will be held up. Mr. Brandt, who has relinquished his office in New York to become production chief at the National studios, has departed for Hollywood.

Jack Hoxie will portray the titular role, while Lucille Rubeu will be the principal female support in "The Son of Tarzan." It is understood that Edgar Rice Burroughs, the "Tarzan" author, received $10,000 cash for the screen rights to the story, and in addition will receive a portion of the net proceeds of the serial.
CRIMSON SHOALS

The Freakiest, Weirdest, most Mysterious Film ever placed on any screen—anywhere.

Exhibitors' Trade Review:
"Remarkable the way the star tackles the job of four men—it offers melodrama—with action ever traveling at a furious pace as one incident of struggle and strife rushes its predecessor off the screen—notable features is trick photography which in scene after scene shows the three characters enacted by the star in the same room, talking to and at each other as though they each had an actor of their own."

Moving Picture World:
"—melodramatic production,—triple exposure introduced into this picture, and this alone should serve to put the picture over. Many will marvel when they see the star appear as father, son and grandson, in one scene and converse with one another. —Happy ending is reached after a most spectacular free for all fight."

Motion Picture News:
"—fights and scuffles galore—pronounce it as one of the most amazing examples of triple exposure that the camera has ever accomplished."

Wid's:
"—novel feature. Dual roles are uncommon but a triple characterization is a novelty—meritorious—camera work is especially good."

IF IT’S BIG, WE HAVE IT!
DICK KEMP, manager of the Century theatre on West Madison street, is in a sad plight these days. With business ever on the increase Richard is trying to evolve some plan whereby he can keep up with the crowds that his chauffeur at the turnstile has been forced to turn away. Why not try buying a couple of buildings to the right or left of your theatre? It might help matters.

It looks like old times again with Joe Wolf back on the job with his first love, the Celebrated Players exchange. For the past two years Joe has been sojourning abroad with the A. E. F., having served with the 339th Infantry of the 90th Division through five engagements as battalion runner, arriving home last summer without a scratch. After spending several months with the folks in Texas the call of the cinema brought this young "buddie" northward to greet his many friends under the flag of the Celebrated Sales organization.

Tis to smile when the old "know-it-all gables" get their first days off. We note the debonair Ike Van Ronkel is still very much in evidence about the executive offices of the local Goldwyn exchange and from the info we get, imagine his mail will continue to arrive addressed as manager. How about it, "Van"?

Additional sales representatives have been added to the payroll of Harry Weiss' new exchange, the Superior Screen Service, R. E. Weilmarck will cover Indiana, NATE MAROGLIS in Wisconsin, with Harry HARTMAN and George Berry attending to Milwaukee.

AARON J. JONES has extended his stay at French Lick until April 23. During his absence the L. & S. offices are in complete charge of his son JOHN J. JONES.

STAR WALSH, former treasurer of the Wilson Avenue theatre, has been appointed assistant manager of the Randolph theatre, succeeding WALTER MOORE. Mr. Moore was compelled to relinquish his office on account of ill health.

...

C. A. ROBERTSON and C. B. VIANT, owners of a string of theatres scattered about Indiana, were in the city for a brief visit the other day.

...

Rex LAWHEAD of the Lincoln Square theatre, Decatur, Ill., was a local visitor this week. Rex was discovered showing off for Decatur on the commuter's schedule and stocked up with enough material to last until June. We refer to his "booking records" on film sets-ins, ahem!

With the old "vet" PHIL SOLOMAN at the helm of the local Masterpiece Film Distributing Corporation exchange, this new office should get away to a flying start. Phil informs us he has appointed HAROLD LIEB to visit the north side exhibitors and PHIL FOLEY on the south side, the latter formerly representing the local Republic exchange. GEORGE WEINBERG, meanwhile Unity Photoplays salesman, will visit the country trade for the company.

The Chateau Desplains, one of our very best territorial food dispensers, was the gay setting for a de luxe film feast several days ago. FLOYD BROWN, manager of the First National Indianapolis office and J. F. CUDDERLY manager of the Minneapolis branch, tendered a chicken dinner to their pal HARRY WEISS in celebration of the launching of the new independent exchange. Among those attending were S. H. HARRIS of the Chester Outing Corp., J. F. FRIEDMAN of the Friedman Film Company, Minneapolis, Minn.; J. N. JACOBS of First National exchange, Minneapolis, Minn., and several others.

LOUIS GOLDFIEN, Indiana representative for the Celebrated Players exchange, dropped in on the home folks last week and was a noted boulevardier of the Milwaukee promenades. They are all warbling "Sahara! Sahara!" up there, so murmurs Lou.

BEN BEARELL, manager for the local Select exchange, arrived home April 12 and tells us he spent a most enjoyable time at the big Selznick convention in the Big City along the shores of the Hudson. That neat piece of stationery he tooted back was rather good to garnish. We refer to what is known as prize money. Ben should worry what John D. does to gasoline or the tire interests of Ohio on this summer's current prices.

LOUIS LAEMMLE, manager of sales production for the local Universal office, is a busy individual these days, getting all dolled up for the big trip that takes place June 19. He and the family are to accompany his brother Carl Laemmle and family for an extended European tour, departing on the big greyhound of the seas, the Mauretanian.

E. J. EICHENLAUB, sales manager for the local First National branch, is out sketching up the territory accompanied by sales representatives JACK SCHWARTZ, F. H. COHEN and H. A. LAWHEAD. The present plan is to divide the Illinois territory so that this star trio will have a section in order to intensify the proper sales attention. Before departing Versailles EICHENLAUB announced the acquisition of CHARLES Mc DANIELS, former Paramount man, to represent the company in the city sales department.

The most effective way of getting H. A. SPANUTH's goat that we know of, is to get busy and hurry along your state rights bid for the big territorial offering the Copy from Chicago. Magazine publishing, "BILLY WHISKERS." Better speed up, the affable President of Universal urges. Only a few choice territories now open.

Last week we pulled a "boner" on the correct name of MAX LEVY's pal, "Mad" the lardeurispej spent in Cincinnati, Ohio. The young man is RALPH SIMMONS if you please, and has had considerable experience in celluloid exploitation, having been associated with the Universal, Republic and Select organizations.

The cinematic rialto along State street is again hitting on all sixes with the genial GEORGE MOORE, manager of the Orpheum theatre, back on the job. George has been a wee bit under the weather and bided himself to West Baden for a needed rest where he spent several weeks. Here's hoping the warm Spring zephyrs soon overtake Chicago, for with plenty of it in circulation in about ten days, George should be able to forebode complete the average film seller whose the boss.

...

E. C. DAVIES, manager of the Special Pictures Corporation, is all aglow with enthusiasm with the reception the local territory is giving their Comedyart offering.

...

W. D. DINEEN, general manager of the H. C. MOIR theatres and Enterprises, has installe six-piece orchestra in the Alcazar theatre. It is being conducted under the able leadership of A. J. BUSTABOS.

...

Unity Photoplay Company has purchased "The Hawk's Trek" serial, and announce everything is all set for its distribution on May 6th.

...

...

The Orpheum, JONES, LINICK and SCHAFFER's popular State street house, will show "Old Lady '31," Metro's screen adaptation of COLONEL ROTHSTEIN'S tale, each Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, April 18, 19 and 20. Emma Dunn, who played the original role in Chicago, is starred in the screen version.
Al DeWitt has been made assistant manager of MeVicker's and George Burdick is now assistant manager at the Kiefho theater.

*

Will Louis Nord, of insurance fame, get in touch with Earl Brokette of the Sioux Film exchange as early as possible. Excellent chance to write up accident risk. After going over Ed's calling list carefully Lloyd's accident experts failed to correspond further on the subject. That all right, Louis, hope you land it.

*

Barney Brozman of the Mirror theatre, Moline Ill., was week-end ing in the Consumers building, April 17 and whispers to ye scribe if some of these audit experts of theirs would give Ed's a call. Correctly Chi wouldn't see the youngster quite so often. Them rough words Barney, but how about that certain fair maid of Chicago? We hoid the wedding bells were due for a tingle in about three weeks.

*

Frank L. Koppeberg, of the La Crosse theatre company, La Crosse, Wis., has been spending several days in Chicago selecting furnishings for his new theatre.

*

Max Levey, manager of Robertson-Cole exchange, is seeking two house-broken goldfish to occupy the Hinky Dink schooner which is setting on his desk as a reminder of the "good old days" before old J. B. took the count.

*

William J. Sweeney is one of the many members of the film trade who heard with regret the word that Roger C. Sullivan had died. Years ago, Bill was active in politics and, although often on the other side of the political fence, formed a warm personal admiration for Mr. Sullivan.

*

O. R. Hanson, Robertson-Cole's modest central supervisor, is in Chicago for one of the periodical visits.

*

W. D. Burford of the Aurora Theatres Company announces that the Grand theatre at Elgin, which was destroyed by the recent cyclone, is to be rebuilt as a modern 1,500-seat house immediately. The lobby will be widened to twice its former space. The old house seated 850.

*

George Bromwell returned to his "chain" of theatres bright and early Saturday morning, April 17 after an extended resi- dent at West Baden, Ind., and looking the pink of condition. Oh yes, the big fellow lost several pounds. Avoidropoises is referred to, of course.

*

The popular president of the Unity Photoplays Company, Frank Zambrano, returned to his executive duties last week and admits friend songer has shortened his "drawing properties" a few inches. We always had the genial proxy slated as one of the really "quiet" chaps in local circles.

THE MERRILL THEATRE

The Merrill theatre under the efficient management of E. P. Bostick is enjoying exceptional patronage. Light for Paramount's "The Heart of a Child," has been held over for another week and a very novel musical stunt is being used in the first part of the picture. A curious gimmick has been installed to give the proper atmosphere to the picture.

The Strand has been sold to the Saxe Theatre Enterprises. The new owners will keep over the management May 1. The Elite theatre on Third street has been pur- chased by a trio of down-town showmen, George Fischer, Harry Hart and Charlie Braun. The patrons of the Elite will wit- ness some novel exploitation stunts if this bunch of live wires run true to form. With the triple brain power of these human dy- namos the house should have a seating ca- pacity of 5,000.

Leo A. Landau, manager of the Butterfly theatre, states that Mae Murray's "On With the Dance" is the fourth picture that has ever had a two-week run in the history of the theatre. Leo is due for a visit to Kansas City, where he will confer with Mr. Newman in regard to the future policy of the butterfly. Plans are under way for the installation of 400 additional seats, a stage and orchestra pit.

S. Baier, manager of the Atlas theatre, states that he has just installed a S-K-W. transverter, also a Simplex machine. The coming attraction is Allan Dine's Realmart feature, "Soldiers of Fortune."

B. E. Bristol has been promoted to man-ager of the Triangle at Milwaukee, and Phillips Gross, Jr., is the new manager of the Hallmark Pictures Corporation exchange.

Ralph A. Wettstein, manager of the Midwest Distributing Corporation, an- nounces the acquisition of "Husbands and Wives," featuring Vivian Martin, also Henry B. Walthall's "Confession," of which two prints have been booked solid until June in the state of Wisconsin.

A. M. Silverman has left Chicago and is now in Allentown, Pa., with the American Film Co. representative at Pathe's office.

William Tinker of the Crystal Terrace will reopen the Owl theatre at Fond du Lac, which has been dark for some time. This house will be entirely remodeled and new machines installed. The opening day is announced as May 1.

HOUDINI in "Terror Island"

BY ARTHUR B. REEVE and JOHN W. GREY.
DIRECTED...BY JAMES CRUZE,

A Paramount Artcraft Picture

HOUDINI has for years been the biggest drawing card in vaudeville. His name over the box-office means a smashing of box-office records.

Now in a marvelous six-reel melodrama, he not only duplicates all the feats that have made him famous, but accomplishes dozens of others, far more thrilling.

- It is a picture of a thousand thrills. The underwater scenes are positively the most thrilling episodes ever filmed.

There's a sensation a minute. "Terror Island" is the most exciting and amazing melodrama ever made.

VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL

$9,000.00
Six Hundred Seats
Only One Week

At the SUPERBA in Los Angeles, which has only 600 seats, the Gross Receipts for the first week's showing of "THE VIRGIN OF STAMBOUL" were $8,964.50, not including the tax. This is an average of $2.13 per seat per day—or an average of practically fifteen dollars per seat per week. This is six dollars more per seat than was received on the next biggest attraction that ever played in this house, for it beats the house record by over thirty-four hundred dollars! It is doubtful if any attraction ever equalled this record in the history of the business. CARL LAEMMLE wires: "Take it from me—'The Virgin of Stamboul' will beat 'The Kaiser'—'The Heart of Humanity'—and any other production that Universal ever marketed."

BOX OFFICE APPROVAL THE ONLY HONEST SEAL OF MERIT

The public verdict on "SEX" has been pronounced. The verdict was unanimous and read like this: "SEX" is one of the very few GREAT PICTURES. Nothing is more conclusive and convincing than the PUBLIC VERDICT. There is no higher authority than the message from the box office. It makes all argument and all praise unnecessary. IT REPRESENTS THE ELOQUENCE OF FACTS. In our recent announcement we told of big bookings in Chicago, Kansas City, Milwaukee, Boston, Atlanta, Pittsburgh, St. Louis, Minneapolis, Spokane, Seattle, San Francisco, Los Angeles, Fort Wayne, Detroit. New Orleans, Dallas, Galveston, Nashville.

"SEX" rises above the average picture like a skyscraper tops a bungalow; it intoxicates the eye, satisfies the mind and carries its appeal right into the depths of your heart.

"SEX" will raise the fame and popularity of your house and impart a new dignity to your screen, it inspires your patrons with the desire for regular attendance at your theatre.

"SEX" embodies the combined triumph of a great actress—Louise Glaum—a great producer, J. Parker Read, Jr. and a great scenario writer, C. Gardner Sullivan and is worthy of your best showmanship.

From the celebrated play by AUGUSTUS THOMAS
Directed by J. Searle Dawley

Heart interest abounds in "The Harvest Moon." It is the heart interest that hushes the crowd into sympathetic silence; it is the heart interest that makes 100% entertainment; it is the heart interest that wins for the box office and for the prestige of your theatre. Here a master plays on the heart strings — America's premier playwright—Augustus Thomas. Every touch shows the assured skill of the master hand and the finale comes with unexcelled power tinged with light and sweetness. Your audience will bid a joyous welcome to "The Harvest Moon."

King Spruce

From the novel by HOLMAN F. DAY
Directed by Roy Clements

Life and Folks in the Giant Forests Mirrored in Masterful Fashion

ACTION is the keynote of "KING SPRUCE"—which often rises to great dramatic heights and leads to tense, gripping situations. Then, after a whirlwind of elemental passions, comes the sun smiling through the clouds and makes your audience share in the happiness so touchingly depicted on the screen.

"KING SPRUCE" has for its background the giant forests of the North.

THE STORY is woven out of the lives of the men and women who live in close communion with Nature through the changing seasons of the year; quiet folks capable of big passions and of big deeds.

"KING SPRUCE" the men and women of the forest called him because of his wealth, his power, his domineering ways. Unscrupulous as well as tyrannous he challenged the laws of God and man until the plain honesty and simple heart of one of Nature's noblemen led him into the light.

NATURE'S NOBLEMAN is Mitchell Lewis, the famous 'Poleon of "The Barrier" and here he is a second 'Poleon. A knight of the woods "without fear and without reproach."

The love story is woven deftly into the very heart of "KING SPRUCE," its course is rough but the end is full of pathos and tenderness.

The Dream Cheater

By Honoré de Balzac
Directed by Ernest C. Warde

HERE ARE THE "HIGH LIGHTS."

THE PLOT: Furnished by the world's foremost student of human nature: Honoré Balzac, made immortal by his story of "The Human Comedy."

THE STAR: J. Warren Kerrigan, the embodiment of dauntless triumphant youth, ideally suited to the part he plays, full of romance and breathing the spirit of chivalry even in the attic of the tenement.

SETTINGS AND ATMOSPHERE: In their splendor and realism worthy of this great and mysterious story.

DIRECTION: Adheres faithfully and skillfully to the path marked by the master story teller.

This brief survey does not catalogue all the merits of the play but it will stimulate the curiosity of your patrons.

Directed by Burton King

STATE RIGHTS NOW SELLING

Anne Luther in NEGLECTED WIVES
Six-part drama; Wistaria.
Published in April.

OPINION: "Neglected Wives," for which is provided the alternate title, "Why Women Sin," is a valuable acquisition to the independent field. It has box office qualities that cannot be denied. The plot holds interest from start to finish, setting forth the events in lavish settings excellently photographed. Technicalities have received especial attention throughout, and the result is a smooth-running, logical narrative.

Anne Luther and E. J. Radcliffe lead a cast in which are listed such names as Claire Whitney and Charles Gerard, veteran players both. Their performance is well rounded and succeeds in giving unusual depth to the production.

While marital differences are made the basis of the story, the idea is handled in a clean way, no suggestive or unnecessarily pointed situations being allowed to detract from the presentability of the attraction.

Upon this foundation is erected a superstructure in which a political element figures prominently. Exhibitors will find this angle valuable at the present time.

—Exhibitors Herald.

"Here is a title to lure all women. * * * Extremely attractive interior sets give an air of sumptuousness. * * * Cameraman has labored well."

—Exhibitors Trade Review.

"A capable cast—too well known to require any special recommendation. * * * Production will appeal to majority of audiences."

—Moving Picture World.

" * * * Picture creates interest a-plenty. * * * Scenes are well directed and splendid in detail."

COMMENT OF THE WEEK
by MARTIN J. QUIGLEY

The Chicago Session

The exhibitors' assembly in progress in Chicago at the time of writing, is decidedly the most significant gathering of exhibitors in recent years, if not in the entire history of the industry.

The meeting is significant from many viewpoints: It is a session of theatre men who effectively convey the impression that they are in dead earnest; that they have come into the meeting with certain fixed objectives which they seem determined to achieve.

Generally speaking the convention of exhibitors is simply the natural and expected result of certain tendencies that recently have been injected into the operation of the distributing branch of the business.

Chief among these, of course, is the avowed determination of certain producer-distributors to become important factors in the theatre end of the industry. This tendency involves the difficult business—for the producer-distributor—of serving a customer with one hand and competing with him with the other and the fact that exhibitors are now up in arms over the matter is the logical result and is in no way surprising.

The Chicago meeting is probably the largest and most representative gathering of exhibitors that has yet been held. This fact is a decidedly interesting side-light on just how serious is this matter of producer-owned theatres. In addition to those whose presence makes plain their attitude, Willard C. Patterson, who sponsored the meeting, received several hundred telegrams and letters from exhibitors who announced their inability to be present but registered forcibly their endorsement of the proposed work.

Whether the Chicago meeting takes action of a summary and decisive nature yet remains to be seen. But it is now very plain to anyone who views the situation calmly and clearly that if a showdown is not actually here it is at least just ahead.

Deposits—Or Worse

In addition to the subject of producer-owned theatres, two topics of live interest have the attention of exhibitors. One is the matter of percentage booking and the other is the traditional opposition to advance deposits.

Percentage bookings is now and will remain a matter of individual negotiation. It simply represents terms of rental, and in event the producer feels he is not getting an equitable return he will resort to the percentage arrangement of some variation of it in an endeavor to get what he believes is his just dues.

It is entirely a matter up to the individual exhibitor's election. He is able now and probably will continue to be able to book practically any picture on a straight rental basis if he meets the distributors' rental price. If a negotiation cannot be closed on this basis, then the percentage proposition remains as a solution.

At the present moment the agitation against advance deposits seems to be making progress. But its further progress under existing conditions in the industry may result in even greater dissatisfaction on the part of exhibitors. It is very important for exhibitors to bear in mind that in event that deposits are abolished there is every indication that distributors will exact payment in advance on substantially the entire rental price.

Facing this prospect it is expedient that exhibitors lift this matter of advance deposits out of the speech-making atmosphere that now surrounds it and take it home with them for profound consideration.

"The Big Six"

After months of careful deliberation the Associated Producers, Inc., have reached a distribution arrangement which doubtless will appeal strongly to the independent exhibitors of America. Announcement that the valuable product to be issued by this organization will be available without any entanglements unquestionably comprises one of the most hopeful items of news that exhibitors could hope to encounter. Another highly encouraging feature of the announcement is that the general managership of the distributing organization that had been entrusted to a man of vision, judgment and dominant energy of Frederic B. Warren.

E. R. Pearson, director of exchanges for Pathe, spent several days in Chicago during the past week. He is on a tour of branch offices and left Chicago for Milwaukee, Minneapolis, Omaha and other nearby exchange centers.

His many friends in the motion picture industry heard with regret the news that W. R. McArthur, connected with the photoplayer department of Lyon & Healy, Chicago, died suddenly last week.

F. W. Kraemer, formerly assistant manager of the Atlas Taxicab Company of Chicago, has been appointed an assistant to H. J. Atchison, treasurer of the Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company. Mr. Atchison will leave for a vacation early in June.

Abraham Lehr, vice-president of Goldwyn Pictures Corporation and general manager of the Culver City studios in California, has been placed on the board of directors of the Citizens Trust and Savings Bank of Los Angeles.

Edward Mortimer, for two years a director with Maurice Tourneur, has been placed on the general staff of the Metro studios in Hollywood, Cal. He takes up his duties at once.

Benjamin A. Prager, who has been ill for several days, has taken up active duty as president of the Mayflower Photoplay Corporation, from which Isaac Wolf resigned. He has advanced John W. McKay, former general manager of distribution, to the position of general manager of Mayflower.

Ralph O. Proctor, general manager of United Artists Distributing Corporation, passed through Chicago this week on his way east.

William A. Brady, who recently returned from Europe, hurried to Chicago to see his daughter, Miss Alice Brady, who was recently stricken seriously ill with ptonamic poisoning. He found her rapidly recovering and after a brief visit returned to New York.

J. H. Merkener, one of the pioneer exchange men in the Milwaukee territory, has been promoted from assistant manager to manager of Pathe's Milwaukee branch. C. H. Kocher, branch booker, has been named assistant manager of the office.

E. W. Hammond and G. A. Skinner, of the Educational Film Corporation, represented the motion picture interests at a recent dinner given to Sir Robert Kinderley, governor of the Hudson's Bay Company, at the Hotel Biltmore by the New York staff of the company.

Julie F. Stickler, well known engineer, has been added to the industrial division of the Bray Pictures Corporation.

Herbert H. Yudkin, the originator of Screen Smiles, the novelty topical film being distributed by Victor Kremer, has left New York for a tour of the leading independent exchanges of the central west, in the interests of the short subject.

F. E. Backer, general sales manager of Jans Pictures, Inc., is making a flying trip through the southern states with the first two Jans pictures, "Love Without Question" and "A Woman's Business," featuring Olive Tell.

L. T. Rogers, western division manager for Masterpiece Film Corporation, left Chicago on April 24 for New York. He has spent the past few weeks in Chicago getting the central west branch in shape and making arrangements for additional offices throughout the western territory.

M. J. Mintz, territorial manager for Celebrated Players Film Corporation, left Chicago for the west coast April 25.

George West, special representative for Reclaiat Pictures, started on an extended tour of the northwest April 27.

There's no need for the housing problem becoming so acute with all the bedroom fanes now playing. Why not rent these rooms out, ready for occupancy at 11 p. m. daily.

It Looks That Way—

One would think when one gazes about that the reformers who made the country dry had now turned their attentions to women's clothes. The skirts one sees these days apparently contain less than one-half of one percent of the goods that the old ones did.

Sounded That Way to Her—

At a Chicago loop theatre the other day, while the feature was being run off, the manager had a man tune the house piano. One of the theatre's steady customers remarked to the doorman on her way out that she didn't care for that classic stuff, she liked jazz music.

Associated Producers Will Operate Exchange System

Oscar A. Price Named President and F. B. Warren, General Manager, of Company; Will Offer Pictures Early in the Fall

True to predictions made two months ago by their representatives in New York, the Associated Producers, Inc., have formed their own distributing company with Oscar A. Price as president and F. B. Warren as general manager and will deal with the exhibitors of America direct instead of through a middleman or sales organization owned by others.

This announcement is made for the Associated Producers in California. Contracts were signed last week by Thomas H. Ince, Mack Sennett, Allan Dwan, Marshall Neilan, Maurice Tourneur and George Loane Tucker, six powerful principals in the biggest alliance ever formed in the motion picture industry.

EXPECT OTHER PRODUCERS TO AFFILIATE

All of these producers will complete their existing contracts with other organizations. It is expected that one and possibly several other important producers will affiliate with the Associated Producers in the near future. At the outset the productions guaranteed by these great factors make the Associated Producers the largest independent producing and distributing organization ever assembled in the industry.

The Associated Producers’ distribution will not utilize the facilities of any other organization. It will own and operate its own newly opened exchanges in all the important sales zones of the country completely manned and managed by its own exclusive employes. Production plans of the members of the Associated Producers are well developed and their new organization will be actively releasing their first powerful productions at the opening of the next motion picture year.

PRICE AND WARREN ARE VALUABLE MEN

Both Oscar Price and F. B. Warren, operating executives of this new distribution, are men trained in other businesses outside of the motion picture industry. They are both characteristically independent and have always shown little or no regard for film industry precedents, being organizers of wide experience and with the mental independence of the newspaper publishing profession, from which they were recruited into pictures. Mr. Price has been active in editorial and political circles for many years and served his Government throughout the world as William G. McAdoo’s strong right arm in the Railroad Administration. Mr. Price has been the president of the United Artists Corporation from the date of its formation a year ago, retiring two weeks ago for this expansion of his activities in the motion picture industry.

Mr. Warren was one of the founders of the Goldwyn organization in association with Samuel Goldwyn, Edgar and Archibald Selwyn. He was vice-president and a director of Goldwyn Distributing Corporation from the day of its formation, with full control over sales. For a year, following his retirement in April, 1919, he was vice-president in charge of sales of the Hodkinson organization, from which he retired ten days ago for his new alliance with the Associated Producers.

Report Zukor Seeks Big Chicago Theatre

That the Famous Players—Lasky Corporation has opened negotiations for the purchase of the People’s Theatre, 47th street and Ashland avenue, Chicago, was reported this week shortly after the arrival in Chicago of Adolph Zukor, president of the Famous Players company. The People’s Theatre, which seats 2,300, has become one of the best known of the neighborhood theatres in Chicago since taken over by Al Lyons.

United Theatres Bankruptcy Asked

NEW YORK, April 27—An involuntary bankruptcy petition was filed yesterday against the United Picture Theatre of America in the United States District Court. Liabilities are quoted at $375,000 and assets are indicated at $300,000. The claims of the Walker Color Co., the Gelatone Publishing Co., and Ethel Cotter, petitioners, amount to $1,500.

Gaumont Laboratories At Flushing Are Sold

NEW YORK, April 27—Gaumont Company of Flushing, N. Y., has sold its entire printing plant and laboratories and has discontinued all commercial work. The name of the purchaser has not been announced.
First National Will Distribute All Mayflower and Four Read Pictures
Two Five-Reel Sennett Productions and Screen Adaptation of “Twin Beds” are Also Acquired by Exhibitor Circuit

Simultaneously with the opening of the convention of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., in Chicago on April 27, came the report of the closing of a series of important deals for product.

The following productions, it is declared, are to be distributed by First National:

All Mayflower productions, after the next Tucker and Walsh pictures have been completed.

Two J. Parker Read, Jr., productions starring Louise Glamm, after the next picture starring Miss Glamm, directed by W. Hodkin.

Two J. Parker Read, Jr., productions starring Hobart Bosworth.

Two five-reel Mack Sennett productions, which is said have already been completed.

A screen picturization of the famous comedy, “Twin Beds,” starring Mr. and Mrs. Carter DeHaven, and directed by Marshall Neilan.

No official announcement was issued by First National officials of the series of reports, but the announcements are expected within the next few days.

Word Comes from East

Word of the arrangements whereby First National is to obtain all of the product of Mayflower Photoplay Corporation came from New York City, where negotiations have been under way for several weeks.

It was stated authoritatively that Messmore Kendall of the Capital theatre is interested with Mayflower in the new arrangement.

Read Pictures Eagerly Sought

The Read productions, which First National have obtained, were sought by practically every distributing company. The pictures starring Louise Glamm, made under the supervision of J. Parker Read, Jr., have been signal successes.

“Sahara” is classed as one of the most successful productions in the history of the industry. “Sex,” Miss Glamm’s latest picture, has been given record bookings in the key cities.

The Hobart Bosworth pictures are expected to score heavily. Mr. Bosworth’s most recent picture is “The Inner Door,” an Inre production, which is making a record.

Climax Also in Demand

The announcement of the two Sennett comedies, and the DeHaven comedy, “Twin Beds,” comes as a distinct surprise to exhibitors and the trade generally.

The stage success of “Twin Beds” is regarded as the most recent picture of great popularity. The Sennett features have scored remarkable success, and the announcement of two for First National is considered a coup.

Selznick Names Directors to Make National Theatres Self-Governing

Eighteen directors who represent more than 1,200 exhibitor members of National Pictures Theatres, Inc., have been appointed by Lewis J. Selznick, president. In announcing this, Mr. Selznick declared that the organization is to be self-governing in every respect.

The names of the directors, it is said, are sufficient indication of the caliber of the enterprise, inasmuch as some of the leading exhibitors of the country are among the list. At the time the National Pictures idea was conceived by Mr. Selznick he hoped to obtain the services and backing of the best exhibitors in the country. The outcome of this ambition is self-evident, it is claimed, and no better assurance of the continued success of the enterprise could be offered than the announcement of the men who will govern the progress of the organization.

The newly appointed directors are:

Nat Ascher of Chicago; Aaron Jones of Jones, Link & Scheifer of Chicago; Harry Lubin of Lubin & Trintz, Chicago; Jules Mastbaum of the Stanley Booking Company of Philadelphia; Tom Saxe of Milwaukee; Harry Berstein, Richmond; Van V. H. Cune of Los Angeles; Harry Crandall of Washington; Fred Doll, Louisville; George Giles of Boston; John T. Harris, Pittsburg; Ike Lipson, Cincinnati; Charles Olson of Indianapolis; H. M. E. Pasmezoglu of St. Louis; E. S. Rehner, Youngstown; O. V. Rose B. Rogers, Wichita Falls, Tex.; George Simpson, Rochester, and Jake Wells of Richmond, Va.

The organization is now in complete control of the exhibitors and three of them have been appointed to frame the by-laws which will govern all the actions and operations of the organization. In speaking of this action, Mr. Selznick said: “I believe it essential to the best interests of National Pictures Theatres, Inc., that all matters of policy shall be decided by the exhibitor directors, and as the by-laws are among the most important factors of our success, I want to carry out the principle of self-government to the limit.”

Dominion Has Exclusive Right to Connor Tales

The exclusive rights to all of the Ralph Connor stories have been obtained by Dominion Film Company, Inc., according to an announcement by Ernest Shuman, president and general manager. These stories will be produced by the company in the following order: “The Sky Pilot,” “Cameran of the Royal Mounted,” “The Foregger,” “The Man From Glengarry,” etc.

Twelve stories are included in the list of “best sellers” written by the Canadian author. They will be produced, it is said, at the rate of two a year and will be augmented by herds of buffalo, packs of wolves and other animals which are to be found in the Northland, the locale of the novels.
Five Hundred Exhibitors Heed Patterson's Call for Defense

New National Organization Formed in Chicago to Fight Producer Monopoly of Theatres—all Factions Join to Make Finish Fight on Question

Frank J. Rembusch of Indiana Made Chairman

Independent theatre owners from cities and towns scattered in every section of the United States formally organized the Independent Exhibitors of America in convention at the Congress hotel in Chicago on April 27.

The aim of the association, as expressed by executives and members, is to present a united front in waging a fight against the encroachment on the exhibitorial field by producers, and to co-operate with the producer whose interests are concerned only with production and distribution.

Oppose Going Into Production

Striking developments of the two-day gathering are summarized as follows:

Independent producers offer co-operation
League to ascertain attitude of every producer on the situation
Members favor exclusive purchase of pictures from independent producers
Representatives will attend Cleveland convention in June Meeting goes on record against any production activities.

Of paramount interest was the decision to send a committee of sixteen members to New York the latter part of May or early in June to meet all producers who will be asked to state finally their policies as they affect the construction and acquisition of playhouses.

Approximately 500 theatre operators were in attendance.

Will Report at Cleveland Convention

This committee will report its findings to the organization at the Cleveland convention and the necessary action will follow. The general trend of events at the meeting would indicate that the producers who continue their activities in the exhibitorial field will be compelled to sell their product to other than league members, whereas, the independent producer will be encouraged.

In connection with this aspect of the meetings, several independent producers addressed the league, among them being Lewis I. Selznick, head of Selznick Enterprises; Robert Lieber, president of First National Exhibitors' Circuit; J. D. Williams, First National manager; Harry Levey and Samuel Berman of Universal Film Manufacturing Company; Sam Morris and C. C. Pettijohn of Selznick; Whitman Bennett and Ivan Abramson.

Selznick Offers Aid

Mr. Selznick in his talk declared that co-operation is the greatest factor in any achievement and that it is with the exhibitor that he stands ready to co-operate and encourage. He said that he is willing at any time to meet a committee from the organization and consider its proposition. He pointed out that he was a producer with no intention of ever entering the exhibitorial field.

The keynote of Mr. Lieber's address was individualism. He said that only through individualistic efforts could the motion picture industry continue its forward stride and retain the prestige that it now holds. Proper production and proper exploitation, he declared, are the two principal elements in the industry and on them will depend the decline or advance of the business.

The business is too real and too great, he declared, to be controlled by one man or group of men. Such control, he claimed, takes away individualistic efforts and is a menace to the industry.

First National's president said that his company soon would present a new selling proposition to the exhibitors of the country. Supporting Mr. Lieber's statements, Manager Williams added that he would rather screen a poor class of picture than show productions controlled by a "trust."
Sol Lesser Conducts a Whirlwind Exploitation Campaign in Chicago

Exhibitors Attending Conventions are Stormed With Stunts Advertising Annette Kellerman and Beban Productions

If there was a single exhibitor attending either of the conventions that were held at the Congress hotel in Chicago this past week, who does not know that Sol Lesser, the Pacific coast screen impresario, is to present Annette Kellerman in her first modern comedy-drama "When Women Love," and George Beban in his super production, "One Man in a Million," that exhibitor must have been deaf, dumb, blind and paralyzed.

For the exploitation stunts of the young Pacific coast producer practically took both conventions by storm.

The first barrage was fired when each exhibitor, franchise holder and exchange manager found in his box an "Annette Kellergram," a replica of the Western Union message, bearing the words: "Do you know what women love? It is a matter of lesser importance. "When Women Love" is the title of the new Kellerman picture, and the words "lesser importance," of course refer to the producer. Each day following a different "Annette Kellergram" was placed in the boxes of the conventions.

Chronicle Is Issued

On the telephones in their rooms they found a circular phone card saying, "Every wire will want a direct every day connection with George Beban's "One Man in a Million."

Tuesday morning saw the first issue of the "Convention Chronicle," a four-page newspaper profusely illustrated, showing the activities of the First National stars, and Annette Kellerman and George Beban, along with other productions which Mr. Lesser is exploiting.

The front page teemed with sight and hearing happenings, and each day thereafter the front page was made over to cover the latest events of the day before.

The Chronicle was written by Harry Hammond Beall, with John McCormick and Malcolm S. Boyle as associate editors.

All of the franchise holders of First National were presented with a wooden box containing a short reel of Ichthy, showing the First National stars, at a luncheon given at the Charlie Ray studio by Mr. Lesser in honor of J. D. Williams, general manager of First National.

Stars in Various Poses

At the opening session each exhibitor was presented with a pad and pencil, the pad bearing a figure of Miss Kellerman with a slogan regarding the picture, while the pencils bore the inscription: "They won't have to be le(a)d to see Annette Kellerman's newest production."

Each exhibitor was found a picture of Annette Kellerman or George Beban in a different pose or a different scene from their respective productions awaiting them when they came down to breakfast.

Mr. Lesser announces that he plans elaborate symposia for both pictures. The Kellerman production will be ready first, and the diving Venus is to accompany the film and stage the same tank act which made her famous at the Palace Theatre and New York Hippodrome.

"What Women Love" is rated as a half-million-dollar production and is the first time Miss Kellerman has appeared in a modern story. She is seen as a typical American girl, fond of athletics and with oodles of "pep." Starting as a comedy, the photoplay works itself up into one of the most melodramatic climaxes of stage or screen. The story is written by Bernard McConville, who has prepared scripts for Norma Talmadge, Mary Pickford and other well-known stars.

Wheeler Oakman made so good as the masculine lead, he is soon to be starred, according to Mr. Lesser. Walter Long, Ralph Lewis, Bull Montana and others have important supporting roles.

Interested in Projects

It is known that Lesser is involved with the Gory brothers, owner of a chain of theatres on the Pacific Coast, in a number of new theatre building projects for Los Angeles and Southern California, but he refuses to discuss them in detail at present.

He now is engaged in marketing for the United States "That Something," an inspirational picture dedicated to the Rotary Clubs of the World, and "The Sentimental Bloke," an Australian novelty comedy-drama. He also is handling the physical distribution for Special Pictures Corporation.

First National Groups Re-elect Officers at Chicago Convention

Sub-Franchise Is Principal Topic of Discussion at Annual Meeting in Congress Hotel—Eighty Attending Daily Conferences on Important Matters

Two Sennett Productions Are Announced

Endorsing the many important actions taken during the past year and expressing continued confidence in their leaders, franchise holders of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., and the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., in joint convention in Chicago, April 27, unanimously re-elected for the coming year the entire slate of officers of the two organizations.

Associated First National Pictures Officers

The complete slate of officers elected by the Associated First National Pictures, Inc., is as follows:

President—Robert Lieber, Circle theatre, Indianapolis.
Vice-President—J. B. Clark, Rowland-Clark theatres, Pittsburgh.
Secretary and Treasurer—H. O. Schwalbe, Mastbaum theatres, Philadelphia.
Executive Committee—Moe Mark, Strand theatre, New York; Nathan Gordon, Gordon theatres, Boston; H. O. Schwalbe.

First National Exhibitors Circuit Officers

The complete slate of officers elected by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., is as follows:

President—Robert Lieber, Indianapolis.
Vice-President—Sam Katz, Chicago.
Secretary and Treasurer—H. O. Schwalbe, Philadelphia.

The sub-franchise plan, originally announced early last fall and now brought to the point of perfection, was the principal topic of discussion in all of the First National sessions.

On the opening day, it divided interest with the official announcement that the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., had obtained two feature five-reel comedy-dramas produced by Mack Sennett with a Sennett cast.

J. D. Williams Discusses Plan

J. D. Williams, manager of the First National Exhibitors Circuit, made the first public announcement in regard to the sub-franchise plan during the convention, when he responded to an invitation to speak at the convention of independent exhibitors which was in session simultaneously in the Congress Hotel, Chicago, April 26 and 27.

He opened his address with a general discussion of the producer-owned theatre question, telling the exhibitors that they must organize to combat it and that they would get every possible aid to their movement.

Means Exhibitor's Protection

"The sub-franchise plan was fought within the First National organization," he said. "Many of the members of the circuit opposed it for the reason that they wanted to build in cities where they were satisfied a theatre would pay."

"Now, however, the proposition is open to every independent exhibitor in the country, who is not in cities in which First National franchise holders have theatres."

Whitehurst Given

First Subfranchise

Charles E. Whitehurst, well known Baltimore exhibitor, is the first man to be awarded a subfranchise by the First National Exhibitors Circuit, Inc., under its new plan, details of which were worked out at the convention in session this week.

Mr. Whitehurst went to Chicago to attend the mass meeting of independent exhibitors called by William C. Patterson of Atlanta. During the convention, he took advantage of the opportunity to close with First National.

Baltimore is in the Washington, D.C., district of the First National, the franchise of which is held by Harry Crandall and Tom Moore.

"You can buy a subfranchise in the First National and have exclusive control of First National pictures in your cities for a term of twenty-five years. This is only fair. It is only just."

Complete Announcement Coming

More complete announcement of the subfranchise plan is to be made within the next week or ten days.

In general, it is an extension of the plan upon which First National is now operated. The cost of production is now divided pro rata among the franchise holders. Under the subfranchise, the franchise holders will in turn pro rate their allotment among the subfranchise holders in their territory.

Exhibitors holding subfranchises will not pay rental for the films. They will be assessed a fixed proportion of the cost of productions and will be entitled to play the pictures without further charge for any length of time they care to run them. If they want to play return dates, no rental will be charged except a "handling" charge of $1 per reel.

Preparations Carefully Made

Putting the plan in operation is said to have involved a tremendous amount of work. Officials have been working out the details for months.

The theatres taking franchises will be immediately classified as "3 per cent" or "Devil's Garden"

Barrymore's First For First National

Whitman Bennett announces that the first of the four pictures which will be produced for First National Exhibitors' Circuit, starring Lionel Barrymore, will be "The Devil's Garden," from the novel of the same name, by W. B. Maxwell, who first attained fame with the publication of his 'Cotton Wool.' Work on the production is already under way, and filming has been going on for the past week.

While the Bennett studio had "The Devil's Garden" schedule for more production, it was decided upon for the initial production because some of the settings demand a location of out-of-doors in the spring time and Kenneth Webb, who is directing the picture, felt there was no time like the present for presenting such scenes. Ideal locations were found within easy traveling distance of the studio and when the star reported for work on April 12 the mechanical force was ready to begin at once on the picture.

The story of "The Devil's Garden" is one that gives ample opportunity for the display of dramatic talent such as Mr. Barrymore showed he possesses in the stage production of "The Jest" and in "The Devil's Garden." The latter was produced at the Liberty theatre by Arthur Hopkins, and those who witnessed the play and have seen the scenario declare that the wider scope covered by the screen strengthened the production.

CONVENTION SHOTS

Speaking of good showmen, did you ever notice how the "First National" packs them in from every quarter for their conventions.

It wouldn't surprise us if the next thing in the franchise line would be for the sideline privileges at "First National" conventions.

Susr. Lessner startled the assembled multitude, with a public relations stunt, touching upon and appertaining to the new Kellerman picture, all of which suggests very strongly what can be done with the picture when it is released to the dear public.

C. L. Yeasberry was detected early in the session doubting in speech-making, convincing gestures with one hand while dashes off a page of ad. copy with the other.

Col. Paul Mooney continued the high order of hospitality inaugurated at the Atlantic City show, despite the operations of the well-known Eastern amendment.

Among the celebrities who were "just looking on" were Lee J. specialist in the Selznick, Sam E. Moses, chairmen of "Petitjean" and others of the Selznick enterprises.

Earl J. Hudson, chief publicity purveyor for the Circuit, startled the conventionites with his intimate knowledge of statistics pertaining to the Corn Belt, although it might be imagined that Mr. Hudson's lecture would be dairy dope—having originated in or about Elgin, Ill.

Sam Atkinson, than who than is no that whom, was early engineered to a prominent position on the floor of the independent exhibitors' convention.

William Patterson may be back in his beloved Atlanta with full conviction that he fired a shot that was heard around the film world.

Frank Remus with whom no exhibitor's convention even begins to be complete, just naturally had his customary job of chairman handled to him.

James V. Kitchel, the celebrated lithographer and Beau Brummel, was among those present.

Doc. Earl Hammond, who prescribed sugar-coated knowledge for the multitude via educational pictures, was a much-sought-after person by several state right purchasers.

The genial James B. Clark, who comes from Pittsburgh with a white collar, was one of the decorative features to be viewed about the Congress lobby.

We ask you. Is there any other town in America that could have brought them in from points stretching from Maine to California?

Victor Kremer and Ivan Abramson were among the well-known independent producers who had Chicago on their schedule for the week.

Maurice Chyvoxni, true to the battling Chopin, traditions, furnished a little fire-works for the exhibitors' sessions.

The good news reached the assembled filmites that William A. Johnstone is recovering rapidly from a recent serious operation.

F. B. Warren, moving quietly and alone about the Congress lobby on the opening day was nominated "The Man of Mystery."

In order to give the boys something to talk about the Associated Producers shipped the boys the big string and we were wowed.

There were seven thousand guesses as to what "The Big Six" would do and seven thousand were wrong.

One of the "tense moments" in the exhibitor convention was the meeting on the floor of Frank Remus, executive secretary of the M. P. E. A., and S. J. Berman of the New York state league. Everybody looked expectant. The two smiled and shook hands.

Practically every faction of the political right which has ratified these well-publicized organizations for years was represented and worked in harmony.

The closing day of the convention saw Sam Atkinson, business agent of the A. A. A. of Chicago, and William Sweezy, secretary of the Illinois Exhibitors Alliance, in the same hall, applauding the same speeches.

Lou Blumenthal, of Jersey City, New Jersey, has been appointed publicity manager for the Independent Exhibitors of the Midwest organization formed in Chicago on April 27.
Chicago Film Exchanges Facing Ejection from "Loop District"

Ordinance Prohibiting Handling of Film in Down Town Area Becomes Effective May 1—Managers Seek Extension of Time from City

Unless city authorities relent from their expressed determination to strictly enforce the ordinance which prohibits the handling of film in the "loop district" of Chicago after April 30, the film business in Chicago and the Chicago district will be practically demoralized Saturday morning, May 1.

A score of film exchanges with leases expiring May 1 and no place to move into immediately are making desperate efforts during the present week to effect a temporary agreement to remain where they are and are scouring the city for suitable locations.

CONSIDER INJUNCTION AS LAST RESORT

If all else fails, managers are planning to seek injunctions from the court to prevent the enforcement of the city ordinance driving them from the "loop" on the contention that enforcement will destroy their business, throw thousands of men out of work, and close several hundred theatres.

"I cannot believe that the city authorities will cripple the industry in this section," was the expression of Clyde W. Eckhardt, manager of the Fox Film Corporation exchange. And it is upon this belief that the majority of managers are placing their hopes.

Three buildings house all of Chicago's film exchanges with but few exceptions—the Consumer's Building, State and Quincy streets, the Malters Building, Wabash avenue and Madison street, and the Film Exchange Building, Wabash avenue and Adams street.

The Consumer's Building is inside the 'loop.' The Malters and Film Exchange buildings stand on what is generally considered "loop property," but they are just outside the elevated railroad "loop."

Exodus from Consumer's Building

Practically every exchange in the Consumer's Building has been seeking other quarters, following a report that L. Kesner, owner, would not permit film to enter the building after midnight April 30.

I. W. Kahn, associated with Mr. Kesner, informed a representative of Exhibitors Herald that his knowledge of this kind had been served. "It is a matter between the exchanges and the city authorities," he said. "We have no concern in it. Many of the film exchanges have leases expiring May 1 and I presume they are preparing to vacate. Those whose leases do not expire could use their space as offices and have their film handled somewhere else."

To Remain at Film Exchange

While none of the exchange managers in the Film Exchange Building would make any definite announcement of intention, it is apparent that all in the building are planning to remain for the time being at least, either on the assurance that they will not be disturbed or in hopes that the building will be excepted from the ruling.

At the Malters Building the Fox Film Corporation has already prepared to depart April 30. The entire shipping department will be moved to the Film Exchange Building, while all other departments will be housed temporarily in the Famous Players-Lasky Building, 44 South Wabash avenue.

Other exchanges in the Malters Building have made no preparation on removal as yet and are awaiting developments.

Several Announce Plans

Ben Beadell, manager of the Select Pictures Corporation Exchange, nineteenth floor, Consumer's Building, announced that his exchange and the offices of the National Picture Theatres will be moved to the Film Exchange Building April 30 and will be housed with the Republic Distributing Corporation Exchange. This will place all of the Seltzick Enterprises in one location.

O. R. Hanson, district supervisor for Robertson-Cole, hurried to Chicago to take charge of the situation. He completed arrangements late Saturday to have the physical distribution of films handled from the Wholesale Exchange in the Film Exchange Building, and to open offices on the fourteenth floor of the Consumer's Building. The company has occupied the eighteenth floor of the Consumer's Building.

Pathé to Have Own Building

W. A. Aschmann, manager of the Chicago office of the Pathé Exchange, announced that Pathé has taken a long-term lease on the one-story Kuntz-Remmler Building in Wabash avenue near Congress street, which is now being remodeled.

The building will not be ready for occupancy until about June 1, however, and Pathé will make an effort to remain in its present quarters on the fourth floor of the Consumer's Building. The American Film Company and the W. W. Hodkinson Corporation managers will remain with Pathé.

The Universal Film Exchange, occupying the fifteenth floor of the Consumer's Building, holds a lease which has two years to run. No statement as to plans for the future was issued.

The Metro Film Corporation, which has offices on the fourth floor of the Malters Building, has a lease running to next November. It has announced no plans for the future.

O. R. Hanson, district supervisor, stated later that the arrangement Robertson-Cole has made in Chicago is only temporary and that work will begin within a short time on a one-story building in South Wabash avenue to house the exchange.

"I had hoped to definitely announce our plans," he stated. "There is an unavoidable delay, however. We have three propositions under consideration, none of which have been accepted.

GOOD FELLOWS GET TOGETHER

O'Toole Assigned to Managerial Position
Former United Branch Chief
Is District Manager for National Theatres

Jack O'Toole, who was manager of United Picture Theatres' Chicago branch prior to the inverting back of these exchanges to Triangle, has been appointed manager of the central district for National Picture Theatres, Inc., with headquarters in Chicago.

Acquisition of O'Toole's services by National Theatres is considered fortunate as his past endeavors have made him a host of friends among the exhibitors in the field over which he will supervise. His experiences as exhibitor have given him an insight into exhibitorial requirements.

Previous to his connection with United, O'Toole was with Mutual and Fox. He served more than three years as manager of the Chicago office of Fox.

Realart Sales Pace
Set By Exhibitor in Town Of 840 People

H. E. Rodell, owner of the Crystal theatre, Mitchell, Neb., has been given credit as the pacemaker in the end-of-the-season sales campaign which Realart is conducting as a test of its trademark's power.

Bert R. Latz, Realart's Denver manager, visited Mitchell, a town of 840 population, with no idea of hanging up anything that could be classed as a record. When Mr. Rodell signed up for every production that has been published by Realart to date Mr. Latz was surprised and pleased.

J. S. Woody, general manager of Realart, was the man who saw in the deal an unusual performance. "This deal," he said, "stands for one of the biggest and most important themes in the trade. Proportionately it is a bigger deal than Realart has ever turned in the so-called big territory.

Rembusch Opposing Cohen Organization Says Exhibitors in West Do Not Care for More New York City Rule

Frank Rembusch, executive secretary of Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has written to headquarters in Indianapolis to P. S. Harrison of New York and former theatre owner, in which he expresses opposition to the proposed organization of exhibitors which Sydney S. Cohen, president of Motion Picture Exhibitors' League of New York, is sponsoring.

Mr. Cohen has issued a call for a convention in Cleveland during the week of June 7, when formal organization will take place. Sixteen state organizations are said to be pledged to the movement.

Following are some excerpts from the letter written by Mr. Rembusch.

Knows What to Expect

"I know Mr. Cohen and I know from the start what we are up against. In general, we have been general way from anything that may come out of Cohen and his rule or run policy. I let me state that the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America are bent on the unity of the exhibitors as the self-existing temporary chairman who, I believe, is trying to start a new national organization to gain control of the national exhibitors' organization for his own purpose.

"So long as exhibitor fights exhibitor they cannot fight the common enemy. Why does Mr. Cohen fight exhibitors? Why does he refuse to join with the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., and fight the common enemy?"

Chip On Their Shoulder

"Let me give you some facts. We held our eleventh national convention at St. Louis last June. The New York delegation came with a chip on their shoulder and demanded that the convention change the construction to suit the New York delegation. The convention voted unanimously against them and they walked out.

"Why did they do this? Because Mr. Cohen has and had some kind of film business, and he wanted every exhibitor to subscribe to his plan or lose his franchise. He continually belittling the national organization and everything that has been done in the past by other exhibitor organizations.

Will Be Repetition

"With Cohen rule you will have repeated what you had three years ago. Why another national president of New York City kept the accredited delegates out of the Chicago convention hall by and the poll. Let the past and the facts stand. We exhibitors in the West want no more New York City rule, or Cohen dictation.

"Mr. Cohen has never been active in organization work before now, and we believe that he is 'working to disorganize'. His plan is to go on organizing just the same as has been done in the past, in order that by fighting each other the exhibitor will not battle the outside foe."

For The Love Of Mike, Do Not Miss The Red Letter In The Back Of The Book Next Week.
M. P. E. A. Seeks Government Aid To Dissolve All F-I-L-M Clubs

Confidential Letter from Office of Frank J. Rembusch Asks Evidence Against Exchange Managers Under Sherman Anti-Trust Law

That the Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc., has appealed to the federal government to dissolve all F-I-L-M clubs and other exchange managers’ associations throughout the United States under the terms of the Sherman Anti-Trust Law is indicated by a form letter being sent to local and state leagues and individual exhibitors from the office of Frank J. Rembusch, executive secretary of the M. P. E. A.

Letter Seeks Evidence to Aid Prosecution

The letter which is headed “important and confidential” declares that the Department of Justice of the United States has evidence that the “so-called film managers’ clubs and associations are meeting and operating contrary to the Anti-Sherman law” and adds a declaration that “the government asks that every exhibitor present evidence he has that will assist the government in the prosecution of producers and managers who have violated the law.”

No signature is carried on the letter. It is on the letterhead of Frank J. Rembusch, executive secretary of the M. P. E. A., 40 West Ohio, Indianapolis, Ind., and closed with “Fraternally yours, Motion Picture Exhibitors of America, Inc.

Claims Restrained of Trade

After its preliminary statement, the letter continues “the evidence desired are ‘original’ letters or certified copies of letters sent to exhibitors by managers requiring them to appear before a film club, affidavits of conversation or threats by salesmen or managers of film companies to cut off service unless the rules and regulations of film clubs are complied with by the exhibitors’ etc.

“The film clubs which pass on differences or grievances between an individual exhibitor and an individual film company commit an act in restraint of trade,” declares the circular.

List Evidence Sought

Continuing it then contains a list of “evidence on hand” with a request to “send any like evidence at once.” The list is as follows:

(1) Film managers have called exhibitors before their board. They have insisted upon settling differences between individual exhibitors and individual film companies, with the film managers acting as judge and jury.

(2) Film salesmen and managers have threatened to cut off service unless rules and regulations of the film clubs are followed.

(3) Where C. O. D. shipments were refused by an exhibitor, the balance of the film companies have agreed to not ship service to the exhibitor.

(4) Cashiers have used the way of advance deposits are demanded and in many cases not returned to the exhibitor.

(5) Film clubs in one city are allied with film clubs in other cities and black-list exhibitors return the rules and regulations of the film clubs are followed.

(6) At week’s end the age managers compare prices paid by exhibitors for film services and by exchange of information, film prices have been advanced 100 per cent during the last year.

In conclusion, the letter states that any evidence should be forwarded to the Department of Justice, Washington, D. C. or to “this office,” meaning apparently the office of Mr. Rembusch. It is stated that “all such matter sent to us will be kept in strict confidence and turned over to the government.”

Asks Recount When Sunday Theatres Are Beaten by One Vote

(Crystal Lake, Ill. — Advocates of Sunday theatres in this city have indicated their intention to demand a recount of the vote by which a proposition to open theatres on Sunday here was beaten on the face of the returns by a margin of one vote, the count being 325 to 327. The campaign was bitterly fought and feeling continues to run high on the question. Summer resorters practically double the population of the city during the warm months, and it is argued that Sunday amusement will make the community more attractive.

Lifts Ban Which Bars Kiddies Unaccompanied

(New York, April 27 — The Senate before adjournment passed the bill introduced by Senator Joseph D. Kelly of New York permitting children of age of sixteen years to attend motion picture theatres unaccompanied by parent or guardian, providing they are accompanied by an authorized person.

Laemmle Names Stern To Succeed Powers As Universal’s Treasurer

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

New York, April 27 — Abe Stern, secretary and treasurer of L-Ko company, producer of the Rainbow, Century and other comedies, has been appointed as treasurer of Universal Film Manufacturing company. He is a brother-in-law of Carl Laemmle and the appointment makes certain Mr. Laemmle’s determination to remain active in film production.

Mr. Stern succeeds P. A. Powers, who resigned after selling his interests in Universal to Mr. Laemmle and Mr. Cochrane. It was stated that Carl Laemmle would remain at Universal City until he was ready to go abroad.

Universal-Exhibitor Agreement Is Accepted by Association Officials

Harry Levey Confers With Organization Chiefs in Middle West on Direct Payment to Theatre Manager Plan

Several exhibitor associations in the West and Middle West have agreed to the direct payment to exhibitor plan for distribution of industrial and educational subjects offered by Universal Film Manufacturing Company, according to Harry Levey, general manager of the department producing these pictures.

Mr. Levey has returned to New York after confering with officials of these exhibitor organizations at Cleveland, O. He also visited Pittsburgh and Chicago while absent from the home offices.

Supervises Presentation

When in Cleveland he supervised the presentation for a week at Loew's Stillman theatre, one of his newest industrial and educational films, entitled "Fifty Golden Years," embracing a style of history of Cleveland in connection with Sam Bullock, secretary; W. J. Simm, treasurer.

American Exhibitors' Association of Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Fred J. Herrington.

Kansas City Exhibitors' Association.

Michigan Exhibitors' Association.

St. Louis Exhibitors' Association.

Northwest Exhibitors' Circuit.

Other State and district associations represented announced the intention of booking Universal industrial and educational pictures on the direct payment plan.

I am delighted to be able to work directly with and for the motion picture exhibitors," said Mr. Levey, "which means that they will be able to produce more and better pictures. I am hoping that the theatregoing public has demonstrated that it wants to see educational films—pictures, dealing with the outstanding things of America, showing how things are done and teaching the lessons of good living and contentment for everybody."

$6,167,717.42 Tax Collected in February Shows Steady Increase

WASHINGTON.—Admission taxes collected are increasing steadily, according to figures just made public by the bureau of internal revenue, the total collections for February amounting to $6,167,717.42, an increase of $1,411,552.52 over the $4,756,164.90 collected during the same month of 1919.

The total for the eight months ended with February is $47,404,576.08, as compared with $29,546,072.66 during the corresponding period of the preceding fiscal year, an increase of $17,858,403.42.

Collections of taxes of films leased and licensed amounted in February to $255,002.07, with $3,003.24 collected from the seating tax on theatres.

Other Branches Opened By Fox in England and France and Also Africa

Additional branch offices have been opened by Fox Film Corporation in England and France, according to reports from the company's foreign representatives. One office has been opened in South Africa, where business is declared to be good.

In France, branches have been established at Nancy and Toulouse. Abraham Carlos, who opened these offices, has been succeeded by Daniel G. Temlinson. Mr. Carlos is touring Italy, Holland, Denmark, Spain, Sweden and Norway to make a detailed report on Fox activities in these countries.

First National Plans $3,000,000 Theatre

Los Angeles to Get Largest Most Beautiful House In the World

Los Angeles has been selected as the home of a $3,000,000 theatre for the exclusive showing of motion pictures, which will be erected by First National Exhibitors' Circuit as an organization. This project took tangible form when a series of conferences between Sol Lesser, owner of the First National franchise for Los Angeles, and J. D. Williams, circuit manager.

Other First National franchise holders were represented through agreement reached prior to Mr. Williams' Western trip.

The enterprise to First National will be the largest and most beautiful playhouse in the world. The best architectural brains in the world will collaborate on every detail surrounding its design, it is said. The outstanding features of all First National theatres will be incorporated in this project.

Non-Competing Theatre

The theatre will be used as a non-competing house. First National attractions will be given their premier showings there, while for longer and extended runs the Kinema theatre will be used. The theatre will be located in the downtown district of Los Angeles, the exact location to be determined by the proper authorities.

A feature of the enterprise is the fact that Los Angeles will receive this house, not from the sources of its interests, but from First National franchise holders throughout the nation. The $3,000,000 will be contributed from practically every section of the United States.

In bestowing the peer of motion picture edifices on Los Angeles, the circuit acted under the generally accepted theory, it is said, that the city rightfully has claim to one of the world's most admired photoplay structures by virtue of its part in the picture industry. And, insofar as details of musical accompaniment, acoustics and lighting are concerned, and a score of other essentials are concerned, the intent to carry out the standard of super-excellence will be reflected throughout.

Will Build Stars' Box

The proximity of the producer to the theatre promises to be a great factor in the devising of presentation features to accompany the first run in the theatre. It is likely that in the majority of cases an effort will be made to screen first-run pictures in Los Angeles in an atmosphere and with presentation and musical accompaniment that will set the standard for any theatre and city in the world, and that photoplay art is known the world over.

An innovation will be a "stars' box." This feature has been adopted as an honor to the photoplay star or stars featured in any first National issue that may be shown in the new theatre. Depending on the house charge the new theatre will be placed, indications are that the entire exhibitor field will be combed for talent. At present First National has made no decision as to its managing-director or even with regard to whether it will be humanly possible for one man to assume entire charge of a venture as momentous and gigantically artistic as it is determined every detail of the new theatre shall be.
Censorship Indicates A Popular Hysteria Says Emerson Hough

Members of the advisory committee from the Authors’ League, which is co-operating with the National Board of Review of Motion Pictures, are opposing actively the establishment of censorship in Massachusetts and have individually written letters to legislators of that state giving their reasons for such opposition.

Emerson Hough, addressing the committee on mercantile affairs, has written as follows:

“This whole question of state censorship surely has two sides. If it really regulated the morals of the country and really kept bad things from young minds, I should be for it, but I can’t see that it ever has done that. To my mind, as an old-time American, jealous of the personal liberties which we Americans have had, all these commissions and constitutional amendments and censorship boards in the states and bureaus of moral seem, frankly, to indicate a sort of poverty of the spirit.

“We want to regulate everything in the world and do it right away. I am stiffly against this ‘verboten’ sign which is getting too common in America and is used in Germany. Why not try leaving this country for men and women for a while and leave a little to the horse sense of the American people? These things are usually regulated by themselves in the long run. I see no reason in penalizing a sin before it has been committed, and I see no reason in penalizing an entire industry to a greater extent than we ever have the press or the stage. No matter how well we mean, we can’t wipe out all the evil in the world until we have changed all the human nature in the world.

“I surely believe that the instincts of decent writers for the films, the constantly increasing intelligence of the producers and the more and more critical demand of the American people for good things in the film will take care of the popular morality just as well as a censorship board which could not always, by any possibility, represent either the intelligence or the wishes of an entire commonwealth. We are having too much politics and too many bureaus mixed up with our personal life here in America, and I for one, am against that and against it. Give this patient, long-suffering American people at least a little chance for its white alley.

“I believe I would feel precisely this way whether or not my business interests were affected. I don’t believe in a whole lot of laws which don’t mean of necessity, a whole lot of good government.”

Estimates Censorship in Bay State Would Cost Practically $100,000

Annual Revenue From It Would Amount Only to $31,200—Nine State Police Would Be Retained by Bill Considered

BOSTON, MASS.—Machinery for making effective the bill now in the legislature which would establish state censorship of motion pictures would represent an annual expenditure of approximately $100,000, according to Representative Fitzgerald of Boston.

Col. Alfred F. Foote, head of the department of public safety, who would be in charge of censorship, repudiated this figure and estimated that the cost to his department would be only $40,350 a year. The annual income to the state derived from film regulation would total $31,200, he said.

In figuring the total cost, Col. Foote gave the following expenditures: Director of censorship, salary, $5,000; nine state police officers, $31,600; three operators, $4,500; three projectors, $1,350; one booth, $300; four clerks, $5,600; rent for reviewing room and offices, $4,000, and contingent services, $7,000.

Charge $1 a Reel

Under provisions of the measure, a fee of $1 would be charged on each reel reviewed. Representative Lyman of Easthampton considers that this fee should be raised to $1.50, at least. Col. Foote estimates that 31,200 reels would be reviewed every year.

Col. Foote announces that an exhibitor could appeal first to him on decisions and later to the superior court. At a recent hearing on the bill, Miss Amy Woods, secretary of the state committee on motion pictures, declared that approximately one-third of the films sent in for censorship. No new arguments for or against legal regulation were developed.

Cost Estimate Too Low

Judge J. Albert Brackett, counsel for the Managers’ Association, contended that there is sufficient law to control motion pictures and to prevent the showing of improper films and that power is with the local authorities, where it ought to be. The estimate of the cost to the state of censorship he held to be far too low. There are, he said, 775 picture theatres in 175 cities and towns in the state and the daily attendance is 700,000 people.

He said that if the committee saw fit to report the bill it should incorporate it in a definite standard to govern the managers in buying films. Every picture that comes to Boston and is later shown elsewhere in the state can be previewed by local authorities. It is impossible to edit the pictures down to the mentality of youth and make them satisfactory to adults.

“The Woman He Chose” Goes Into the Barbee, A First-Run Playhouse

“The Woman He Chose,” a Swedish production which has been playing at the Zeigfeld theatre in Chicago, has been transferred to Barbee’s Loop theatre, the new first-run house in the center of Chicago’s business section.

The policy of Barbee’s house is exclusive showings of the newest pictures. Breaking this precedent indicates the picture’s box office value.

Educational Gets "Torchy" Films
To Issue One Every Four Weeks
First of the Thirteen Two-Reel Comedies Which Feature Johnny Hines to Be Available
As Soon as Exchanges Open

"Torchy" comedies featuring Johnny Hines and produced by Master Films, Inc., have been acquired for distribution by Educational Films Corporation of America. Thirteen of the two-part adaptations of Sevell Ford's stories will be published every four weeks, and will be available as soon as Educational's exchanges are opened.

The first of the comedies, "Torchy," has been completed and work has started on the second which has as a working title, "A Knight for a Night." It is being made at the Cliffside studios under the direction of F. O. Belas.

Given Review Showing
A previous showing of "Torchy" was given at the Strand theatres in Manhattan and Brooklyn and it was given another showing according to reports. Charles C. Burr, president of Master Films, has assured E. W. Hammons, general manager of Educational, that the remaining issues will be up to the same standard.

"Torchy" comedies, it is said, are expected to make an unusual appeal to the exhibitor. These stories have been appearing in leading magazines and newspapers for several years and already seven volumes of the stories have been published by N. J. Gode, who is one of the officials of the producing company. The newest series now is being carried in leading newspapers of the country through the McClure Newspaper Syndicate. These stories will continue to appear, according to the exhibitor constant local operation.

In addition, plans are being made for special photoplay editions of the stories, illustrated with scenes from the different comedies. Educational also will put forth elaborate campaigns on these pictures. Already the advertising and exploitation departments are at work on the first of the series and full material for advertising will be ready for exhibitors before the first issue.

To Announce Fourth Series
Acquisition of the "Torchy" series gives Educational a two-reel comedy publication for three, weeks out of each four. Mr. Hammons stated that he expects to announce the fourth series within a few days. This will complete the original plan, but it is possible that others will be added since the facilities for distribution and specialization in short subjects are so great.

"In announcing acquisition of the 'Torchy' comedies," said Mr. Hammons, "we feel sure that we are observing our promise that we will supply the very best in this field. We trust that exhibitors will note that we are not acquiring these comedies until we are assured of their quality. The receptions accorded the first of these comedy series by audiences and critics at the pre-release showings should be guarantees of their quality."

Rothacker Laboratory
Site May Become Park

Out in Hollywood, Cal., Watterson R. Rothacker is contemplating the erection of a laboratory on Sunset boulevard.

Out in this same Hollywood, however, city council is considering the evolution of the site into a park.

That explains why construction on the Rothacker plant on the coast is being delayed. City council is debating the question now.

H. J. Allday, treasurer of Rothacker Film Manufacturing Company, has left for Los Angeles to let contracts for construction of the laboratory. It is said that if Hollywood takes the boulevard site as another site will be purchased by Rothacker as a laboratory.

Educational's Charles Urban Novelty "Movie Chats" Is New

In offering "Movie Chats," described as a new kind of screen entertainment, Charles Urban, president of the Kineto Company of America, states that the short subject problem has been solved as a result of thought and labor based upon twenty years of experience.

"The aim of the 'Movie Chats,'" says Mr. Urban, "is to offer pictorial information in a novel style of that the one who has traveled much and observed much. A number of different subjects is taken up in each series, but each subject is characterized by a permanent worth-whileness that distinguishes it from the daily topical or soon-to-be-forgettable vaudeville wheeze."

Distribution plans will be announced in the near future.

APPROVES BILL TO GIVE
BALTIMORE REFERENDUM

Baltimore, Md., Governor Albert C. Ritchie of Maryland has approved the Kverson bill which gives Baltimore voters a referendum on the question of opening motion picture theatres. Baltimore City has been moved to vote on the ground that Sunday motion pictures would tend to commercialize the Sabbath there and to detract from it as a day of worship and rest and healthful, wholesome relaxation.

"Whether or not Sunday motion pictures would have that effect is not, however, the question before me, because the bill does not permit Sunday motion pictures. The bill simply submits to the vote of the people of Baltimore the question whether Sunday motion pictures shall be permitted in Baltimore city.

"The question before me is not whether I approve Sunday motion pictures in Baltimore, but whether, regardless of whatever my own opinion might be, I will disapprove a bill which lets the people of Baltimore decide the question for themselves.

"I feel that I have no right to deny the people of Baltimore that privilege, and I am, therefore, approving the bill."

Fox Film Forces Will Convene May 24
Both Foreign and American Representatives Will Attend the Corporation’s Sixth Annual Convention Which Will Continue Until Saturday. May 29 at Commodore Hotel in New York City

THE sixth annual convention of Fox Film Corporation, which will be attended by both foreign and American representatives, will be held at the Commodore hotel in New York from May 24 to 29. Branch managers, district superintendents, special representatives and sales heads from every section of the United States, the Dominion of Canada, Algiers, France, Great Britain, South America, Italy, Holland, Belgium and Australia, will attend the convention.

William Fox, president of the corporation, plans to make this international gathering one of the largest of its kind ever held. Herman Robbins, general sales manager, has sent out the call to every branch office.

London, Liverpool, Manchester, Newcastle, Glasgow, Cardiff, Leeds, Birmingham and Dublin will furnish the quota of Fox officials from Great Britain. The Australian field will send managers from Sydney, Melbourne, Brisbane, Adelaide and Wellington, New Zealand.

Others That Will Attend
From South America will come representatives from Rio de Janeiro, Sao Paulo, Buenos Aires, Rosario, Montevideo and Lima.

Fox Film Corporation for some time has maintained offices in France at Paris, Marseilles, Strassbourg, Lyons, Lille and Bordeaux. Additional branches recently have been established in Treves, Nancy and Toulouse. The managers of these new branches are not expected to attend in view of the fact that the districts are only subdivisions of the territory covered by the Paris branch.

The other Fox foreign branches which will be represented include the Brussels office in Belgium, the Amsterdam branch in Holland and the Italian exchanges in Rome and Turin.

Mr. Fox brings his sales force together this year for the most important business meeting in the history of the corporation.

Winfield R. Sheehan
General Manager of Fox Film Corporation

Winfield R. Sheehan, general manager, who is in Europe, will return in time to take charge of the convention. According to the most recent advices from Mr. Sheehan, he will be in the United States about the middle of May to perfect plans for the meeting.

Upon his return he will be equipped for an exhaustive conference with Mr. Fox regarding the results of his tour and the conditions of the foreign market with relation to Fox films. Thus far the reports received from him have been encouraging and prove, it is declared, the increasing popularity of Fox entertainments abroad as well as at home.

Mr. Fox will open the convention, and will outline the policy to be adopted by the corporation for the ensuing year as regards the distribution of Fox specials, Sun-burn comedies, Mutt and Jeff animated cartoons and other Fox entertainments. It is expected that the plans will show a notable development in the entire system from both the producing and the distributing viewpoints.

Will Cite Policies
Other matters of import will be brought before the sales force by Jack Leo, vice-president, John C. Eisele, treasurer, and Saul Rogers, general counsel. Each of these gentlemen will address the body on matters pertaining to policy.

In selecting the Commodore hotel for the convention Mr. Fox will bring his sales force within a short distance of the new Fox studio in West 34th street. This will enable the executives of the firm to maintain quick communication between the two points and to transport the visiting salesmen readily to and from the hotel and studio.

Most of the convention delegates have never seen the new building. It therefore is planned to receive them in a body at the studio and conduct them through the various departments. Herman Robbins will have thrown upon the screens of the battery of projection rooms the Fox special productions and the early forthcoming regular publications in which the following stars appear: Tom Mix, William Russell, Buck Jones, George Walsh, William Farnum, Pearl White, Madeline Traverse, Gladys Brockwell and Vivian Rich.

Those in Attendance
Those who will attend the convention from various sections of the United States and Canada are listed below and will represent thirty-five or more branches in this country and at least a half dozen in the Dominion of Canada.

District superintendents with headquarters—Harry F. Campbell, Boston; Clayton P. Sheehan, Buffalo; George Allison, Atlanta; E. H. Wachter, Kansas City, Howard J. Sheehan, Los Angeles, and Vincent J. McCabe, Toronto.

Dominion branch managers—Maurice West, Montreal; L. M. Devaney, Toronto; Jos. Lieberman, St. John, N. B.; R. A. Scott, Vancouver; William Spencer Jones, Winnipeg, and Mitchell Rose, Calgary.

United States branch managers—George Allison, Atlanta; H. F. Campbell, Boston; H. H. Greenwald, Buffalo; C. W. Eckhardt, Chicago; Rudolph Knoepfel, Cincinnati; William Shapiro, Cleveland; L. E. Harrington, Dallas; Joseph Kaliski, Denver; W. C.
Winners in their respective territories in Pathe's March competition, "Brunet Month," have been announced. The Albany branch carrying off the honors in the Eastern division, the Milwaukee office in the Central West territory, Oklahoma City in the South and Denver in the Western district.

45 Per Cent Increase

A gross increase of 45 per cent over the figures for November, December and January was registered. These figures have been announced by Director of Exchanges Elmer R. Pearson.

In the Eastern division, B. M. Moran, branch manager at Albany, showed an increase in collections of 75 per cent and a 49 per cent increase in the matter of new business. The Washington office was runner-up with a total increase of 55 per cent.

Tribute to Brunet

These figures are made more remarkable by the fact that November was a "drive month," and the business written during that period was virtually the greatest that ever had been recorded in Pathe.

In commenting upon the success of "Brunet Month," Mr. Pearson said:

"The figure for the month clearly indicates that the Pathe enthusiasm, which has been so well known, lives on. Our enthusiasm for Pathe is not dependent on what someone else is doing, but is our own, and it is reflected in the figures.

"It is significant of the increase reported for March that it is a reflection of a healthy growth of Pathe business during the past year. This growth has been steady and consistent, earned by a driving power that gains impetus from the exceptional success of product Pathe is now furnishing its sales force.

"The average business compiled during November, December and January was unusually high, which reflects the more credit on our branch managers in the field in the remarkable record they established during 'Brunet Month.'

"I would like to call attention to the fact that, while invariably it is custom for business to slump after a competition, such is not the case with Pathe. On the other hand, we always have gone ahead and continued establishing new high water marks.

"This may be attributed to the fact that the Pathe executives are ever on the alert to improve the merit of their product, and with every release we are proud to emphasize that we accomplish this aim."

Morrison in "Tomorrow"

James J. Morrison, well-known screen player, has been assigned the leading male role in "Tomorrow" by Ashley Miller. The picture, which deals with the present-day labor situation, is being produced by Community Film. Gladys Hulette, Frank Mills and Anna Lehr are in the cast.

NEW YORK, April 27 — Mildred Harris Chaplin will make her debut on the speaking stage in "Sick Abed," which is scheduled soon for Fagan's Little Theatre. Wallace Reid will play opposite her.

Famous Players Plans $200,000 Alterations On St. Louis Theatres

ST. LOUIS, MO.—Improvements and the erection of new airfoams aggregating an outlay of more than $200,000 are planned by Famous Players Missouri Corporation, of this city. The company recently took over the control of a circuit of ten houses known as Consolidated Theaters Company.

The greatest improvements will be made on the historic Kings Theater, which was the first large motion picture house built here. It sets a considerable distance from the curb, and is blocked from view by other buildings, and for this reason the front of the structure will be advanced forward.

The theater is located on the front of the theatre proper and the airfoam as well will be constructed.

A large canvas 25 feet long will also be erected. Our wall of the Kings is composed almost entirely of glass doors, which, when thrown open, will permit an audience to transfer from either auditorium in a short time. A floor for dancing during intermission will be constructed in the airfoam. The new house will have four ticket windows.

Similar improvements will be made at the Pershing Theater and airfoam. New projection equipment will be installed in conjunction with the Shenandoah and Grand Florissant theaters.

Fred J. McLellan is general manager of the houses.

Pathe to Continue Simultaneous Issue Policy for Serials

Paul Brнет, vice-president and general manager of Pathé Exchange, Inc., has announced that the policy of two serials at a time, inaugurated last fall, when the "Bound and Gagged" serial and "The Black Secret," were issued at practically the same date, has been successfully established and that the dynamic demand for serials is evidenced with regard to serials were to be drawn on the "two at a time" basis.

It is stated that the success of "Trailled by Three," issued early in April, in obtaining bookings in practically every house that ran the "Adventures of Ruth" has been accepted by Pathé Exchange. Evidence that the scheme introduced October last has now been established, and that there is an active demand for serials great enough to warrant the continuance of a schedule offering exhibitors two serial episodes per week.

Reports of increased demand for serial plays during the latter half of last year and in 1920 have been persistent, and the announcement from Pathe takes on added significance as proof that these reports were based on facts.

Paramount Acquires Empire and Lyceum

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, April 27.—By purchasing outright all of the interests of the late Mr. Frohman, Famous Players-Lasky Corporation has gained control of Empire theatre, which it has leased for a term of twenty-one years, and the Lyceum theatre, in West 45th street, as a part of the same deal.

The purchase by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation of the New York theatre building in Broadway, between 44th and 45th streets, which includes the Criterion theatre, is already a matter of public knowledge...
Metro Is Erecting Five Studios on Site Adjoining Its Hollywood Plant

One Structure Will be 250 Feet Long and 100 Feet Wide—Appropriation of $250,000 Made For Building Activities

Five new studio buildings are to be erected on the seven and one-half acre site which has been purchased by Metro Pictures Corporation and which adjoins the company’s present Hollywood plant. A sum totaling $250,000 has been appropriated for these building activities. The largest of the new structures will be an enclosed stage of steel, concrete and glass construction, 250 feet long and 100 feet wide.

To Erect Other Buildings

Besides this stage there will be put up buildings for the property department, a carpenter’s assembling shop, cutting rooms, a film vault and isolated quarters for the scenario department.

Three adjoining city squares and one-third of another square in the Los Angeles suburbs now are owned by Metro. Within two months practically every foot of the seventeen acres now covered by the producing plant will be occupied by stages, laboratories, technical workshops and other structures.

Metro also has at its disposal a location park of sixty-five acres north of Hollywood in the beautiful San Fernando Valley. This is utilized for big exterior settings.

The west coast studios have five producing units now working, four others ready to start, and the prospect of more action in the near future. Officials state that the policy of “bigger and better” pictures will be adhered to scrupulously and that ample time will be afforded directors to develop and turn out productions of the highest merit.

Stage to Cost $85,000

The new stage alone will cost $85,000 and will embody the latest ideas in scientific motion picture studio construction, it is said. It will rise on the west coast of the present three stages. Larger than any of the latter, it will increase Metro’s stage area 50 per cent, or to 75,000 square feet.

Construction has started on the carpenter’s assembling shops. The building of fireproof brick, 163 feet long, 55 feet wide, and 25 feet high, will cost $35,000. It will contain two paint frames 40 feet high, each capable of use as a frame 65 feet long.

In two weeks work will start on a $700,000 building, 249 feet long, 50 feet wide, and three stories high, to house receiving, shipping and property departments. It will contain 17 individual property rooms for ten companies.

Plans are being drawn for cutting rooms and film vaults to cost $16,000.

Plan Scenario Building

A one-story building for the scenario department will be 266 feet long, with two wings. It will accommodate twenty writers and will cost $32,000.

Parnassus-like, a garden sacred to the muse of the scenario writer and isolated from studio distractions, is one of the features provided for in the plans for this building.

Of colonial design, the one-story building will enclose on two sides a rectangle where writers may stroll on velvet turf and plan their scripts with nothing more distracting than a fountain’s murmur and the song of birds.

The other sides of the garden will be closed by walls or ornamental trees. The building will have windows on the outer sides, but no entrances except through the garden.

Advance Deposit Bill

Up to N. Y. Governor

(Special to Exhibitors Herald)

NEW YORK, April 27.—The so-called “advance deposits” bill, sponsored by New York State Exhibitor league, passed the Senate before adjournment and is now up to the governor for signing.

The bill provides for a trust fund which cannot be used by the distributor or producer of films and will be held by a trustee until the final terms of the contract have been filled. The bill amends the business law regarding the terms of contract. It does not affect other contracts or agreements, but applies specifically to motion picture films.

Stage Offer Is Refused

By Annette Kellermann

An offer of $5,000 for a tour of ten weeks in Australia has been refused by Annette Kellermann, who has finished her work in a comedy-drama which will be distributed and exploited by Sol Lesser. The stage offer came from the American representative of Hugh McIntosh Entertainment.

Miss Kellermann will rest at her new seaside home until Lesser is prepared to start her new production on tour as a road show.

Mrs. Sidney Drew Is Producing in Chicago

Cumberland Starring in Both Stage and Film Attractions In Windy City

Mrs. Sidney Drew has transferred her production activities to Chicago during the theatricale engagement there of John Cumberland in “The Girl in the Limousine.” Cumberland is starring in the Drew two-part comedies which Pathe is publishing.

Mrs. Drew is working at the Essanay Studio on her “After Thirty” series, written by Julian Street. Part of the technical crew is with Mrs. Drew in Chicago, as is Eleanor Custis, who has been playing opposite Mr. Cumberland.

The two kiddies who have been prominent in the affairs of the Wickett family also accompanied the producer west.

In one day recently contracts were received from the Rialto, Akron; Valen- tine, Toledo; 7th Street, New York; Strand, Engleham; Grand, Reading, and the Regent, Rochester, for the Drew comedies.

Reviewer Says "Do Not See Sennett Feature If It Kills You to Laugh"

San Francisco critics were unanimous in their opinion that Mack Sennett's five-part comedy, "Down on the Farm," will drive away dull care and strike the public's "funny bone.

The feature played to capacity business at the Imperial theatre in San Francisco, it is said, and was presented in a very elaborate manner.

Makes Hired Critic Laugh

Thomas Nunan of the San Francisco Examiner in his review said: "If your doctor says it will kill you to laugh be sure that you stay away from the Imperial. Mack Sennett's 'Down on the Farm' is the funniest comedy I have ever seen on the screen. Yesterday I went to the Imperial feeling down-hearted because it was Sunday and I had to work, but I laughed all the time. Any comedy that can make a hired reviewer laugh is enough to kill some people with merriment. So find out what your doctor says about your mirth capacity before you settle down in front of this live reel."

Thomas W. Daly of the San Francisco Chronicle had this to say: "When Mack Sennett conceived 'Down on the Farm,' he must have measured carefully the actions in the scenario, because for every foot of celluloid he has injected a hearty laugh. 'Down on the Farm' is better than Mack Sennett's former big productions, all of which struck the public's funny bone. From the standpoint of amusement, this latest creation is a 'knock-out.'

"It is one of those comedies that makes girls stop talking about hats and men stop talking about prohibition, in order to watch the picture. The production made the audience enjoy it 'beaucoup.' There is no getting away from the fact that it is filled to the brim with comical situations and actions."

Brings Tears of Laughter

George C. Warren of the San Francisco Daily News had this to say: "Everybody in the theater and everyone in the audience from the front to the rear seats laughed. Sennett's ambitious five-reel comedy which yesterday began a limited engagement at the Imperial theatre was a hit. The comedian's screens are tears of laughter. It is superbly produced; its fun gaining immensely by the attention given to details and the seriousness with which the most farcical situations are handled."

Edward Boland of the San Francisco Bulletin said: "Laugh week at the Imperial! No lump about this announcement! If you go to the playhouse you can figure on leaving dull care at the door and if you assume it is emerging, it is your own fault. Mack Sennett has massed all the mirth of mirth at his command for the attack on dull gloom and when he has succeeded can most justly be judged the immense throng that flock to the Imperial. 'Down on the Farm' is a gem in a foolish program."

The San Francisco Call and Post reviewer said that: "It wasn't be hard to keep them down on the farm if life on the old home place were as lively as it is pictured in Mack Sennett's comedy on the farm. The comedy king has tardy outlined himself in this five-reel feature. There is something, and at times 'something' dougging every movie, but Sennett comedians cavorting on the screen in their well-known slap-stick stuff.

Loew Will Spend Over Million on Frisco House

SAN FRANCISCO—Marcus Loew, Inc., will erect a new theatre here shortly at an expenditure of $1,500,000.

The new playhouse, according to Sam Harris of Ackerman & Harris, western representatives of Mr. Loew, will seat 3,000 persons.

National Picture Theatres Wins Rights Suit Over "Blind Youth"

The court, in its dictum, further said: "The spoken play, "Blind Youth," is proven without contradiction to have attained wide popularity over considerable portions of the United States. We have held that whenever it is manipulated in the court that upon the case made an injunction will be granted at final hearing, one should be awarded preliminarily in the absence of facts presenting special equitable considerations to induce the court in the exercise of judicial discretion to withhold it. The question at bar is whenever a play has attained such popularity that its name has plainly acquired a secondary significance (i.e., one suggestive of that particular play); equity will under the rules of unfair competition prevent the use of the same name or any other colorable imitation thereof, as descriptive of another competing production. All the requisite elements of recovery are here present. Plaintiff has a veritable property or business; that the exhibitions of the parties compete in that they appeal to the same people at the same time and in the same town. Inclined to visit the 'movies' is very plain. The necessary consequence of such a colorable imitation of plaintiff's name as is defendants is deceptive of the public and finally no equity is shown against plaintiff's demand. Further, as a matter of law, plaintiff was entitled to injunctive relief."

Selznick in Statement

Lewis J. Selznick, speaking for the National Picture Theatres, Inc., said: "We wish to be fair in the matter and also with it understood that we are going to stand on the rights guaranteed the National Picture Theatres, Inc., by United States Circuit Court of Appeals."

Terriss at Catalina Island to Take Daring Scenes for Vitagraph Picture

Two Airplanes Scheduled to Move Skyward as Soon As an Electrical Storm Is Forecast—Preparations Have Taken Weeks

Tom Terriss, Vitagraph director, is at Catalina Island off the California coast with his company and several aviators prepared to take daring scenes for the all-star production, "The Sky." Preparations for this phase of the picture have been under way for weeks.

The object for the adventure will be the first black clouds and the first definite weather forecast that an electrical storm is at hand. Two airplanes then will be sent up to have the fury of wind, rain and lightning.

Two Machines to Fly

One machine will carry a man and a girl. The other will be operated by a crew of five men. It will carry two cameras, a huge searchlight and a supply of flame bombs. Each machine also will possess a horizontal propeller at its top and a gyroscope at its centre.

It is declared by Vitagraph that these carriers will be capable of flying in the teeth of the strongest wind, of flying vertically upward, of stopping still for several moments, or of traveling backward.

A combination of the exploit will inaugurate the last step in the advance of aerial science by bringing into vogue a school of flying which will defeat all the terrors of the elements.

Version of Morris Story

The machine which will carry the man and the girl will perform a side-slip and make-believe wreck, while high above the cloud layer. While lightning flashes and sheets of rain pierce and deluge the black air, it will tumble earthward. The second machine flying closely alongside or behind it, will capture every detail of the scenes on the lenses of its cameras.

"The Girl Out of the Sky" is an adaptation of the novel by Gouverneur Morris, re-titled "Trumpet Island." Its screen version has been edited by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester.

A notable cast of players headed by Wallace MacDonald and Marguerite De La Motte, has been selected.

The wide exteriors which are being taken at the most picturesque spots on Catalina Island and along the coast, and the great airplane scenes, will require several weeks of production effort.

Smith on Coast

Albert E. Smith, president of Vitagraph, is passing a protracted visit at Hollywood on the mission of actively supervising the executive phases of this production as well as of several other undertakings by his company.

Among the specials which will be put on the market include "The Courage of Marge O'Doone," which already has been completed: "The Son of Wallingford," which is being especially written by Mr. and Mrs. George Randolph Chester and which will be directed by Mr. Chester at the Brooklyn studio, and several other productions to be done by the same directors in rapid succession.

Hoyt Star Says Farces

Make Good Screen Plays

Otis Harlan, the comedian who first became famous as star of the Charles H. Hoyt farce comedies which were recently purchased by the Charles H. Hoyt Productions, Inc., paid a visit to the Ray studios in Los Angeles to congratulate the first National star on the acquisition of unusual screen material in the Hoyt plays. Mr. Harlan first appeared in a Hoyt comedy at the age of seventeen, and during his career acted in eleven of these stage pieces.

Mr. Harlan told the first National star that he almost felt a proprietary interest in the plays, having acted in so many of them, and said that he was glad Mr. Ray was to appear in one or more of them. The comedian pointed out the unusual features of the Hoyt plays which make them particularly well adapted to the screen. The unalloyed humanity of their author, Charles H. Hoyt, was responsible, said Mr. Harlan, for the deft touches and true-to-life situations which made these farces of such great appeal as pure entertainment.

Long Term Contract Is Signed by Archibald

George Archibald, director of Selznick pictures, has been signed to a long-term contract by Myron Selznick. Mr. Selznick's announcement is said to be the aftermath of the success of Elia Kazan's latest Selznick picture, "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes." Wherever "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" has been shown, it is further stated, film fans and newspaper critics have been unanimous in praising Mr. Archibald's direction.

Following the completion of "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes," Mr. Archibald is working on "Marooned Hearts" for the Selznick Pictures Corporation. He is in the Bahamas taking scenes for the production.

Journeys to the Homes of Great Pictures

No. 2—Charles Ray's Studios

By HARRY HAMMOND HEAL

Charlie Ray had a wonderful housewarming yesterday. The other day, but the wonderful part about it was that he didn't have to play host. He had a lot of yellow stars, film magnates, exchange men and theater owners, not to mention scads of new-paper people, and someone else footed the bills.

Apparent is the cinema gods had decreed that the studio, which formerly housed the Jesse D. Hampton productions, should be christened by J. D. Williams, the general manager of First National, left for the East, and it fell to the lot of Sol Lesser, the enterprising young producer, to stage a farewell luncheon for Mr. Williams and invite all the First National stars to be present. Because of its central location, the Charlie Ray studio was chosen as the scene of gastronomic activities.

Dick Willis, the obliging general manager of the Ray studios, dressed a stage with a banquet set, and himself in a fowy gray suit, and took on the activities of host until the Lesser satellites arrived to form a reception committee of their own.

Dick admits there is nothing pretentious about his studio, but then he says there is nothing pretentious about the Charlie Ray productions.

Shortly after noon the stars began to gather. Anita Stewart was the first to arrive, accompanied by Rudolph Cameron (Mr. Stewart's husband and manager). She brought with her the regrets of Mildred Harris Chaplin who was on location in San Diego. Katherine MacDonald drew up next with Benny Feinman, president of her company, and Sam Rork, her studio manager. Then came the Vidor's, King, the director, and Florence, the star of the King Vidor productions. Their retinue consisted of William Parker, Vidor's manager, and Adela Rogers St. John, King's lady press agent. Charlie Ray and his dog, 'Whiskers,' had been on hand for some time, and had J. D. Williams, the First National executive in whose honor the event was staged.

Michael and Abe Gore, who own half of Los Angeles theaters, appeared; Jack Calhoun, managing director of the Kinema had sneaked in, Dave Bershon, First National Exchange manager was there, and numerous others had made their way from town hired in the prospects of a gratis repast.

But there was no Sol Lesser. He and his general manager, Max Roth, had left the executive offices and was on his way. John McCormick, the excited Lesser press representative, kept telling the guests.

There were visions of hat-passing and a division of the expense of the feed, when suddenly Host Lesser and his G. M. dashed in, with the old hat tuck-still as the excuse for tardiness.

Then came the repast followed by informal speeches by the stars, Mr. Williams and Mr. Lesser, and the making of an exploitation reel for Mr. National's numerous posings for every sort of freak still photograph that the publicity writers could devise. And the stars and executives good naturedly assented, as the scribblers assumed the roles of directors, and director-like Vidor and Jerome Storm stood around and held the orders.

A toast was drunk to the absent sister and brothers, the Talmadge sisters and Charlie Chaplin and Marshall Neilan; then came more handshakes of thanks to Sol Lesser, a word of bon voyage to J. D. Williams, and the old Willis and Inglish studio had been officially baptized as the home of Charlie Ray productions.

Eleven More Houses

Installing Typhoons

Greater Effort Being Made

To Protect Patrons From

Summer Discomforts

Eleven theaters in the South and East have contracted with Typhoon Fan Company of New York recently for the installation of their cooling and ventilating system. The playhouses are:

Small Town Presentation Methods Will Open Eyes of Big Exhibitors
This Opinion Is Expressed by Representative for Real- art After Making a Tour in Interest of Company Through Middle West

Exhibitors in the smaller towns are aware of the need for improvement in exploitation and presentation methods, and, according to Melville E. Maxwell, special representative for Realart they "soon are going to be doing things that will make the bigger fellows sit up and take notice."

Mr. Maxwell has just returned to New York after visiting several points through the Middle West, where he came in contact with a great number of showmen. He reports that in every locality he found business exceedingly prosperous, with exhibitors expressing optimism for the future.

Enjoys Greatest Prosperity
"There is no question that exhibitors in the Middle West are enjoying the greatest prosperity in their history," said Mr. Maxwell. "New houses are building and opening up and the old ones are doing a capacity business every day in the week. The future looks rosy to them all and apparently all they ask is that the supply of attractive pictures keep up."

"What impresses a man traveling about a territory is the marked change that has come in the exhibitor you meet today as compared with the one you met years ago. Motion picture presentation is now safety in the hands of real business men."

"The outstanding fact of interest in work in Florida

Jose Will Direct Geraldine Farrar in First Associated Exhibitors' Subject

Edward Jose, who has handled the microscope in productions featuring Norma Talmadge, Pauline Frederick, Linda Har- lier, Elsie Ferguson, Anita Stewart and others, has been assigned to direct Geraldine Farrar's first production for Associated Exhibitors, Inc. Preparations are complete for beginning work on the picture for which no title has been announced. The most recent work of Mr. Jose was in directing "The Yellow Typhoon." His directorial work has been responsible for several highly successful photoplays, among which are the spectacular all-star cast of "Miss America." Miss Farrar's forthcoming picture can be looked forward to, it is declared, by Associated exhibitors, as a de luxe attraction - "a showman's proposition in every sense of the word."

Mr. Jose's stage and screen experience dates back more than a score of years. He was born in Antwerp, Belgium and studied at the Paris Conservatory for stage arts. His twenty years of stage experience in France, Belgium and South America included a long term as stage director for Sarah Bernhardt. He directed all the plays at the Theatre Antoine in Paris for several years. His screen career included connections in a directorial capacity with Pathe, Selznick, Arctreet, Famous Players, and many others.

LAEMMLE'S AMBITION ACHIEVED

Universal President Says Organization Always Has Been His 'Baby' and He Never Had Given Up Hope of Gaining Control He Now Possesses

Carl Laemmle, president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, declares that in the purchase of J. A. Powers' interest in the producing unit he has 'achieved the ambition of my life.' Concerning the purchase from the former treasurer of the company, the producer said:

"I organized the Universal Company eight years ago and it always has been my 'baby.' In all the vicissitudes of the Universal Company's varied existence I never gave up hope of gaining practical control of it some day. That day has come and I am glowing in the opportunity I have for making Universal the greatest organization on the globe.

"There is the friendliest feeling between Mr. Powers and myself. He has known for a long time of my ambition to have complete control of the company. He finally consented to sell out to me. The deal was consummated in all friendliness. Although he no longer is connected with Universal, he has my good will and I have his.

Has Been Hard Struggle

"It has been a hard struggle most of the time, building Universal. I wouldn't go through it again for all the money in the United States. We have taken the same risks as the greatest, way of building it into a tower of strength. Our basis has been fair treatment of exhibitors plus fair treatment of competitors.

"I do not believe that there is an exhibitor in the world who denounces that Universal has tried to right every wrong in the business, and I know that no producing company can honestly accuse us of any of the tricks that have been a blemish on the industry.

"It looks like fair weather for Universal from now on. In the past year there has been a long time of my improvement in the quality of Universal pictures. We are prepared to show a more astonishing improvement this year and in the years to come, each star to make a series of eight pictures during the ensuing year.

"Our five great 1920 serials are taking like hot cakes. 'The Lion Man,' 'Elmo the Fearless,' 'The Moon Riders,' 'The Vanishing Dagger' and 'The Dragon's Net,' taken either individually or together, form a distinct stride in chapter photo-drama.

"Universal is beating new paths in other directions. Two exploring expeditions now are in the hearts of Africa and Borneo, getting pictures never before shown on the screen—pictures of native life—all of the strange animals of those two untroudden sections of the world.

"Other new and recent ventures by Universal include the turning out of high-class five-reel comedies based on farcical stories by popular writers, a new brand of high-class two-reel comedies, and a weekly novelty reel of strange and curious things in nature and in the works of mankind.

"Universal rapidly is expanding its great sales and distribution force. An expedition now is nearing Australia to set up the first Universal branch in that continent.

"Keep your eye on the Universal. We've just begun to fight."

Bray Pictures to Erect

New Studio In Chicago

Because of the rapid expansion of its industrial division, Bray Pictures Corporation has been forced to seek larger quarters for the Western studios. The new location is at 7314 N. Ashland avenue, Chicago, where a new and modern building will be erected.

The new studio, which is in charge of E. Dean Parmelee, vice-president, has a large camera room, film developing and printing room, large and well lighted dressing-room, offices, and a thoroughly equipped projection room. Jack Nortling will have charge of the animated technical department. The sales offices will continue at their present location, 206 S. LaSalle street, Chicago.

Howard Selznick Is Married In January

Here is one of the news hounds lost the trail on. It also is proof that Cupid can keep secrets.

It is a romantic little story with the locale in Brooklyn. Time, January 30th.

This is where the secret begins. Howard Selznick went to California in January to attend to certain activities at the Selznick studios in Los Angeles for his father, Lewis J. Selznick. A short time ago he returned to New York.

But Howard failed to spend much time at the home of his father. Then the news hounds got busy. Yes, Howard was married last January to Miss Mildred Schneider, daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Henry Schneider of Brooklyn.

Larson Contracts for

Fifty-Two Reissues of World Film Corporation

T. E. Larson, general manager of Peacock Productions, Inc., has contracted for fifty-two World Film Corporation reissues which he will distribute in nine states.

This is said to be one of the biggest state right deals ever consummated by a buyer from the Middle West. Peacock Productions has its headquarters at Tulsa, Okla. In addition to headquarters at Tulsa he also has offices in Dallas, Tex., and St. Louis, and will proceed immediately to open up other branches in Omaha, Kansas City and New Orleans.

The pictures purchased are the well-known re-issues of Robert Warwick, Alice Brady, Clara Kimball Young and other stars. The immediate expansion of his business necessitated an increase in his working force and a number of salesmen and executives were employed by him while he was in New York.

Harrison Ford Is Wanda Hawley's Leading Man in First Realest Film

The cast which is supporting Wanda Hawley in her initial production for Realest Pictures Corporation, "Miss Hobbs," includes Harrison Ford, as leading man, with Lila Lee, Jerome Derr, Walter Hiers, and Julanne Johnston. Donald Crisp is directing at the Hollywood studios.

In spite of the Getzmes enthusiasm at his acquisition of Ford, who has played previously with the star. the combination is well insured for an auspicious start for Miss Hawley's starring career.

Jack Mulhall has appeared as leading male in part film productions. Particular care in casting was required, it is said. In the original stage production of the play it was presented by practically an all-star cast, that included Annie Russell, Claret Bloodgood and Charles Richman. Its screen adaptation, Realest officials decided, should have an equaly strong cast.

Plot of Story

Wanda Hawley plays the role of Henrietta Hobbs, the part originated on the stage by Miss Russell. Miss Hobbs is an advanced type of woman. She devotes her time to curst art, barefoot dancing, free verse and saving her last fortune for her sisters from the pill of matrimony.

Finding that her friend, Beula Hackett is married by her husband, she takes in and weans away from her her husband. Milicent, another of her friends, about to be married to George Joppes, is separated from the impending chains of matrimony.

Cosmopolitan Obtains Right to Boyle Tales

Cosmopolitan Productions, through Henry M. Hobart, vice-president and general manager, announces the acquisition of the Jack Boyle crooked stories. Under the terms of the settlement Cosmopolitan will have first call on all stories by this author appearing in Henrietta Hobbs, Harpers Bazaar and Harpers Bazaar for an indefinite period.

Kremer Maintains Weekly Record of Sales During a Period of Six Months

Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., has maintained its former record of weekly sales on the Charlie Chaplin pictures which it acquired for distribution in the United States and Canada, according to a summary of the activities of the company during the last six months.

Mr. Kremer has expanded his state right business from the occupancy of one room to the use of more than half a floor in one of the prominent New York film buildings. The office personnel has been increased from five people to the present staff of thirty. The progress of the organization has been marked by the increasing of his share of the distribution of the Kremer productions in New York and Northern New Jersey.

Territories Sold

The following territories have been disposed of for the Charlie Chaplin productions:

Be Hive Film Exchange, Chicago, Northern Maryland, New Mexico; First National Film Company, Kansas City, Mo., Western Missouri and Kansas; Twentieth Century Film Company, Philadelphia, Pa., Eastern Pennsylvania and Southern New Jersey; Super Film Attractions, Inc., Washington, D. C., Columbia, Delaware, Virginia, North Carolina, Quality Film Corporation, Pittsburgh, Pa., Western Pennsylvania and West Virginia; Essene Productions Delux Company, Cleveland, O., Ohio and Kentucky; Big Features Rights Corporation, Louisville, Ky., Kentucky and Tennessee; A. C. Bormberg Attractions, Atlanta, Ga., Georgia, Florida, Alabama, North and South Carolina; Eastern Film Company, Maine, New Hampshire, Connecticut, Vermont, Massachusetts, Rhode Island, Feature Film Company, Minneapolis, Minn., Minnesota, North and South Dakota; Standard Film Corporation, St. Louis, Mo., Southern Illinois and Eastern Missouri.

Additional Sales

Metro Pictures Corporation, Dallas, Tex., Texas, Oklahoma, Arkansas; Mickey Film Corporation, Chicago, Ill., Illinois, Indiana and Exhibitors' Film Exchange, Washington, D. C., Delaware, Maryland, Virginia, District of Columbia, South Carolina, F. A. F. Enterprises, Inc., Omaha, Neb., Iowa and Nebraska; D. W. Griffith Film Service, Ohio and Kentucky; A. Glasnapp, Bowman, N. D., North and South Dakota; Davis Amusement Enterprises, Montreal, Canada, for Eastern Canada.

Bookings for These Chaplin pictures have been obtained in theatres of big-time caliber, such as New York's Rialto and Rivoli; Grauman's theatre, Los Angeles; the Keith, Proctor, Fox and Moss circuits.

At the present time there remains less than 10 per cent of the entire country to be disposed of on the state right basis and the Kremer organization is entering the second half of its first year with an enviable record from the standpoint of territories sold and bookings secured.

Favors Legislation Against Lewd Film

WASHINGTON. — Prohibition of the transmission in interstate or foreign commerce of indecent or lascivious motion picture films has been given a favorable reception in the Senate committee on the judiciary which has favorably reported the bill passed by the House last week.

The measure would amend the United States penal code by adding motion picture films to the list of articles prohibited from carriage by common carriers between the states or to or from the District of Columbia and the jurisdiction of the United States.
The "Big Six" Directors Who Have Announced Distribution Plans

Chief Factors of Associated Producers, Inc.
"FADS"

America is a nation of faddists.
The wise exhibitor capitalizes the fact.
Because Americans are essentially progressive, because competition is keen in a social as well as a business sense, the new idea is suggested today and nationally adopted tomorrow.
A man in Birmingham, Ala., dons overalls, ostensibly to save the price of a custom-made suit of clothes. In two weeks every hamlet in the nation has its "Overalls and Denim" club.
A producer announces an especially attractive title for a coming attraction. In about the same length of time competitors announce titles that are practically duplicates of the original.
A national characteristic, the susceptibility to fads is legitimately subject to exploitation. In every new craze that engages public attention the exhibitor has an opportunity that will yield profit if properly acted upon.
By putting his staff in overalls, as suggested in this department last week, M. J. Weil, manager of the Castle theatre, Chicago, was given a quarter of the space devoted to motion pictures by the most conservative newspaper in the city.
The example is good.
But there are not many ready-made fads of the "overalls" magnitude.
The progressive exhibitor, therefore, makes his own fads and capitalizes them locally to as great advantage.

Pictures Afford Ideas

In the pictures booked for longer than ordinary runs the individual exhibitor will find ample suggestions for the creation of fads that result as well for him as did the national fad for the Castle.
"Don't Ever Marry," a Marshall Neilan production which has just been given its first showings, offers excellent opportunity for the exploitation of a "Funny Week" that should get big returns. If "Down on the Farm" is booked for the same week the scheme is twice as promising.
If "The Toll Gate," "Desert Love," "The Westerners," or any such combination of western productions are grouped for consecutive exhibition a "Wild West Week" is the obvious conclusion and one that permits of unlimited exploitation in newspaper and upon the street.
"Oriental Week" Promising

Of especial promise, from an exploitation standpoint, is the "Oriental Week" which may be staged when desirable with little difficulty. "The Virgin of Tombouli," "Broken Blossoms," "The Red Lantern" and "The Willow Tree" are typical productions, the publication dates of which indicate that Oriental pictures are at all times available.
And "In Old Kentucky," "The Sporting Duchess," "Checkers" and "Vagabond Luck" are race horse pictures that would serve for a week or longer during a local race meet with unquestioned results.

RESULTS

By results, and by no other standard, the merit of advertising and exploitation is measured.
The Castle theatre, Chicago, capitalized a fad when the ushers were attired in overalls and gained publicity which occupied one-quarter of the motion picture department of the most conservative Chicago newspaper.
More expensive exploitation is used by the Castle every day of its existence, but it seldom obtains even approximately the same results.
Exploitation of fads is at once the cheapest and most profitable form of advertising.

Other Methods Practical

Another method of bringing unusual attendance by creating an especial and timely interest may be found in the short subjects at all times available. "Travel Week" is less spectacular, perhaps, but can be inexpensively staged and effectively executed.
"News Week" would be particularly desirable at a time when big things were happening and the newspapers in particular favor. Available news reels offer unlimited possibilities.
"Winter Week" for the middle of summer should be productive of good results and can easily be arranged. "A Fool and His Money" is the first snow picture of the season, though producers will not fail to keep the demand supplied. Theatre decoration to suit and innumerable newspaper and billboard angles can be developed.

Americanization Theme Valuable

Exhibitors always have sought to obtain suitable features for Independence Day. This year, because of the activities of the Americanization Committee of the Motion Picture Industry, there will be no dearth of material and the theme is especially timely.
The Fourth of July comes on Sunday. The week preceding the actual holiday contains an opportunity which no thinking showman will overlook.

Fad Is Exhibitor’s Capital

With little difficulty any exhibitor can sit down and make out a list of special weeks that will last throughout the calendar year. It is not advisable, perhaps, to use them to that extent, though many theatres may find the plan a powerful one in overcoming particularly obstinate opposition.

It is obvious, however, that every exhibitor should keep the calendar of coming publications under close observation and intimately associated with the calendar of holidays, seasons, weeks and months.

It is as apparent, in the light of the overall events, that the newspaper should never be permitted to grow cold before it has been searched diligently for promising suggestions. Every week brings account of an event of national or local magnitude that can be utilized with great success by identifying the theatre with the event or the tendency it indicates.

Spectacular Methods Win

It is a fact that the more spectacular the fad is the more enthusiastically it is adopted. Remember that.

Cirrus every fad that you stage in the most spectacular manner possible.

Americans admire the spectacular. You will have reached the pinnacle of the spectacular when, by your spectacular methods, you have made your theatre the fad of your community.

Chicago Exhibitor Has Novel Lithograph Plan

Since all of the producing companies are putting out such attractive and artistic posters the following novel device for displaying them and advertising coming attractions will undoubtedly be of interest to exhibitors who have the facilities at hand to apply it to their stage. That the idea is practical is evidenced by the fact that Charles H. Ryan, manager of the Garfield theatre, 2844 Madison street, Chicago, has been using it regularly with success for the past four years.

Here are the details of the idea.

At the Garfield they have a fly loft such as is found in theatres where stage productions are in the order of things. A special drop was made to order, hung and painted by the Peitz & Carsen Scenic Studios. This curtain is lowered every intermission in front of the picture screen. Footlights provide illumination upon the drop is painted a signboard as shown in the illustration accompanying this article. It is large enough to accommodate two six-sheets bearing upon coming attractions. The audience is absolutely certain to read every word of both of these during the intermission.

The plan is immensely better than the use of slides which it has replaced in the Garfield scheme of things. It is also a valuable suggestion for those exhibitors who, because they have worn of six-sheets and other lithographs in the lobby, have dispensed with the use of paper almost entirely.

Mr. Ryan always advertises the two following attractions in this way. On the day the picture was taken, “In Old Kentucky” was scheduled to replace “Water, Water Everywhere” and “The Copperhead” was to be installed in place of “The Woman Game.”

The date lines that hang under the posters are made of tin and are painted on both sides. The word “Tomorrow” is permanently painted in the space shown.

Mr. Ryan, an enthusiast for the betterment of theatre conditions as well as an earnest and intelligent showman, is anxious to have his idea adopted.

Stage view of the Garfield theatre showing Charles Ryan’s billboard drop in position. The drop is lowered in front of the screen during every intermission.
Sensational in itself and equally sensational as regards its effect upon the box office of the Broadway theatre, Richmond, Va., the “bally-Hula Hula” ranks high among the successful exploitation features of all time.

“The Idol Dancer,” D. W. Griffith’s First National attraction, is reported as playing to seven capacity houses daily for seven days, relying for its drawing power solely upon newspaper advertising and the exploitation feature best described by the above pictures.

In Richmond a troupe of six was employed. Suitable stage setting and lobby dressing was provided. The musical program was easily arranged to suit the presentation, a wealth of appropriate music being available.

Every exhibitor who plays the picture can capitalize the Broadway example.

If a troupe of six is not available, and it is improbable that there will be difficulty in obtaining the necessary talent, fewer performers can be used to good effect.

Not many productions of current issue present such ready-made material for the advertiser. It is to the credit of the producer that he has kept the exhibitor’s needs in mind while staging the composition.
That it is the sole province of the advertising, exploitation and publicity departments of the United Artists Corporation to devise ways and means for the exhibitors to make money on the pictures that are published by "Big Four" is exemplified in the elaborate folders that have been issued by that organization on Mack Sennett's five-reel comedy "Down on the Farm." On this production there are five folders issued, contained in an attractively decorated container; one on program and newspaper exploitation suggestions, one on newspaper advertising suggestions, one on newspaper publicity, one on lobby display, posters and billboard exploitation, and one on music and picture presentation. The suggestions that are contained in the folders, which are four, eight and twelve pages each, are worked out very carefully along their respective lines.

An excellent single column campaign opener from the United Artists press book for "Down on the Farm."

In all the material issued, the name of Mack Sennett, king of comedy producers, is given prominence, since he of all comedy producers has been the foremost exponent during the past five years. In doing this, however, it is also made plain that this picture should be "played up" because of its being his latest five-reel special production, since that alone will call to mind the fact that he has made but few others of this size.

It must be admitted that the title of the picture "Down on the Farm," has an exceptional advertising and exploitation value, and no trick of the trade is overlooked in the exploitation suggestions that are issued. It is impressed on the exhibitor that this is a production that should be jazzed in everything that is done, and many of the suggestions are far from the obvious ones that would be given on such a picture.

After pointing out the obvious exploitation, such as the prologue with a short farm skit in a comedy vein; the radio quartet singing the "old-timers" songs of the "Ruben, Ruben, I've been thinking" type; the dressing of your ushers in farmer clothes; the building of a farm scene in your lobby in which every type of farm implement could be brought into play; and the similar things for your stage set; the parading through the streets of your town with a hay wagon filled with children, on the sides of which hang banners announcing your show: the "hick" and "Iy Gosh" sandwich men parading the streets; and a number of others of that type, the folder sets forth no end of ideas that are unusually unique and attractive that should get a whole town talking about the production. These exploitation suggestions are worked out so that some can be used for school children, townsfolk, and a number to attract the attention of the people who live on the outskirts of a city or zone of the theatre, helping the exhibitor to build up additional clientele.

In conjunction with the newspaper exploitation campaign that is suggested there are provided numerous cuts and mats, the material for which has been carried out with extreme care that everything will print up well in any type of newspaper in which they are placed. A new innovation in advertising for the exhibitor is set forth in the newspaper advertising suggestions, something that has been a long-felt want, in presenting artists' drawings which can be used for their single-column advertising.

Suggestions for musical settings are also prepared for lobby displays and theatre adornments, all of which should prove very effective.

Intended for newspaper use, this design may be enlarged and used as a stencil for street use to good effect.

Genuine Race Horses and Jockies Exploit “Old Kentucky” for Moore

The chief feature of this exploitation story are Tom Moore, Washington’s prominent exhibitor, who has the First National Exhibitors’ Circuit franchise for that territory, and the novel ideas he brought forth, resulting in Anita Stewart’s “In Old Kentucky” enjoying a twenty-one day run.

This story must have a high-bait introduction, for it was in the East Room of the White House, before President Wilson, Mrs. Wilson, Dr. Cary Grayson and other high-batted individuals that “In Old Kentucky” was shown for the first time. And by the time it had been shown for the third time at the end of three weeks a proverbial lid had been knocked into a cocked hat. The same thing had happened to the Strand Theatre’s box office records.

The exploitation cogs began grinding when Mr. Moore took a quick trip to New York, accompanied by Tom North, his director general, and arrangements were made for the shipment of five race horses, trained to run on “treadmills.” The treadmills could also have been obtained at the same point, but the property-room of Mr. Moore’s Strand Theatre already carried equipment of this character, together with special scenery and a revolving cyclorama. Then came the question of jockies, and right at this point is seen one of the reasons why Tom Moore’s presentations always go over with a bang. Does he come back to Washington and pick up five or six boys who say they know how to ride and therefore “might” do? Not Mr. Moore. He’s going to advertise the staging of a real race and that is exactly what his patrons may expect and are going to get, otherwise there will be no race—hence nothing but real, honest-to-goodness, regular jockies will do, and Tom gets them and pays them “regular” money for their services.

The jockey’s names are familiar to the public. For instance, “Hots” Evans, Michael McGee and John Hyland are well known, likewise the winning mounts they have ridden; the owners to whose stables they are under contract with and whose “silks” they wear are well known and not adverse to a little free publicity, particularly in view of the fact that the boys are due to ride at the various tracks around Washington immediately following their theatrical engagement. Special stories, readers and mention in other than theatrical or motion picture columns followed naturally and were gladly accepted by the papers.

A ten-day advance advertising campaign was decided on, starting with a single column ten-line teaser, which space was gradually increased until approximately 220 lines were being used in each of the four Washington papers the day previous to the opening followed by a grand four column, 250-line deep smash on the day of opening. Daily ads approximating fifty lines were used until the following Sunday, when another three-column display was used the space for both the second and third weeks being gradually curtailed as the show by the end of the first week almost had enough word-of-mouth advertising to carry it, due to the manner of its presentation.

If there ever was a man who swore by the newspaper and its direct home appeal it is Tom Moore, and they are few and far between who once having listened to his reasons for such attitude and seen the justification of same in his box-office receipts, who do not become staunch converts, at least in so far as Washington is concerned.

The details for the staging of “In Old Kentucky” were handled by “Bill” Moore, Tom Moore’s brother. The staging of special scenes and effects, booking of acts when necessary, employment of stage crews, etc., all fall into the competent hands of Tom North assisted by the various house managers, with the result that from the time the machines first commence to grind on a premier showing in any of the Moore houses until the final performance, there is nothing left to do but step back and watch them come.

“River’s End” Contest

Tries Keith Managers

Contests and exploitation are closely associated in the trade mind. Every week a new angle is developed by some enterprising exhibitor. In each of these there is a distinct value. But a contest between theatre managers, an exploitation contest, with a cash prize as the winner’s reward, is a distinctly new and unique enterprise.

When “The River’s End,” a First National attraction, played a week at Keith’s Prospect theatre, Brooklyn, N. Y., Harry Crull, the manager, was told that the picture would be exhibited later at Keith’s Green Point theatre, and that the manager who did the best advertising and showed the best results would be given a monetary reward.

Accordingly, Mr. Crull went to work with a will. He employed four men, attired them as members of the North-west Mounted Police, mounted them upon steeds and sent them through the neighborhood. His lobby was decorated more lavishly than before in the history of the house. His artist went into the stores of the community, painting mirrors, placing cards, taking advantage of every opportunity.

The result was the first week run the house ever experienced and a broken attendance record.

Leon Kelmar, manager of the Green Point, has the advantage of Crull’s experience. It will be interesting to know who wins.
“Sex” Breaks Royal Box Office Record
As Exchange and Theatre Join Forces

Just what the combination of a big exploitation picture, a live exhibitor and an aggressive exchange manager means was revealed at the Royal Theatre, Des Moines, la., when Louise Glaum in “Sex” did a landslide business against a rain and snowstorm on the opening day and a competitive first run exhibitor who sought to divert public attention with a picture bearing a similar title.

B. I. VanDyke, owner of the Royal, and C. D. Hill, manager in Des Moines for the Hodkinson organization, had a recent experience in team work when Zane Grey’s “Desert Gold” played a tremendously successful week at the Royal and this pair determined to work together with even closer cooperation than they did on the earlier production.

“Sex” opened with half-page advertisements in the various Des Moines dailies. These advertisements got entirely away from the press book exploitation provided with the picture and were thoroughly localized as to both art and expression. They dominated each newspaper amusement section in which they appeared and literally drowned competitive advertising. Evidently VanDyke and Hill had ample forewarning that another theatre intended paralleling “Sex” with a similarly named picture, and the “Sex” advertisements gave warning that the Des Moines public should avoid being confused by a similarity of titles. At any rate the competitive theatre played its attraction but two days of an advertised week’s run, changing its bill on Tuesday.

The Royal lobby show was one of the most unique and distinctive displays ever devised on a production in Des Moines. For the entire week Mr. Van Dyke enlisted the services of an Orpheum vaudeville team, Grant and Dumar, expert instrumentalists, who played a banjo and accordion in front of the house for twenty minutes before each of the big performances.

All about the lobby in one-sheet size were hand-painted signs bearing snappy paragraphs about “Sex” that arrested the attention of the big crowds attracted by the musicians.

The result of the intensive and skilled exploitation of Louise Glaum and her J. Parker Read, Jr., production was that the Royal did its biggest week’s business; that the picture, after a liberal advertising allowance in newspapers and through all of the recognized channels of publicity, brought in the biggest net rental to the distributor ever received by any picture in the history of Des Moines or the State of Iowa, and like-

Special presentation features augmented the extensive exploitation which broke the Royal theatre house record.
"Little Brother of the Palace" Follows Established Precedent

The newspaper methods of Stanley Chambers, manager of the Palace theatre, Wichita, Kans., are well known to readers of this department. Few exhibitors have produced high-class results with such consistency. Now have produced better results even at short intervals.

But this is not a Palace story. This is a New Regent story. The New Regent "The Little Brother of the Palace," is also located in Wichita. It is managed by an assistant to Mr. Chambers, but the watchful eye of the man who put Wichita on the map in an advertising sense is ever upon the work of that assistant. The result is plainly seen in every advertisement used by the other institution. And in the newspapers containing the advertisements for both theatres persons interested in advertising as advertising can trace clearly the influence of the leading institution.

From recent issues we have clipped the accompanying advertisements used by the New Regent. It is unnecessary that Palace advertisements be reproduced for purposes of comparison, as readers of this department are thoroughly familiar with the Chambers style. They know that Chambers makes of the lowly stock rule an instrument for the gaining of beautiful and powerful effects in display. They know that Chambers takes a handful of words from the English of the street, arranges them in orderly sequence and makes them express ideas that are worthy of expression. It is not recorded that Chambers ever used a word of "filler" in his advertising. It is frequently obvious that many words of legitimate copy have been omitted in the interests of display.

The same general characteristics distinguish the New Regent representation. There is the same economy of words, and the same generous use of space. There is the daily line at the top, a pointed phrase that serves the important purpose of making people read the copy, and the same effective wording.

The assistant manager who takes care of the New Regent advertising is fortunate in his position. It is a position from which a man who has spent his time wisely can step into the management of the biggest theatre in the land with assurance that he will be equal to the task of making people patronize that theatre.

The "Male and Female" display is a typical Chambers trick layout. In the reproduction it is difficult to read the copy in the box. In the original it was not easy to read—but it is safe to say that all who saw the display read it in full.

The trick set-up is not a matter to be trifled with. If the advertiser is not a skilled workman he had better leave it for the other fellows to play with. It often has a double edge.

The "Double Speed" composition is less usual. It represents the straight-hitting style that is used for the less spectacular production in Wichita, a "business" style that pays consistently.

Princess Ad Displays
Picture of Plot Idea

Every photoplay was an idea before it was anything else. If the idea had not been considered good there would have been no picture. It is the idea, in the last analysis, that is sold to the public. The good advertisement is based upon that idea.

The Princess theatre, Denver, Colo., man or may not have had the line of reasoning in mind when they prepared the accompanying advertisement for "What's Your Husband Doing?" but they achieved the same result that would have been achieved by a workman using such an argument as his starting point.

It is proper that advertising men should use this idea when beginning a campaign, or the composition of a single unit that is to go with that campaign. The result is always the result that follows the work of the man with a definite purpose. It is good.

There are two ways of working. One way is to fill a certain number of hours with activity, with little or no regard for the fruit of that activity, attention being given merely to the creating of a busy appearance and the getting through until pay day without seeming to be getting something for nothing.

The other way is to work for work's sake, or rather for the sake of that cause in behalf of which the work exists. The man who follows this method succeeds. In advertising he is a good advertiser.

A dance scene interrupted by strong dialogue introduced the plot essentials before screening.
The lady who carried the Columbia theatre's message throughout Pittsburgh during the run of "The Virgin of Stamboul."

The advance publicity and exploitation on Universal's "The Virgin of Stamboul" was about as well conceived and executed as any ever seen in Pittsburgh, Pa., due to the ingenuity of Herman Stern, Universal manager at Pittsburgh, who discovered a certain Mrs. Fleischer and developed and brought to perfection one of the cleverest "stunts" ever used in connection with the picture in smoky city.

Mrs. Fleischer is a middle-aged lady, very spry for her age, who was for many years a vaudeville performer. Mr. Stern had her costumed in a "rube" makeup and, with an old-fashioned bonnet and tie, an umbrella and other features of dress that the stage has popularized as belonging to the natives of the country. Mrs. Fleischer walked the streets of Pittsburgh.

In her left hand she carried a bag, which also added to her picturesque appearance and which she opened every few minutes and on which "The Virgin of Stamboul" and the theatre were advertised. Crowds followed her everywhere and she did a vast amount of good in telling the people where and when the picture was to be shown. She carried on a running fire of conversation with the multitudes that congregated about her, her stage experience standing her in good stead.

In addition to this she also visited all the big stores, going from floor to floor, creating no end of comment. Mrs. Fleischer's benign motherly countenance induced all parties to leave the bars down in her behalf, as the police in Pittsburgh usually stop any occurrence of such a nature.

Mrs. Fleischer also made a door to door canvass in various sections of the city, distributing a number of admission tickets to the Columbia theatre. These tickets only admitted ladies but it served to create a great amount of curiosity. Altogether this was one of the best worked out "stunts" ever arranged for in Pittsburgh in advance of the showing of any picture.

Exploitation Expert
Steals Banner Space

Space is the advertiser's working material. Without it he is helpless. It is natural, therefore, that he does not in every case question the source from which it is obtained. Though the following account may raise a question of ethics, it is not likely that it will be considered the less interesting or adaptable because of that fact. The clipping is from the Salt Lake Herald.

"Transit of a classy electric coupe down Main street Saturday at the dignified pace of three miles an hour created considerable comment and likewise hilarity, because utterly unconscious therein sat two prim ladies while on the back of the electric vehicle was prominently displayed a pennant bearing the legend, 'Excuse My Dust.' Small boys gleefully raced past while the drivers of cars which passed the slow-moving coupe smiled back.

"Within half an hour all sorts of gasoline propelled buggies, from the plebian 'Henry' to the aristocratic twin six, were sporting similar pennants, the drivers of which for the most part being utterly oblivious of unsolicited adornments flouted across the gas tank. Then the police took a hand and investigated, until the solution was forthcoming with the laconic statement on the part of a disinterested party that he guessed George Carpenter of the Paramount-Empress was pulling another advertising stunt.

"Mr. Carpenter subsequently admitted that such was the case. We had five hundred of those pennants printed and I turned some of our boys loose to tag the automobiles parked on Main street, and the fun of the thing is that while we expected to get arrested and secure some free publicity thereby for Wallace Reid in 'Excuse My Dust,' which starts today at the theatre, the automobile drivers took kindly to it and in a number of cases even drove up to the theatre and asked if it had a few more pennants to spare, as they had a friend who owned a speedy car and they knew he would like to tack one of the back and cut loose down the pike.

"Before 6 o'clock the five hundred pennants had been distributed, with the result today if a car passes another and flauts 'Excuse My Dust' in the face of the slow-going vehicle, the owner of the latter will know that it is not intended as an insult, but is simply another of those advertising dodges on the part of the versatile motion picture exhibitor."

Unique Lobby Device
Aids Burston Serial

Making exciting serials, is child's play compared with the resource required to conceive advertising mediums that really help put over the pictures, according to Louis Burston.

Burston's current serial, "The Hawk's Treachery," with King Baggot in a dual role, proved one of the surest sellers of all the Burston ventures in Illinois, but the serial didn't begin to strike its gait among exhibitors until Burston, who announces himself a showman first and a film maker second, sent to the exhibitors running the serial a new lobby display designed to attract into the theatres where introduced some part of the curious element of passers-by.

The device has for its base a life-size plaster cast of a hawk, dyed an eagle hue. Suspended from the head of the statuette are several dozen vari-colored silk skeins of lengths sufficient to span the depths of the average theatre lobby. The imitation fly when suspended over the entrance of lobbies suggests something of the motion of the predatory bird after which it is fashioned, and the skeins running from its bill when fastened to various points of the side walls and ceilings of the arcades and at illustrations that depict different situations of the drama the scheme aims to advertise.

Institutional Theatre Party Seen
As Force for Community Standing

Community standing is one of the most valuable of advertising departments. It is not a department that is frequently discussed in print or in the places where theatre people gather, much as it should be.

This, no doubt, is due in large measure to the fact that community standing, much as it is desired by all serious-minded exhibitors, is not a thing to be purchased for a given sum and summarily chalked up to the advertising account in the theatre ledger.

Neither can set rules for the bettering of standing be laid down arbitrarily and for the use of any and all. Local conditions govern the methods by which community standing may be improved in every instance.

Of recent years, and rapidly gaining favor is the idea of the theatre party for orphans or crippled children.

Recently it was the pleasure of this department to chronicle the "Pollyanna" party given for the crippled children of Hartford, Conn. Other affairs of like nature have been described from time to time, with the result that exhibitors everywhere are taking advantage of the opportunities presented by certain pictures for enterprises of this character. Detroit is the latest city to be represented in this connection.

Six hundred inmates of nearly all the orphan asylums in and near Detroit attended a special performance of Mark Twain's "Huckleberry Finn," the Paramount Arctanet production at the Broadway-Strand Theatre as the guest of Sol E. Sallan, the Detroit jeweler.

The Simons Sales Company, local distributors for the Willys-Overland products, donated ten new Overland sedans; the Dodge Motor Car Company forwarded twenty new Dodge sedans; the J. L. Hudson Department furnished four trucks and the Crowley-Milner company were represented by four huge trucks for the purpose of safely transporting these orphans to the theatre and return.

And with huge streamers on each vehicle, reading "We're Going to See 'Huck Finn' at the Broadway-Strand Theatre" this fleet of cars came from all sections of the city into the busiest section. Throughout the trip the orphans sang songs of joy and made the afternoon a memorable event.

The exploitation representative of Famous Players-Lasky in Detroit obtained the co-operation of the police department, who assigned eight traffic experts to clear all vehicles for one square to accommodate the incoming cars. The thirty-eight vehicles arrived at their destination and lined up solidly for one square, where they remained for over two hours despite traffic regulations forbidding their remaining this length of time.

In the theatre special comedies were shown and the orphans gave three cheers for their benefactors. After enjoying "Huck Finn" they marched out of the theatre and in the lobby each child was given a half-pound box of "Huckleberry Finn," donated by a Detroit candy manufacturer who insisted that his name be kept secret.

The Wise Exhibitor
Chooses His Words

Double meanings are dangerous. A musical show in New York recently advertised, "A Chorus That Outstrips All."

The result was, perhaps, exactly what the advertisers intended, a rush for tickets by persons who chose to give the line the suggestive interpretation.

It is possible that musical shows can afford that sort of thing. It undoubtedly is effective. In the case of the musical—show it demonstrated its effectiveness in attracting a great deal of business—of a sort.

That sort of business is not the kind that exhibitors who intend to make their institutions permanent in their communities are well advised in selecting.

There is such a thing as self-respect in the new show business—the motion picture show business.

It is that self-respect which exhibitors can credit, in greater degree than it is now credited, with the present high estate of the screen.

The exhibitor whose advertising smacks of the suggestive, making appeal to the most undesirable type of audience, is not a desirable member of the industry. He will not long be any sort of a member.

The law of natural selection works its magic automatically.

Polo Will Produce
His Own Pictures

LOS ANGELES. April 27.—Eddie Polo is to make all of his future productions independently and turn them over to Universal for distribution, being paid for each negative as delivered. The new arrangement was announced yesterday.

A jeweler's window converted into an advertisement for the Broadway Strand theatre by the simple addition of cards logically placed.
Marshall Neilan's second independent production, "Don't Ever Marry," an adaptation by Marion Fairfax of Edgar Franklin's story, offers exceptional exploitation possibilities to the exhibitor. The First National Exhibitors Circuit, in conjunction with the publicity department of the Marshall Neilan organization, has prepared an extensive exploitation campaign for Mr. Neilan's second production from his own studios.

A set of special window cards, seven by eleven inches, carrying tersely worded "personal" messages from "Joe" to "Myra," present a novel teaser campaign available to the exhibitor at little expense. These cards can be used by all merchants in the neighborhood of the theatre a week in advance and by making a daily change the exhibitor can drive home the message, "Don't Ever Marry," as excellent propaganda for his picture.

Several different styles of teaser advertisements for newspaper campaigns have also been prepared. One of these campaigns can be put over by using very little space each day. The advertisements are headed, "It's Tough on—-" and then are listed a number of different trades people. Each day, a new set of trades and vocations are mentioned and on the final day the secret is made public by an ad which reads: "What's tough on—lawyers, street cleaners, jewelers, milliners, landlords, etc.—Don't Ever Marry and learn for yourself."

In the press sheets for this production many novel stunts to exploit the new Neilan picture are offered. These ideas were prepared for use in towns of all sizes so that any exhibitor can save time in creative thought along these lines by simply referring to the press sheet.

An exceptional newspaper publicity angle is given "Don't Ever Marry" in the fact that Matt Moore, who has been brother-in-law of Mary Pickford, Alice Joyce and Grace Coolidge plays the leading role in the Neilan film. Matt is the only member of his family who has never married. "Don't Ever Marry," with Tom Moore as the leading man, it is readily seen, offers plenty of good newspaper copy. Another splendid newspaper feature is offered in an article by Eddie O'Hara of the Neilan publicity department involving the visit of a ten-days-old bride and groom who called at the Neilan studio at the time when some of the most striking scenes for "Don't Ever Marry" were staged.

In addition to a number of other special exploitation ideas, the First National press sheet offers reproductions of an unusual line of lithographs, cuts, mats, advertising copy, etc., including special billing one-sheets, two styles one-sheets, two styles three-sheets, one six-sheet, one twenty-four-sheet set of two eight sepia lobby photographs, set of eight 11x14 colored lobby photographs, set of two eight colored lobby photographs, music cue sheet, two-color printed herald, two-color window card, three design glass slides, one celluloid slide, set of press stills, etc. of star stills.

Preceding this exploitation on the part of the exhibitor, a national newspaper publicity campaign is being conducted by First National in collaboration with the Neilan staff.

A big picture of today is not always a big picture tomorrow, but in the case of "The Miracle Man" there is every reason to believe that it will be one of the big pictures of all time. It is well, therefore, that exhibitors read their account of its return engagement at one theatre, as return engagements properly conducted are big money events.

Issiah Codney, who for years has lived on a small houseboat on the Mississippi River, and earns his living by various means, appeared on the levee and announced himself as a divine healer.

His sermons attracted attention and an enterprising reporter played him up in New Orleans newspapers as "The Miracle Man."

The Saenger Amusement Company deemed the opportunity too good to miss. They arranged their booking schedule hastily to accommodate the occasion and booked the picture of that name for the psychologically correct dates.

The picture had been widely exploited and played for a lengthy engagement in November, 1919. It was returned for a four-day run. It is reported that every day saw turnaway business. The moral is too obvious to be drawn.

A genuine "miracle man" aided the Saengers in exploiting a return engagement of George Loane Tucker's masterpiece.
With the Procession in Los Angeles

By Harry Hammond Beall

HELEN FERGUSON, leading woman in "Burning Daylight," the first of a series of Jack London stories to be filmed by Metro for C. E. Shurtleff, Inc., has been signed to appear in "The Mutiny."

ELIOT J. CLAWSON, who wrote many of the Universal screen stories, has been engaged by Metro and will do as his initial script "The Game," a play by Willard Robertson and Kilbourn Gordon.

Metro advises that MARCUS LOEW has appropriated $250,000 for improvements at the West Coast studio. Chief among these will be, it is said, a new enclosed stage of steel and glass. * * *

The Goldwyn studio at Culver City is getting to be the Greenwich Village of Los Angeles. MAURICE MAETERLINCK, RUPERT HUGHES, GOVERNOR MORRIS and BASS KING are among the authors who have been at the studio recently in connection with the filming of stories from their pens. * * *

FLORENCE TURNER, who supported SESSUE HAYAKAWA in "The Brand of Lopez," is to be starred by G. B. Samuelson, the British film producer, upon his return to Los Angeles in the fall, according to film colony rumor. Miss Turner starred in a Samuelson picture before the producer set sail for his London studios. * * *

W. K. HOWARD, widely known as a film salesman and more lately executive assistant to TARRINGTON BAKER during the latter's regime at Universal City, was acting as manager of the "Big U" pending the appointment of the new general manager. * * *

With a capitalization of $200,000 articles of incorporation have been granted to the Marion H. Kohn Productions, Inc. The officers of the newly formed organization are Marion H. Kohn, president; D. J. Chatkin, vice-president; J. D. Letterman, secretary, and George A. Oppenheimer, treasurer. The Kohn firm is making short subjects exclusively, starring Grace Cunard, Polly Moran, "Smiling Bill" Jones and featuring "The Illiterate Digest" by Will Rogers.

The biggest set ever erected on a stage is said to be the cathedral interior erected at the Goldwyn studios for "Earthbound." It is 240 feet in length and ninety feet wide. The crucifix is seventeen feet high.

SESSUE HAYAKAWA wished he was ANNETTE KELLERMANN when he failed to regard the "All-Aboard" shouted at the ship upon which TSAYU AOKI, his wife, was sailing for Japan. The star was forced to ride out through San Francisco harbor to the Golden Gate and there transferred to a bouncing pilot boat that conveyed him back to land. * * *

According to an announcement by JESSE L. LASKY, first vice-president of the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, CONRAD NAGLE has been engaged on a long term contract to play leads in Paramount Artcraft pictures produced at the Lasky studio. * * *

RHEA (Ginger) MITCHELL has been engaged for the lead in the first special production to be made by the new Screen Crafts Corporation which has purchased the old Essanay studio at Culver City. Chadwick Ayers will direct. * * *

HOP ONION is supervising the production of three serial companies and three two-reel western producing units at Universal City. The job of supervising director of serial, western and short-reel subjects at Universal City is the biggest job ever held down by a woman in the motion picture industry. * * *

PHILIP ROSEN, president of the American Society of Cinematographers, is being complimented on the success of his first picture, "The Road to Divorce," a Universal, starring Mary MacLaren. Before he was made a director Rosen photographed many big productions among them, "The Miracle Man." * * *

HENRY MCRAE has returned to Universal City with the serial company sent to Japan by Carl Laemmle to film "The Petals of Lao Tze," a serial which will probably be issued as "The Dragon's Net." Marie Walcamp, Harland Tucker and Otto Ledderman are among the players who returned to the world's film capital where the concluding episodes of the serial will be filmed.

"Homespun Folks" Will Go Through Paramount

"Homespun Folks," the new Thomas H. Ince special presenting Lloyd Hughes, recent Ince discovery, as the leading masculine player of an all-star cast, will be distributed by Famous Players-Lasky Corporation, through Paramount Artcraft exchanges, it has been announced by Thomas H. Ince.

Since the first bulletin on the filming of "Homespun Folks," announced previously under the working title of "Wheelbarrow Webster," the Ince studios on the West Coast have been the target for many inquiries from large and small exhibitors requesting definite information on the source of distribution. With arrangements now complete and prints of the picture soon to go forward to Paramount Artcraft branches in all territories, it also is announced that the Thomas H. Ince Promotion Headquarterc in Culver City, Cal., will launch a special exploitation campaign designed to familiarize the public with the big theme of the special and the personnel of the cast which enacts it.

Bobby Vernon Renews Contract With Christie

Bobby Vernon has renewed his contract with Christie Film Company. The popularity of Christie comedies featuring Vernon has long been attested by exhibitors of the country. His latest successful feature comedy is "Petticoats and Pants," which was made recently under the direction of William Beaudine. He now is engaged in production being filmed by Al Christie, which has a special cast including Charlotte Merriam, Teddy Sampson, Neal Burns and Vera Steadman. This comedy, which is a two-reel farce written by W. Scott Darling, probably will be published in June.

Fine Arts Replaces Foundation Film Co.
Garsson Continues at Head of Firm With Schwerin as Sales Manager

Fine Arts Pictures, Inc., has been formed to succeed the Foundation Film Company, 1600 Broadway, New York. Murray W. Garsson, who was president and general manager of Foundation, will continue as president and general manager of the new company. Charles Schwerin will be secretary, treasurer and sales manager.

Eight five-part pictures a year are to be made by Fine Art. The chief feature will be a contest picture. It will be a sequel to the two-reel beauty contest picture, "A Dream of Fair Women," now being distributed by Garsson and Schwerin in state rights territory.

The sales policy will include the selling of negatives at cost and a share of the gross receipts. Thus, it is said, the exhibitor will be a coproducer with Fine Arts Pictures.

Both Schwerin and Garsson are sanguine over the prospects of their new venture.

Novograph Establishes New Executive Offices

The Novograph Film Corporation, producers of the "Analysis of Motion" pictures which appear weekly in the Pathé Review, has leased space for executive and conferences offices at 25 West 45th St., New York, and will take possession May 1.

In connection with this announcement the information is offered that Charles Watson, president and general manager, has perfected a new camera which is expected to revolutionize the use of motion pictures in scientific research.

Denver Theatre Gets First National Rights

Tabor Joins Ranks of First Run Houses—"River's End" First on Program

DENVER, COLO.—The Tabor theatre has become a first-run house by contracting with First National Exhibitors' Circuit for virtually the exclusive rights to its attractions. Marshall Neilan's "The River's End" was given a week's showing at the Tabor in inaugurating its First National program.

In a formal announcement in the Denver newspapers, Thomas G. Vick Roy, manager of the Tabor, explained the change in the policy of the house as follows:

Vaudeville Discontinued

"The Vick Roy Amusement & Investment Company, lessee of the Tabor theatre, wishes to announce a change in the policy of the Tabor theatre beginning April 10. Vaudeville will be discontinued and many alterations will be made to enhance its attractions and comfort.

"Saturday, April 10, the Tabor will open its doors as Denver's foremost shrine of the silent art and motion pictures, discontinuing vaudeville. Contracts have been entered into between ourselves and the First National Exhibitors' Circuit by which we will stage the first runs of the famous First National releases, the first of which will be the most talked-of picture of the year, 'The River's End,' produced by Marshall Neilan from James Oliver Curwood's famous story. The star in this picture is Lewis S. Stone, who will be remembered as a popular leading man at Elitch's Gardens when it was in its height of popularity.

Star Pictures to Appear

"Many of the leading motion picture stars will appear on our screen, including Norma and Constance Talmadge. Charles Ray, Anita Stewart, Katherine MacDonald and many others, as well as several of the Griffith and Marshall Neilan productions."

"No effort will be spared to give the Denver public motion pictures of the highest quality to merit and gain its confidence in the Tabor, the new home of the First National pictures."

The William Fox Rivoli theatre, which has been playing most of the First National issues in Denver, will continue to present features already contracted for, such as three of the Charles Ray pictures and several of the Norma Talmadge features. The America theatre likewise will present several Constance Talmadge and Mildred Harris Chaplin pictures.
Pathos and Comedy are Delightfully Blended in these two Productions

Below is a Scene from "'Opo' My Thumb" renamed for screen purposes "The Duchess of Suds"

Blossey, Abigail, Mrs. Homans, Granny and Nancy all take a personal and motherly interest in "Captain Abe." A scene from "Old Lady 31," the Loew-Metro production of Rachel Crothers' successful stage play.

You'd never guess the above is Mary Pickford, would you? But it is. She's a little cockney laundry drudge in "The Duchess of Suds," her next United Artists Corporation production, and her name's Amanda Afflick. Some make-up, eh?
PRESENTABILITY, the quality that makes a production especially desirable because of the manner in which it may be presented to the public in the theatre, is today regarded as one of the big forces governing picture selection.

Dramatic merit, the purely entertainment value of a picture, still is and will always remain the primary consideration. It would be ridiculous to assume that the picture which is weak in entertainment but strong in presentation possibilities can be "put over" regardless of its shortcomings.

With the market plentifully supplied with high class attractions, so plentifully supplied that no theatre can possibly accommodate all of them without resort to the double feature policy, the picture without presentation and exploitation advantages is doomed.

Producers have given evidence that this situation has not escaped them by producing more and more pictures of this nature. Exhibitors who have at heart the best interests of the theatre as an institution will encourage producers by buying the presentable attraction and the result will be a general improvement in the screen form of drama.

"OLD LADY 31" (Loew-Metro) should win wide favor. It is a distinct novelty and decidedly meritorious. Emma Dunn achieves a real triumph in the leading role and the support is in every instance excellent. There is a rare chance that in some theatres it will fall short of expectations because of too fine composition, but proper presentation should overcome such a situation.

"DON'T EVER MARRY" (First National) has the elements that make for popular success. Marshall Neilan's second contribution to the First National schedule fulfills expectations built up by "The River's End." It is out-and-out comedy for the most part, and the type of comedy that has been demonstrated as in demand.

"HER FIVE FOOT HIGHNESS" (Universal) offers little for the advertising man but will satisfy the not too critical as average western drama. Edith Roberts appears to advantage but finds not a great deal to occupy her time upon the screen. It is well made but rather mechanical and not always convincing.

"THE BUTTERFLY MAN" (Robertson-Cole) was produced with care and at great expense to suit the taste to which Lew Cody's excellent "lounge lizard" portrayal appeals. Several prominent names appear in the cast and the play has great presentation advantages. It should please patrons of the type that read, say, Snappy Stories.

"MRS. TEMPLE'S TELEGRAM" (Paramount) an adapted stage farce, with Bryant Washburn in the leading role, assisted by pretty Wanda Hawley and Carmen Phillips, is one of the best things Mr. Washburn has done in months and should equal if not surpass in popularity his famous "Skinner" series.

"THE SHADOW OF ROSALIE BYRNE" (Select) is a production presenting Elaine Hammerstein, who is gaining in popularity because of her intelligent portrayals in recent vehicles, in a dual role. The two characters are handled very capably by the star, who is assisted by competent players. The story adapted is not as strong in dramatic incidents as Miss Hammerstein's previous picture.

"WOULD YOU FORGIVE?" (Fox) revolves in interesting manner around the question of whether a woman should forgive the misdeeds of her husband when he is hesitant in forgetting former love affairs of his wife. It is the initial starring vehicle for Vivian Rich under the Fox banner.

"KING SPRUCE" (Hodkinson) is an absorbing adaptation of Holman Day's dramatic story of the Maine forests. Although Mitchell Lewis is advertised as the star of the production, the cast has been so well chosen as to merit all-star classification. Some very vivid scenes add to the general beauty of the picture, the photography being exceptionally good throughout.

"THE THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER" (American) is a screen version of Albert Payson Terhune's short story which was published in a national magazine under the same title. Particular interest, perhaps, will center in the fact that King Baggot plays in support of Margarita Fisher. His host of friends should welcome his appearance.

"CAPTAIN SWIFT" (Vitagraph) is a good Earle Williams vehicle, although lacking to some extent in dramatic incidents. The production, however, should please the majority. Exterior locations and interior sets have been well chosen, with the photography capably handled.
Elaine Hammerstein in THE SHADOW OF ROSALIE BY RNES
Five-part drama; Select.
Directed by George Archainbald.
Published in April.

Discernment and diversification in treatment of the characters interpreted in a dual role removes the irksomeness caused by a lack of contrast occasioned in many of the attempts at such portrayal and makes the picture the more interesting by reason of the curiosity aroused and sustained. Because Elaine Hammerstein has discriminated in her mannerisms, in her choice of retirement and in her characterization, as a whole this version of Grace Sartwell Mason's story makes for diversion of a pleasing nature.

While the artistic value of a production alone will not place it in the successful class, this factor must be present, and Selznick pictures usually are provided with the necessary locations, good photography and finished work in the titles and subtitles. The star's ability, as displayed in "The Woman Game," was praised generally by exhibitors and the public in 1928, but whether it vehicle her historic talents, by reason of the dual role and the nature of the characters, cover a wider scope and show her capability in diversified depictions. Miss Hammerstein also possesses pictorial qualities that will carry her appeal to an audience.

This picture may not be considered as strong in general theme as "The Woman Game," but there is little doubt that audiences will consider it entertaining, and it is almost certain that these same audiences will leave a theatre with praise for the star's work.

A competent Selznick cast supports Miss Hammerstein and includes Edward Langford as leading man, Anita Booth, Alfred Hickman, Fanny Cogan, George Cowle, Lillian Wiggins and Juliette Benson.

In every hamlet and city there are those who have ambitions to become sceneadroppers. Capitalize this existing condition in the exploitation by offering a prize to the person submitting a scenario of the novel which follows most closely the lines of the finished production. It should be a simple matter to get co-operation on the part of a book store for such a suggestion should lead to the ready sale of Grace Sartwell Mason's novel of the same title.

SYNOPSIS: Leontine Madderna is a former chorus girl, mercenary and unscrupulous, while Leona, lovable, sweet and charming, assumes the name of Rosalie Byrnes because of the scandal in which her sister has figured. Rosalie, a concert singer, devotes herself to singing at a cantonment during the early days of the war. She marries Gerald Cromwell before he leaves for France. Cromwell's sister and her fiancé, Hugo Stone, scheme to annul the marriage and have Gerald marry a girl of wealth.

Edith Roberts in
HER FIVE FOOT HIGNESS
Five-part comedy-drama; Universal. Directed by Harry Franklin.

OPINION: Where it is the custom to exploit spectaculously three or four pictures each month, interspersing these dates with what are termed "ordinary attractions," "Her Five-Foot Higness" will be found satisfactory. It is not a big picture, nor a picture that can be made to serve a long run at any but drop-in houses, yet it has qualities that warrant its exhibition.

The story is one that has been used with variations periodically since the beginning of five-reel dramas. The Western girl, orphan, owner of a ranch and heir to an English estate, plotted against as villainous is the villainous lawyer, finally rescued from financial destruction by the gallant though ignorant cowboy, is almost a classic figure in American screen drama.

In the current version Edith Roberts appears to good advantage, members of the Universal stock company giving uniform support.

The settings are not elaborate but serve their purpose. There is sufficient action though it is never spirited, and not all of it throws its shadow too plainly before.

If there is still a demand for the traditional "program picture," the production satisfies that demand.

SYNOPSIS: Ellen Wilsonte, orphan, owner of a Texas ranch, entrusts her business affairs to Wesley Saunders, a lawyer, who seeks to obtain her property at a low figure and sell it to a railroad. When she learns that she is heir to an English title and estate, Saunders refuses to legally identify her and she goes to England alone. Here she is accepted by the family, but Saunders arrives and introduces a chorus girl as the real heiress. She returns to her ranch, followed by the others. Here Sir Gerald Knowlton, who believes her story, seeks to win her love, but with the foiling of the villainous lawyer she decides to marry the cowboy who has been her friend through all.

Snub Pollard in DON'T WEAKEN
Two-part comedy; Pathé.

OPINION: When Snub Pollard and little Sambo get together, you have a ludicrous team whose ridiculous antics will bring tears and laughter in response. It is a good, clean comedy subject, with noticeable lack of offensive incidents.

Accompanied by the latest jazz music, the picture will put gloom to rout and in that sense it is more than a filler for a program. Pollard will be compelled to "step on it" if he is desirous of registering as many laughs as his teammate, Sambo, for the little fellow may be young in years, but he has the necessary talent to win an audience.

Elaine Hammerstein in one of the closing scenes from "The Shadow of Rosalie Byrnes" (Selznick Pictures)
Corinne Griffith in
THE GARTER GIRL.
Five-part drama; Vitagraph.
Directed by Edward H. Griffith.
Published in May.

OPINION: Ordinarily, when a scenario writer has a stage girl refuer her vaudeville partner's proposal of marriage and fall in love with a handsome young clergyman, he has the heroine marry the minister. But in "The Garter Girl" the heroine is lifelike and in the end decides that her teammate in vaudeville shall be her teammate in matrimony.

It's different. Every tradition as to "how to write a scenario" is thrown into the discard. After running along in the familiar channels for 3,000 feet, it starts to turn just the way no one suspects it will. There is one surprise after another.

There will be few people who see "The Garter Girl" that will not talk about it. It is the type of picture which should increase attendance every day during its run. It is guaranteed the cheapest and most effective exploitation pictures can be given—word of mouth advertising.

Vitagraph has made several splendid productions with Corinne Griffith, but her latest offering sets a new standard for her series. She is given everything a star could ask, a capable cast, intelligently chosen settings and exteriors, and careful editing of the completed motion picture. Her interpretation of the title role more than warrants the lavish expenditure.

SYNOPSIS: Rosalie Lee, vaudeville dancer, features her act by swinging out over the audience and dropping a garter for which the men eagerly scramble. The daringness of her attire and act make her the target for the unwelcome advances of "stage door Johnnies" and actors, including her own partner. As Time, of the life, she goes into the country to seek a "real man." She falls in love with a young minister, who wins her by his gentle ways. Bart, her former partner, finds her but learning the situation keeps her secret and wishes her luck. She knows her minister has a "secret love affair"—has admired a woman from afar and has a prized memento of her. His idealism adds to his attractiveness. Through the offices of prying landlady, she learns that the "prized memento" is one of the garters she has tossed from the stage, and that the minister has loved Rosalie, the actress. The discovery shatters her ideal and she hastens back to the city to marry Bart.

Margaret Fisher in THIRTIETH PIECE OF SILVER.
Five-part comedy-drama; American.
Directed by George L. Cox.
Published in May.

OPINION: Persons who have read Albert Payson Terhune's stories, and which are legion, have learned to expect very well-written interesting plays interspersed with incidents of a jocose nature.
The short story adapted in this case and which was published in a national magaazine not long ago, provoked much laughter. Slight changes have been made in the screen version, but Terhune's principal theme is retained and rather pleasing diversion will be found in the adaptation.

One fact alone probably would create a desire to see this picture, the pres-cence of King Baggott, who gives excellent support to Margarita Fisher. Although Baggott has played in but few pictures of late, his work, as well as his personality, still are gratifying and should be effective in a screening of the subject.

Terhune took as the foundation for his story the possession by a coin collector of the thirtieth piece of silver which has survived the centuries since Judas betrayed Christ. Devotion to his avoca-don presents a precarious situation in his home life, for he becomes very neglectful of his wife. Loss of the valuable coin and the resultant effect upon his attitude toward his wife give humorous touches to the picture.

Lillian Leighton and Forrest Stanley are good in their portrayals. Exhibitors should impress upon their clientele that the picture is an adaptation of a Terhune story and that King Baggott is one of the principals in the cast. If possible, it would be advantageous to obtain a colcollection of old coins and display them in the lobby. One novel exploitation scheme might be to give tickets to the persons who present at the box office two or three days prior to the showing of the oldest coins. A coin collector could give many other ideas for advertising the piece.

SYNOPSIS: Tyler Cole, a well-known coin collector and possessor of the thirtieth piece of silver, is so absorbed in his vocation that he becomes neglectful of his wife. He also is overly jovial and does not concern himself with the presence in their home at intervals of a former sweetheart. During the father's visit, Mr. Tyler brings his wife hold on one occasion, Mrs. Tyler removes from a cabinet the valuable piece of silver contrary to her husband's warning. As the silver piece is lost, a series of conflicting developments follow when it is revealed that the piece was a fake, the sweetheart is found and Tyler promises to forget his hobby and honor, love and obey his wife forever after.

Bryant Washburn in
MRS. TEMPLE'S TELEGRAM.
Five-part comedy; Paramount Artcraft.
Directed by James Cruze.
Published May 9.

OPINION: Nothing that Bryant
Washburn has done since his "Skinner" stories, his first real hit, has quite equaled "Mrs. Temple's Telegram." The adapted stage farce which first appeared on Broadway in 1905, with Tom Wise in the leading role, provides the Paramount star with material particularly well suited to his style of acting, and Washburn makes the most of the far-fetches through highly ludicrous situations.

Aside from the able direction of James Cruze the story swings along at a lively pace. The Wyatt-Morris farce was adapted to the screen by Elmer Harris, who is responsible for several other succesful scenarios, viz.—"Why Smith Left Home," "It Pays to Advertise," "The Six Best Cellars," and "Hunter's Moon of U. S. A." The subplots, many of them borrowed from the stage version, are brinful of the wittiest sayings, which, compared with the usual trifles, give the pictures of which the play abounds, make it one of the best things offered along this line for many years.

Aside from the notable cast, which includes Wanda Hawley, Carmen Phillips, Walter Hiers, Sylvia Ashton, Leo White and Edward Wilson, "Mrs. Temple's Telegram" offers splendid opportunities for exploitation in the way of unusual lobby displays and by the use of telegram box office attractions "Mrs. Temple's Teellegram" ought to bring home the bacon for every live-wire exhibitor who runs it.

SYNOPSIS: Jack Temple adores his wife, but she is extremely jealous and he is accused of flirting with a pretty woman in a department store. The woman in question follows Jack through the store after his wife's description of him to the roof of the artfulling, where he tries to hide. They are locked out by the night watchman and have to remain on the roof all night.
Jack realizes his wife will never believe his story, so he invents another yarn about visiting a friend, John Brown, in this situation. Mrs. Temple's reactions he is not telling the truth and sends a telegram to Brown, while Jack performs a fictional character to impersonate Brown and come to his home. The telegram reaches the home of Brown, he goes to the Temple home and, as things be-develop, Brown is revealed to be the real of Mrs. Brown, the pretty young woman who caused all the trouble, appears, introduces herself as Mrs. Temple's cousin, and all ends happily.
Marshall Neilan's
DON'T EVER MARRY
Six-part comedy; First National. Directed by Marshall Neilan. Published in April.

OPINION: Whatever it costs to be able to deliver to the film market a picture such as the Marshall Neilan special comedy, "Don't Ever Marry," it is obvious that this is the best of the current season. That no expense has been spared is plainly evident from the high-salaried cast to the smallest detail of equipment. It is doubtful that the result of this enormous cost will equal the promise of the year's best film, however. The question of whether a wife should forgive the misdeeds of her husband when, in turn, is unwilling to pardon and forget his wife's past is propounded in this story by Julius G. Furthman. Miss Rich's work will appeal to the sympathy, because of her earnest work and because of Tom Chatterton's good-tempered performance.

The adaptation has been handled well from all angles, the continuity and assembling carrying the train of thought consistently through the five parts: the sub-titles are not confusing; the direction has relieved a stilted atmosphere, and the photography is clear.

Besides Chatterton, Ben Deely and Lilie Leslie are effective in the supporting cast. It is a picture that should give satisfaction and make new friends for the star.

SYNOPSIS: Mrs. John Cleveland, victim of an overly-jealous husband, adopts a child but, fearing to bring it into her own household, furnishes another home for it, and places the little girl in charge of a nurse. Paul Horton, ex-convict and former sweetheart of Mrs. Cleveland, returns to the city and finds that his former wife is the same woman who is caring for Mrs. Cleveland's child. Horton accuses her of leading a double life and demands money to keep the matter quiet. Her diamonds are given to him and he takes them. The husband, finding the rings gone, places detectives on the trail. Finding that Horton has pawned them he hunts him down, and Horton shows him a letter which proves that the child adopted by Mrs. Cleveland really belongs to her husband. Though the jealous husband had been unwilling to forgive, the loving wife grants forgiveness.

Earle Williams in CAPTAIN SWIFT
Five-part drama; Vitagraph. Directed by Tom Terris. Published in May.

OPINION: While the production is hampered somewhat by lack of dramatic incidents, it remains a good Earle Williams' production and will not disappoint his followers. The picture is made pleasing to the eye by good photography and settings.

One feature that should find approval is the retention of suspense throughout. At no time before the climax is there any indication of what the denouement will be. This fact partially overcomes the fault previously mentioned.

Romance and adventure play together well in the production with Williams' personality predominating in the action, which is carried from the Australian bush country to the atmosphere of royal England. The picture is an adaptation of the play by C. Haddson Chambers.

In the cast are such competent players as Florence Dixon, Edward Martindale, Adelaide Prince, Downing Clarke, Barry Baxter, Alice Calhoun, James O'Neill and Herbert Pattee.

To carry out the idea of the story in exploitation a tie-up with a daily newspaper and several stores probably will bring the best results. Have a picture of a masked man published in the press for several days before the picture opens. On each day announce that this man, to be known as Captain Swift, outlaw, will appear in person at various stores. The person capturing him should be given a cash prize and tickets to the theatre. To accomplishment the desired results the pseudo Captain Swift should not appear at any of the stores until the last day of the contest. This exploitation will increase business for the stores, the newspaper and the theatre.

SYNOPSIS: Captain Swift evades the police in the Australian bush country after robbing a bank. He eludes to England, where he is admitted to homes of royalty and where his identity is known only to a servant who is fooled by his attempt to blackmail the outlaw. The servant puts detectives on the trail, but the captain is saved from prison by a bandit whose life had been spared in Australia. This leaves the way open for the love match between Swift and Stella Darbishire.

Vivian Rich in WOULD YOU FORGIVE?
Five-part drama; Fox. Directed by Scott Dunlap. Published in April.

OPINION: As an initial starring vehicle for Vivian Rich under the Fox banner, "Would You Forgive?" makes a very satisfying subject and presents the new star in a role which gives opportunity to her versatility and capability in handling both the emotional and the more conventional characterizations.

Vivian Rich in a dramatic scene from "Would You Forgive?" (Fox)
Lew Cody in
THE BUTTERFLY MAN
Five-part drama; Gasnier.
Directed by Ida May Park.
Published by Robertson-Cole.

OPINION: "The Butterfly Man" is a not a picture to be hooked blindly. The exhibitor who, in fact, endorses every attraction he plays, should see the production and base his decision upon knowledge of his patrons' likes and dislikes. The appeal is not universal, though the production probably will score heavily in the type of theatre for which it is suited.

Despite the lavish settings and costly costumes which prevail throughout, notwithstanding the luxurious atmosphere created, the success or failure of the exhibition depends largely upon the impression afforded by the central character, a sort of glorified "lounge lizard," which Mr. Cody makes impressively realistic.

It is said that women are "crazy about" the screen Lew Cody. Perhaps, but there are many who believe to the contrary. To the masculine element of the audience the character is almost certain to be nauseating.

The story depicts the love life of a penniless hanger-on whose fascination for society maids and matrons is overpowering. This gives opportunity for the use of beautiful settings in which a large and exquisitely attired cast jails safely with semi-erotic incidents and situations. No substantial evil is pictured, but a great deal of it is dangled just beyond realization.

Many of the story shortcomings are atoned for by the introduction of a mother love theme that rings true and the working in of a fire scene that holds a genuine thrill. It is lamentable that the picture ends abruptly with the death of the mother.

Obviously intended for a "shocker," the production serves its purpose without depicting crime or obscenity. It can fill the vaudeville or eating rooms and the presentation possibilities are almost unlimited.

As entertainment it may be compared to Snappy Stories, Partridge, Breezy Stories and Lice Stories. It will please persons of the tastes of readers of those publications.

SYNOPSIS: Sedgewick Blynn, penurious society idol, lays siege to the heart of various society women, single and married, incurring the disgust of the male members, but succeeding in borrowing money extensively because of his well publicized love for his mother. When he rescues a child in a fire he wins the sympathy of the community. The next scene shows Blynn's love for his mother, and the death brings Blynn to a sorrowful realization of his mistakes.

Mitchell Lewis in KING SPRUCE
Six-part drama; Hodkinson.
Directed by Roy Clements.
Published in May.

OPINION: Holman Day's story of the Maine forests is told logically in the screen version, the power of the original being retained by the convincing portrayals accorded the numerous characters and by the chosen scenes of the wooded country which are presented. Despite the promipence given Mitchell Lewis in the cast, the work of other performers is so excellent that it easily could be termed an all-star picture.

The wooded country is the locale for a greater part of the action, and exceptions to this rule have been photographed, both in close-ups and in long shots. Of particular interest, perhaps, are the forest fire scenes, a touch of realism prevailing in the whole.

Attention must be given to the direction accomplishments as plausible results have been gained in adapting a story which develops along several angles. The sub-titles are sufficiently clear to carry the action smoothly.

In pictorial, biographical and story values, "King Spruce" should appeal to many a theatre audience for, while there are those who are content only with the society drama, there undoubtedly are others in the majority who desire relief and are more than satisfied with a virile and human production.

Such players as Mignon Anderson, Melbourne MacDowell, Arthur Milliette, Joe Ray, James O'Neill, Betty Wale, Gus Suolle and Frederic Herzog will attract interest in their work. In exploiting the picture a book store tie-up should serve its purpose well, for Holman Day's red-blooded stories have been and are being widely read. Theatre giving atmospheric presentations a forest fire effect could be worked out to an advantage.

SYNOPSIS: Dwight Wade, a school teacher who is in love with Elva Barrett, daughter of a lumber king, John Barrett, succeeds in winning the latter's affection and enrolls in the Maine lumber camps. Barrett objects to the amorous relations between his daughter and Wade and has McLeod, his former employee, go to Wade's home to accompany them North. In the Maine forests, Wade saves Barrett's life and proves himself to be the sort of man whose past life is a secret, after she has fired the trees. It is found that Kate is the illegitimate child of Barrett who is forced to care for the girl. Elva seeing that Wade has schemed against her father, goes to him to find the truth. He tells his story, is given an interest in Barrett's concern and Kate is taken to live with the Barretts.

Harold Lloyd in AN EASTERN W ESTERNER
Two-part comedy; Pathe.
Directed by Hal Roach.
Published in May.

OPINION: Harold Lloyd, whose "four eyes" and funny face are always conducive to laughter, may not be an expert horseman, a skilled gunman, or an adept lariat thrower. No is his general makeup at all suggestive of Western atmosphere. However, the predicaments, allusions, and other difficulties that surround him and his inimitable style in handling the diverse and variable situations make a comedy which exhibitors may depend upon to lend color to their programs.

Lloyd portrays the character of a son of wealth whose courting antagonizes the head of the household, with the result that he is shipped West to be concealed from the "simple life." The Pierced version is humorous in the extreme, with the jocular situations offered in wholesale lots.

Sennett Players in FRESH FROM THE CITY
Two-part comedy; Paramount-Sennett.
Published in April.

OPINION: Snappy action involving novel incidents is the best of slapstick comedy. These are ingredients of the latest Sennett product, a two-reeler subject that provides stimulating relief to any program.

Though some of the Sennett stock devices are used, the majority of the events are fresh and consequently effective.

By inverting the "rule" plot, as indicated in the title, a novel if not unprecedented twist has been effected. The "city feller" improvises an oil well to windle the farmer whose improvised oil well has already been sold to him and thereby hangs the tale. It is an interesting one and affords the Sennett comedians many excellent opportunities.

Sunshine Players in GREAT NICKEL ROBBERY
Two-part comedy; Fox. Supervised by Hampton Del Ruth.
Published in May.

OPINION: In large cities, where the street car service is a point of never-ending discussion, this Sunshine comedy should provide a great laugh getter, and in the smaller towns where tracks have not yet been laid, the audience will be compelled to laugh just because it is a good comedy subject.

The bevy of Sunshine bathing girls are there in abbreviated styles, the educated monk performer, and a good burlesque cast puts spice into the screen activities. It is an ample program accessory in every sense of the word, and is guaranteed to change the facial expressions of the most stoic.

Volplaning Around N'Yawk

With J. B.

Refrain from old song (new version)

"Everybody's Brewing It Now."

The Hon. Thomas Bedell has resigned from the publicity department of the Desdemona Oil Company and is about to reembark on the troubled waters of the cinema, without oil.

Vivian Moses, general manager of the Guy Empey Pictures Corporation, is about to join the Cheese Club as an active "Blue Jean" member. However, we noticed that Vivian is side-stepping the overall parade Saturday.

Frank J. Bates has again signed up with Wray Physioc to act as his assistant director.

Herman J. Galefield, state rights buyer of Cleveland, is in town.

Despite the rumor to the contrary, Charles Gilbys, who recently completed "The Tiger's Club," a Fox production starring Pearl White, will make a second picture at the new 56th Street studio immediately upon his return from Atlantic City, where he has been spending a few days' vacation.

The marriage bee it seems stung several prominent members of the M. P. D. A. on April 26. Travis Nails took unto himself a wife, the ceremony being performed in a private room at the Hotel Biltmore while the M. P. D. A. ball was in progress. Upon the same night Paul Scardon, three thousand miles away, placed upon the finger of Betty Blythe a wedding ring which now identifies a popular motion picture actress as the wife of a well-known director.

Confined to his apartment in the Hotel Algonquin, Robert G. Vignola is obliged to set aside his directorial activities to "take his medicine. While Mr. Vignola's condition is reported as "not serious," yet a trained nurse in attendance indicates that he will not return to the International studio until he obtains a "discharge" from the doctor.

Upon the completion of their latest picture starring Alice Joyce, Vitagraph will start George L. Sargent on a second offering with their beautiful star. Evidently Mr. Sargent's work met every expectation of the producers, since negotiations were made for the second feature to be directed by him before the first was complete.

George Irving, after spending four months in California, has returned to New York and will direct another picture for Lawrence Weber, pending his passage to Europe, where he was scheduled for picture direction early in April. Food conditions as well as passport necessities are the reasons for Irving's lingering longer.

At the meeting of the Motion Picture Producers' Association, April 26, the presidential chair was occupied by George Brackett Seitz. It was about the only kind of chair Mr. Seitz has not previously played, he said, and gave him an idea for a serial which he went home and wrote before morning. After the routine business was transacted a projection machine was uncovered and one reel and a half of film, taken during the recent M. P. D. A. festivities at the Biltmore, was shown. While the shots were unassembled they were decidedly interesting and some of the closeups of well-known film folk showed them indulging in a good time. The entertainers, among whom were Thalia Zanou, the Greek dancer, and Evelyn Law, the youngster who seems to have no bones, showed to great advantage. The long shots of the dancers in action are not only beautiful, but, as one member remarked, "That's the best looking lot of extras I ever saw on a floor."

George Carpentier appeared in the ring for the first time since his arrival in this country at the Solax Studio, Fort Lee, N. J., on April 26, the occasion being the boxing scene which John Adolfi directed for the forthcoming Carpentier special.

Harry Poppe has resigned his post as advertising and publicity director of the A. H. Fischer Company, New Rochelle, N. Y. Mr. Poppe intends to devote his entire time to the writing of stories and scenarios at which he is a specialist.

The Eastern studio employs of Famous Players-Lasky Corporation held their grand ball and pageant at the Hotel Commodore Wednesday evening, April 28. The object of the ball was to raise funds to start an employees' beneficial association, which will be organized with the opening of the new studios on Long Island.

The Overall Parade on April 24 made a great hit as it passed through the Times Square section. The Cheese Club division was lead by Tom Olyphant. Harry Schader had his hands full, as he was elected to chaperon an untamed "Zukum," or spinach hound, which was imported for the parade. The hound often mistook the overalls for native fodder and at 42nd street the "Zukum" bit a big slice out of the blue jeans of a young lady.

B. A. Rolfe Declares

"Madonnas And Men"

Is His Finest Picture

B. A. Rolfe, who has personally supervised "Madonnas and Men" for Jans Pictures, Inc., declares that the production will be the finest that he ever has directed. The final scenes are being made and it is said that they contain some elaborate and unusual sets.

As soon as these final scenes have been completed the picture will be assembled and shown privately to the officials of the Jans organization. It is said that the feature will be decidedly out of the ordinary and is based on a dramatic story of ancient and modern times.

A specially selected cast was chosen. Some of the big scenes were taken in the "Palais Royal," one of Broadway's famous cabaret resorts and in which the chorus of the review now being shown there are seen in several of their dance creations.

Mr. S. Snowden Cassard, Sales Manager,
Nicholas Power Company,
#90 Gold St.,
New York City, N.Y.

Dear Sir:-

In reply to your inquiry as to the results we are receiving from your Powers Projecting Machines, will say that it is with pleasure we are able to report that same have been giving us perfect satisfaction.

We are using two of your machines for projecting our release prints and on each of these machines we are projecting in the neighborhood of thirty thousand feet of film per day. This amount of footage is in considerable excess to that which a machine would be subject to under ordinary conditions and, taking into consideration the rate of speed which we are obliged to run these machines in order to put through the required number of release prints per day, and also the perfect condition in which these machines are now in - after being in service for two years - demonstrates to us the perfection in the manufacture of these machines.

We must have perfect projection for our releases and have found, by experience, that the Nicholas Power Machines fulfill our needs to the fullest extent.

95% of the machines used by the studios and laboratories in Los Angeles and vicinity are Power’s.

Yours very truly,

First National

Don't Ever Marry, with a special cast.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge.—Here's one star that always delivers.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.—College town patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Very good, but no better than her Select program.—A. W. Jackson, Liberty theatre, Atlanta, Texas.—Small town patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Best Constance Talmadge picture we have ever seen. She is great. Had the audience laughing from start to finish.—Fred Paulick, Paulick theatre, Muscoda, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bill Apperson's Boy, with Jack Pickford.—A picture that is up to the high standard of First National pictures. Fine natural settings, types and acting. Jack is there.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

A Virtuous Vamp, with Constance Talmadge.—Book it and suffer the consequences, which is success. The best picture I have run in a long time. It knocked them off their feet. It's great.—E. R. McMullen, A-Muse-U theatre, Las Cruces, N. M.—General patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—Here's a regular clean-up picture. Drew big and sure does please.—Chancellor Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Daddy Long Legs, with Mary Pickford.—Wonderful show. Book it by all means. Please everybody that I know of but one person.—Osceola Tatro, Lyric theatre, Rugby, N. D.—Small town patronage.

Heart o' the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—First class in every respect and pleased all patrons.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Arizona.—General patronage.

A Midnight Romance, with Anita Stewart.—A different story from the commonplace. Enjoyed by all. Will satisfy any audience.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera house, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A very, very good bet.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Day's Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—Cannot see why everyone knocked this so. All the automobile stuff is very good and realistic. Went well for me, and they enjoyed it, which is the main point.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Alameda, Cal.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Beauty Market, with Katherine MacDonald.—Attractive title and pleasing subject. Katherine looks as beautiful as ever. A good picture to play boys, if you have not.—Fred Cook, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

A Day's Pleasure, with Charlie Chaplin.—Did big business, but afraid it did not please all.—J. M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Ranger, Texas.—General patronage.

A Daughter of Two Worlds, with Norma Talmadge.—Wonderful. Big business and this star has no equal. Will say close-ups had very poor photography.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Heart o' the Hills, with Mary Pickford.—First class in every respect and pleased all patrons.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Arizona.—General patronage.

A Midnight Romance, with Anita Stewart.—A different story from the commonplace. Enjoyed by all. Will satisfy any audience.—C. T. Metcalfe, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

A Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—A good picture, but not in a class with A Virtuous Vamp and In Search of a Sinner.—Polk E. Moore, Portland Theatre Co., Portland, Tenn.—Small town patronage.

The Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—His gone over big for us. Connie has a big following at our house. This not quite as good as A Virtuous Vamp. A good bet for any theatre.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Back to God's Country, with Nell Shipman.—Good business four days. Pleased young and old.—Jos. Winninger, Appleton theatre, Appleton, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Twilight Baby, with a special cast—The picture pulled big.—Alman & Trion, Cozy theatre, Goose Creek, Texas.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Old Kentucky, with Anita Stewart.—Excellent picture. Everyone was pleased.—E. W. Heal, Storyville theatre, Superior, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Temperamental Wife, with Constance Talmadge.—Have seen Constance in better pictures. Yes, I've seen her do better work. They miss Harrison Ford in her pictures, but please because it's Constance.—Joseph F. Allman, Globe theatre, Monticello, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Fox

The Mother of His Children, with Gladys Brockwell.—A real picture in every respect. Entertaining throughout. Please all.—E. G. Bailey, Crystal theatre, Wayne, Neb.—General patronage.

Vagabond Luck, with Albert Ray and Elinor Fair.—An exceptionally good race track story. Sure to please.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Feud, with Tom Mix.—Some exhibitors have said The Feud was different from other Mix productions. It is, but it went over big with us. My patrons ate it up.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Manhattan Knight, with George Walsh.—Not a Walsh picture. Photography very bad. Patrons disappointed with this one. Can always do business on Walsh but this one fell flat.—A. R. Nelson, Paramount theatre, Kokomo, Ind.—Transient patronage.

Wings of the Morning, with William Farnum.—A fine picture and went over big as usual.—Peter Kruath, Denison theatre, Denison, Iowa.—Neighborhood patronage.

Shod with Fire, with William Russell.—Lacks the action that was prominent in other Russell pictures. Not nearly as good. Horse and dog are good. Rus-
National Film Corporation of America will star the two comedians in a series of twenty-six two-reelers. The titles of the first four are "The Road to Ruin," "His Wife's Husband," "In and Out," and "A Burglar's Paradise."

Others do. Just a fair house on this one. R. M. Parkhurst, Empire theatre, Harrisburg, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Evangeline, with Miriam Cooper.—A most beautiful picture and drew wide increased admission. Run with Roaring Lions on the Midnight Express, a crack-jack comedy by Fox. Would ad vise running a slapstick with Evangeline. —Chancellor Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arecum, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Her Elephant Man, with Shirley Mason.—Pretty good. Not enough circ-u-s for advertising.—Grand theatre, Chetek, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Shark, with George Walsh.—Good. Can't be beat. Everyone was satisfied with this. It was something different. All exhibitors should book this picture.—Altman & Trifon, Cozy theatre, Goose Creek, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lost Money, with Madalaine Traverse.—A little above the average program release.—Teufel & Fletcher, Isis theatre, Roseville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Rough Riding Romance, with Tom Mix.—Raised my price on this and cleaned up. Turned them away. S. R. O. before performance began.—Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

The Speed Maniac, with Tom Mix.—Some picture. If action is what you want, don't pass up this one. Mix is my best bet.—C. L. White, Arleta theatre, Portland, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sacred Silence, with William Russell.—Why do they make this kind of pictures? Nothing to it. Will hardly please any class of audience. Not one favor-able comment.—Van Buskirk & Swan-son, Alta theatre, Alta, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Tale of Two Cities and Les Mis-erable, with William Farnum.—Grab these, boys, if they are open in your city. They are clean-ups. Played Tale of Two Cities as school benefit to capacity business.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Last Straw, with Buck Jones.—A good picture. Buck hasn't much life to him, but will grow better. He is fine looking and our patrons like Western stuff.—Wm. Haight, Orpheum theatre, Livingston, Mont.—General patronage.

The Lincoln Highwayman, with William Roenigk.—Placed all. Something different, out of the ordinary run of pictures. Ran a Sunshine comedy with it. Comedy good. Good all round programs.—Wm. Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Chasing Rainbows, with Gladys Brockwell.—Just a good picture. Nothing to rave about.—Stephen Dziadzik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

The Love that Dares, with Madalaine Traverse.—Not a very strong subject. One of the worst things on this week.—H. R. Axline, Scope theatre, Wenona, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Goldwyn

Flame of the Desert, with Geraldine Farrar.—An elaborate production. The best we have seen Farrar in this season. Business, good.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera house, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jinx, with Mabel Normand.—A good picture to good business, but not as good as Roenigk's.—Wm. Krafth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Jinx, with Mabel Normand.—Couldn't face our patrons after showing this. Poorest Sunday attraction in a long time. Normand needs both a director and a story.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hell Cat, with Geraldine Farrar.—This picture with Sunnyside did a good business for me. Almond's pictures are very good.—R. M. Parkhurst, Empire theatre, Harrisburg, Ark.—Small town patronage.

High Pockets, with Louis Benson.—Benson satisfies our patrons, and we do good with him. This is a good pic-ture.—C. E. Metcalf, Opera House, Grand Island, Neb.—Small town patronage.

The Eternal Magdalene, with Maxine Elliott.—A good picture to play at usual prices. If you contemplate Sunday open-ings, well suited for.—J. Christen-son, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Brand, with a special cast.—A slow moving vehicle in seven reels. Did not draw.—J. J. Goldert, Opera House, Mapleton, la.—Small town patronage.

Duds, with Tom Moore.—Not up to Mabel Normand standard. Very hard to fol-low.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Little Shepherd of Kingdom Come, with James Cagney.—Another clean-up with this clever film play of John Fox, Jr.'s, widely read book. There's a come-back to this picture. Get it sure. By all means follow the music.
Hodkinson

Live Sparks, with J. W. Kerrigan.—A very good picture which pleased 100% of the people and drew good for the severe cold weather.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Sherridan, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Desert Gold, with E. K. Lincoln.—Broke house record, and pleased all.—J. M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Ranger, Tex.—General patronage.

The Westerners, with Roy Stewart.—You can go as strong as you like with this one. It will please most any audience.—W. B. Henderson, Dixie theatre, Ripley, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Woman of Pleasure, with Blanche Sweet.—Nothing extra. Fair program picture. It's in seven reels, but should be five. Too droggy.—Wm. Haight, Orpheum theatre, Livingston, Mont.—General patronage.

Metro

Stronger Than Death, with Nazimova.—One of the best of Nazimova's pictures. Good story and good acting. Every member of the cast is an actor and takes an actor's part. Beautiful settings, Grab this one.—J. M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Ranger, Tex.—General patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—May Allison is at her best in this picture. It is 100% picture that pleased everybody. They want me to bring more just like this one.—R. H. Stephens, Royal theatre, Sheridan, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Enough has been said before on this picture. Exhibitors only complaint today is he can't get enough like this one.—Joseph F. Allman, Globe theatre, Monticello, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out of the Fog, with Nazimova.—The best Nazimova picture we have played and everybody pleased.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Obiten, Kan.—Small town patronage.

The Walkoffs, with May Allison.—Good picture. Must hand it to Metro for its photography and tinting of night scenes. Acting and settings of the best.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Right of Way, with Bert Lytell.—A pleasing regular program picture well produced, but very much unlike the book.—Frank Cosman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Fine comedy-drama. Best I ever showed. A little silly but most people will like it. You can raise your admission on this one.—H. H. Peebles, Bijou theatre, Waverly, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage False Evidence, with Viola Dana.—Good, but not as good as most of Dana's pictures.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Stronger Than Death, with Nazimova.—Well up to her standard and drawing good.—W. H. Mart, Strand theatre, Grinnell, la.—College town patronage.

Pull of Pep, with Hale Hamilton.—Went over good. Audience well pleased.—Hardin Entr., Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Mo.—General patronage.

Alias Mrs. Jessop, with Emily Stevens.—Good program picture. Dual role handled well.—L. M. Kuhns, Gibson theatre, Gibson, N. M.—Mining camp patronage.

Fair and Warmer, with May Allison.—Very good comedy. Pleased majority at advanced prices.—W. A. Dutton, Plaza theatre, Manchester, la.—General patronage.

Johnny on the Spot, with Hale Hamilton.—Very good comedy-drama. One of Metro's best. Sent them out laughing.—Lang & Smith, Opera House, Cobb, Wis.—Transient patronage.

Revelation, with Nazimova.—Very good picture.—L. W. Heal, Sterling theatre, Superior, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pals First, with Harold Lockwood.—Here is a comedy-drama that is above the average and one that will boost your house.—Harold Daspit, Athenon theatre, Kentwood, la.—Mixed patronage.

Before and After

Sen. with Louise Glaum.—Did not run it yet but witnessed a pre-screening of it. It was so good that I want to tip you off to buy it. Run it some extra days. Lavish production with Louise playing some fine young.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, 2844 Madison St., Chicago.

"Sex," with Louise Glaum.—Best pull we have ever shown. Not only pulls but people say it is the best picture ever shown in Des Moines. Extended run to two weeks. Our competitors booked all the shows that go with similar titles that they could find and then we were compelled to extend our run.—B. I. Van Dyke, Royal theatre, Des Moines, Ia.

The Volcano, with Leah Baird.—This picture should have been good in war times. People don't care to see such stories any more that deal with Bolsheviks.—Chas. Blair, Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

Desert Gold, with a special cast.—Drew fairly well on account of advertising it as "Zena Grad's score. Nobody raised over it, and personally thought it wasn't much of a picture.—Chas. Blair, Morgan theatre, Nearest, Okla.—General patronage.
NEW YORK successes are not always national successes. The picture that thrills Broadway does not always set house records in Council Bluffs, Dallas, Mobile and Cheyenne.

EXHIBITORS find in this department showmen's reports from every section of the country, setting forth vital facts regarding the fitness of each production for your audience.

Paramount Artcraft

The Copperhead, with Lionel Barrymore—One will find fault with this picture. Story laid in Civil War days. Brings tears to the eyes. This picture needs strong advertising to put it over as a great many patrons cannot understand the title—Chas. H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, Chicago, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Teeth of the Tiger, with a special cast.—Excellent production. Highly entertaining story with good action.—Elks Theatre Co., Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

Male and Female, a Cecil Beaton production.—A very wonderful production and a surprise, for the title is a successor to big business for all three days.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sporting Life, with a special cast.—This drew only fairly well, but everyone who saw it liked it.—A. N. Miles, Eminent theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Told in the Hills, with Robert Warwick—Though scenery is beautiful, the action seems forced and not spontaneous. Hence, the picture drags. Business fell off badly the second night. Lost money on it.—Jean Lightner, Regent theatre, Malin, Calif.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hard Boiled, with Dorothy Dalton—Howling cries for more. Isn't it a grand and glorious feeling when all the cash customers say, "Good, I liked it. Oh boy! It makes life worth living."—Joseph F. Allman, Globe theatre, Monticello, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sadie Love, with Billie Burke.—Absolutely no excuse for it. Should belong to the fewer pictures class.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

Stepping Out, with Emil Bennett.—Best Bennett ever made. Acting of stars and Miles Welsh excellent. Get this quick. Business big.—W. H. Creal, suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—One of the best Daltuns we have ever used. Business great.—Pfeiffer Bros., Opera House, Kenton, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lucky in Pawn, with Marguerite Clark.—Pleasing star in featherweight production.—Elks Theatre Co., Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

His Own Home Town, with Charles Ray.—Not a bit like the book. Not much to this. My patrons were disappointed in this one.—M. Seymour, Electric theatre, Drain, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

Everywoman, with a special cast.—A big picture, and drew well, and pleased the better class of patrons.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Come Out of the Kitchen, with Marguerite Clark.—Did excellent business on this picture. Clark very pleasing in this. Best she's done for sometime.—W. L. Celow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Wis.—General patronage.

More Deadly Than the Male, with Ethel Clayton.—Excellent picture. Better than most specials.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

String Beans, with Charles Ray.—Another good comedy character. The kind everybody likes to see this star play.—A. N. Miles, Eminent theatre, Eminence, Ky.

The Life Line, with a special cast.—This was a good picture. Old, but it pulled a good business. We advertised the town all the way through.—Altman & Trifon, Lazy Daisy, and Rose Creek, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

L'Apache, with Dorothy Dalton.—Not up to the Dalton standard although star's work is fine. Why don't they put Dalton in the type she deserves?—C. L. White, Arleta theatre, Portland, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—Ince should be ashamed to advertise it was supervised by him.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Col.

Eve's Daughter, with Billie Burke.—Nothing to say about it.—Landis & Crane, Princess theatre, Monticello, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Behind the Door, with Hobart Bosworth.—One Paramount special that is a special. Too bad they're not all in this class. The ordinary Paramount special is a joke from the exhibitor's standpoint.—C. L. White, Arleta theatre, Portland, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Money Corral, with William S. Hart.—Very good. You can't go wrong on this one.—G. J. Eberwine, Auditorium theatre, Marblehead, O.—Small town patronage.

Nugget Nell, with Dorothy Gish.—A very poor picture. Burlesque that no one understood. Star not good.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Roaring Road, with Wallace Reid.—Good copyright always pleases. Fast picture.—A. W. Jackson, Liberty theatre, Atlanta, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Turning the Tables, with Dorothy Gish.—This girl puts pep into her pictures. This is a scream.—Jack Nash, Strand theatre, Trinidad, Col.

His Wife's Friend, with Dorothy Dalton.—Fair program picture. Star would draw better in more active vehicles.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

It Pays to Advertise, with Bryant Washburn.—Very good comedy.—L. W. Heal, Sterling theatre, Superior, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Hope Chest, with Dorothy Gish.—This little star delivers the goods in all her pictures. She always works hard to see her pictures do well, and she deserves them.—Jack Nash, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.

My Cousin, with Enrico Caruso.—If you play this, get a good record of one of Caruso's solos and play it on a phonograph at the very beginning of the picture with the opera scenes. It will make a hit. We were told that this picture was poor but found it a good drawing card.—Landis & Crane, Princess theatre, Monticello, la.—Small town patronage.

Pathé

Smouldering Embers, with Frank Keenan.—This is a very good production. Beautiful photography and excellent acting. Keenan has strong following with our class of trade.—Harry M. Palmer, Liberty theatre, Washington, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Right to Lie, with Dolores Cassinelli.—Everybody raved about this one. Best picture in some time.—Stephen Dzadik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

"Told in the Hills," with Robert Warwick.—In our opinion this is an ideal offering for a small town. It gets full measure of the Western atmosphere. It pleases the high brow with its beautiful scenery and logical story. A strong supporting cast. Caused more favorable comments than anything we have shown in a long time. If there is such a thing as a 100% picture this is it, for us at least.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou theatre, Carrollton, Ill.
Oh Boy! with June Caprice and Creighton Hale.—Quite the majority. Picture requires good music. A wonderful drawing card.—Teufel & Fletcher, Isis theatre, Decaturville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Oh Boy! with June Caprice and Creighton Hale.—A highly entertaining picture, well liked and well attended. Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

A Damned in Distress, with June Caprice and Creighton Hale.—Drew well on a rainy night, and no one knew the star very well. It gave excellent satisfaction.—A. N. Miles, Eminence theatre, Eminence, Ky.

Brothers Divided, with Frank Keenan.—Keenan in one of the best roles he ever played. We are getting 100% service from Pathé.—Brother's theatre, Alta theatre, Alta, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Caleb Piper's Girl, with Helen Chadwick. Poor.—Grand theatre, Chetek, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Twin Pawns, with Mae Murray.—Pleased the majority. A good fight in the last reel. Did not draw for us. Believe your paid patrons prefer comedy-drama.—Crane & Landis, Crane theatre, Monticello, Ia.—Small town patronage.

Dawn, with Sylvia Breamer.—Good picture. Weak, very good photography. Very good.—Stephen Dziadik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

Realart

Judy of Rogues Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—This is the first Realart we have played, but if all are as good as "Judy" we can consistently urge exhibitors to book them. Mary Miles Minter is well supported with a strong cast.—Harvet Ent. Co., Odeon theatre, Hardin, Montana.—Neighborhood patronage.

Erector Susan, with Constance Binney.—Picture pleased. Star new to patrons. Good business two days.—W. L. Uglow, Crystal theatre, Burlington, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—Biggest thing Mary Miles Minter ever did. Business poor on account of a blizzard. Will use this again as we make requests to do so.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Nearbyhood patronage.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—All that has been said of this production, only half tells its drawing power, and when they come all are more than pleased.—C. T. Metcalf, Opera House, Greenfield, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—Very good. Appeals to children.—A. W. Jackson, Liberty theatre, Atlanta, Tex.—Small town patronage.

Sinners, with Alice Brady.—Good picture. Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Anne of Green Gables, with Mary Miles Minter.—Pleasing picture. Three days to good business.—J. Winninger, Appleton theatre, Appleton, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Fear Market, with Alice Brady.—This is a very good picture, and did good business.—Mrs. M. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Judy of Rogues Harbor, with Mary Miles Minter.—They liked this one. It has the type of story that never fails to please a small town audience. Its characters are such as our people see every day and can instinctively understand.—R. L. Hensler, Bijou theatre, Carrollton, Ill.—Small town patronage.

Republic

When Bearcat Went Dry, with a special cast.—Certainly may be called a special cast. Action, suspense, thrills abound in this. Has a wonderful cast and photography is fine. This is one you should play.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

Little Orphant Annie, with Colleen Moore.—Packed the house. A-I entertainment. Can't go wrong on this one.—Pratt & Jackson, Regal theatre, Centerville, Tenn.—Penn. & Jackson, Regal theatre, Centerville, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Stolen Orders, with Montagu Love.—Seven very good reels, but the eighth one is weak.—Wm. Call, Kozy theatre, Moroni, Utah.—Small town patronage.

Hit or Miss, with Carlyle Blackwell.—Nothing to it. Lay off on this one. This is the first picture my patrons ever left on.—V. M. Seymour, Electric theatre, Drain, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

When Bearcat Went Dry, with a special cast.—Seemed to please but nothing great. Light business second day.—M. E. Nickles, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

When Bearcat Went Dry, with a special cast.—Went over big. Book this one.—Pratt & Jackson, Regal theatre, Centerville, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Broadway Saint, with Montagu Love.—Good comedy, but Love should do character parts rather than comedy leads.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre. Oberlin, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Eight Bells, with the Byrne Brothers.—This is a comedy. Book it. My patrons laughed from start to finish and are calling for more like it.—V. M. Seymour, Electric theatre, Drain, Ore.—Neighborhood patronage.

When Bearcat Went Dry, with a special cast.—Picture drew well. Nothing to rave about.—A. C. Moore, Alamo theatre, Bartlett, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

When Bonds are Loosed, with Dixie Lee.—Don't let them sell you this one. Absolutely nothing to it.—E. H. Winkler, Palace theatre, St. John, Kan.—Small town patronage.

Little Orphant Annie, with Colleen Moore.—This is a great one for children. Gave school children a $c matinee to a big business. Best kid picture we have seen.—Verner Hicks, Family theatre, Marion, Ill.—General patronage.

Robertson-Cole

The Tong Man, with Sessee Haya-kawa.—Bill this one big and clean up. A drama with punch. Don't miss it.—Stephen Dziadik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

Poor Relations, with Zasu Pitts.—Fair. Business good, but it was on account of Miss Pitts being liked by patrons. The picture did not give her anything to do as Miss Vidor was given the star part. Patrons went away disappointed and dissatisfied.—T. E. Walton, National theatre, New Bedford, Mass.—Nearhood patronage.

The Beloved Cheater, with Lew Cody.—This failed to go over as a special. To tell the truth, a play with no sense to it just an out of the ordinary novelty. Only way I can express it.—Mrs. A. J. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Beloved Cheater, with Lew Cody.—Fair picture. Business fair. Rather far-fetched story.—J. Winninger, Appleton theatre, Appleton, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Better Times, with Zasu Pitts.—Fair picture. No drawing power whatever here.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

The Blue Bandana, with William Desmond.—Must say it pleased. Drew big for one day and people like this star in plays of this type.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Open Door, with a special cast.—Patrons registered disgust going out. If the producers continue making pictures like this one. "Goodbye exhibitor."—A.

A LAUGH FROM "NURSE MARJORIE"

Scene from the Realart picture starring Mary Miles Minter. The story is from Israel Zangwell's novel. William D. Taylor directed.
SALEED HEARTS, with Eugene O'Brien.—If all of his series are as good as this one we can want more.—H. L. Liggett, National theatre, McKee, Ga.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—This is a good picture. Star good actor. Gave good satisfaction.—J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Benesford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Olive Thomas is indeed clever. She is not hard to look at and promises to be a big success. The cash customers do like Select and so do I.—Joseph E. Allman, Globe theatre, Monticello, III.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Isle of Conquest, with Norma Talmadge.—A first class picture. They will come out through the rain here to see it.—Ripley, Tenn.—Neighborhood patronage.

Out Yonder, with Olive Thomas.—A very interesting picture. Miss Thomas is a beautiful little star and will become better known by goods of this kind. Good business.—H. M. Kane, Orpheum theatre, Livingston, Mont.—General patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Business good, and audience well pleased. Olive Thomas is coming last here.—Mari Co., Liberty theatre, Rosenberg, Texas.—General patronage.

A Scream in the Night, with Ruth Rudd.—It's a special. A good one. Best exposure of any patrons as the most novel picture she had ever seen. Six full reels. Boost it. Picture will back you up.—J. Christenson, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—This is a good picture. Star good actor. Gave good satisfaction.—J. W. Smith, Empress theatre, Benesford, S. D.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Perfect Lover, with Eugene O'Brien.—Just a fair program picture. Advertised it high. My patrons disappointed. Could not see where he was a perfect lover.—R. M. Parkhurst, Empire theatre, Harrisburg, Ariz.—Small town patronage.

BASSETTS. A very good subject. E. M. Hammersteins shows up to good advantage. Photography excellent.—Fred Coman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

The Story of a Woman, with Norma Talmadge.—Norma is good, but the weakest story I ever saw. I don't know why she was placed without a story.—W. T. Hayes, Dreamland theatre, Providence, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Imp, with Elsie Jane.—A very good picture. Business good. Pleased my patrons. Ran it two days.—E. J. Degenhardt, Princess theatre, Mendota, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Woman Game, with Elaine Hammerstein.—A very good subject. E. M. Hammersteins shows up to high advantage. Photography excellent.—Fred Coman, Electric theatre, St. Joseph, Mo.

More United Artists

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—An excellent offering. More than pleased my patrons. Business good.—Jack Cairns, Brooklyn theatre, Detroit, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—Best she ever did. Patrons well pleased at advanced prices.—A. W. Jackson, Liberty theatre, Atlanta, Tex.

His Majesty the American, with Douglas Fairbanks.—Fine picture. Had packed house on a stormy night. Fairbanks is well liked here. Played at advanced prices.—C. N. Jacoby, Kozy theatre, Chatsworth, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—A splendid picture, but no better, if as good, as many other of her pictures.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—It's a dandy. Just as good as Daddy Long Legs, if not better. It's the only kind for Mary.—Wm. Haight, Orpheum theatre, Livingston, Mont.—General patronage.

Narrative and SAFEHEARTS, with Eugene O'Brien.—If all of his series are as good as this one we can want more.—H. L. Liggett, National theatre, McKee, Ga.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—A splendid picture, but no better, if as good, as many other of her pictures.—Majestic theatre, Grand Island, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—It's a dandy. Just as good as Daddy Long Legs, if not better. It's the only kind for Mary.—Wm. Haight, Orpheum theatre, Livingston, Mont.—General patronage.

Broken Blossoms, a D. W. Griffith production.—Splendid photography. Acting superb. Will not disappoint patrons whether they like story or not, if advertised properly.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

Pollyanna, with Mary Pickford.—A corking good picture. Ran it three days to good business in winter weather.—Meyers & Ford, Arcade theatre, La Grande, Oregon.—Small town patronage.

United Picture Theatres

The Flame of Yukon, with Dorothy Dalton. Best picture we ever used of this type. Drew repeat showing as well as first.—Teufel & Fletcher, Isis theatre, Roseville, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

A Red Haired Cupid, with Roy Stewart. You can't beat it. If you like comedy Westerns book it and boost. Roy's support helps to make it a big one.—G. N. Armstrong, Y. M. C. A. theatre, Rose Lake, Idaho.—Neighborhood patronage.

R. Nelson, Paramount theatre, Kokomo, Ind.—General patronage.

A Fugitive from Matrimony, with H. B. Warner. A remarkably well acted play. Pleased all to good business for one day.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Grand Forks, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Hearts Asleep, with Bessie Barriscale.—Good plot. Good star Miss Barriscale's first appearance here. Very charming.—Many favorable comments.—Barros & Bassett, Gem theatre, Clinton, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Brand of Lopez, with Sessie Hayakawa.—Good picture. Fine acting.—Peter Krauth, Denison theatre, Denison, la.—Neighborhood patronage.

Select

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—This star's best picture. Pleased 100%. Good business. You can't go wrong by showing this one.—F. J. Degenhardt, Princess theatre, Mendota, Ill.—Small town patronage.

The Spit Bridge, with Olive Thomas.—If all pictures were as good as this one exhibitors could remarkably well act.—Little star is new here, but making a hit.—R. M. Parkhurst, Empire theatre, Harrisburg, Ark.—Small town patronage.

Upstairs and Down, with Olive Thomas.—A regular Thomas picture, which means, can't be beat. Please everyone.—Harry Hubolth, Maxine theatre, Tarry City, Mich.—Small town patronage.

Sooner or Later, with Owen Moore.—Good. Should please any audience.—W. A. Arc, Palace theatre, Manchester, la.—General patronage.

Footlights and Shadows, with Olive Thomas.—Business good, and audience well pleased. Olive Thomas is coming last here.—Mari Co., Liberty theatre, Rosenberg, Tex.—General patronage.

A Scream in the Night, with Ruth Rudd.—It's a special. A good one. Best exposure of any patrons as the most novel picture she had ever seen. Six full reels. Boost it. Picture will back you up.—J. Christenson, Star theatre, Sandusky, Mich.—Neighborhood patronage.
Adèle, with Kitty Gordon.—It's a good picture, but rather late to show a war picture.—Stephen Dziadik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

A Man in a Million, with Dustin Farnum.—A dandy picture.—Harry Hobolth, Maxine theatre, Imlay City, Mich.—Small town patronage.

The Weirpool, Under Oath, with Florence Lawrence.—Will please all classes of people. The work of the star is good.—A. C. Mercier, Electric theatre, Perryville, Ky.—General patronage.

The Corsican Brothers, with Dustin Farnum.—Went over big at advanced prices. Farnum draws well here, and his picture draws well. This one is close to a 100% picture from every angle.—J. B. Stine, Gem theatre, Clinton, Ind.—Neighborhood patronage.

Three Black Eyes, with Taylor Holmes.—Picture drags. Lots of foolishness. Not much to it.—Wm. Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Universal

The Sundown Trail, with Monroe Salisbury.—Not a very heavy production and didn't draw. Average Western.—Chancellor Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

Bonnie, Bonnie Lassie, with Mary MacLaren.—Good, but did not do much with it. Title against picture, but pleased all who saw it and is a dandy picture.—Wm. Thacher, Royal theatre, Salina, Kan.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stromheim.—Wonderful production spoiled by a revolting theme. Will get by in city. Small towns better keep away.—Barrus & Holts, Lyric theatre, Clinton, Wis.—Neighborhood patronage.

Lasca, with Frank Mayo.—A good picture. For some reason or another Universal just can't get a good picture against picture, but pleased all who saw it and is a dandy picture.—Mrs. J. A. Dostal, Ideal theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stromheim.—Disappointed both in drawing power and story. It would have pleased much more if it had been cut to six reels instead of eight. Too slow in action and repeated too many times for it killed interest.—Bert Norton, Kossy theatre, Eureka, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

Under Suspicion, with Ora Carew.—Good. Universal is making some good clever comedies. This, one a good one.—Harry Pace, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

The Pointing Finger, with Mary MacLaren.—Is of the usual MacLaren type, but well acted. Has a few weak points in the story. Acting fair.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Max, with Monroe Salisbury.—Not liked. Not a good picture. This star is a goner. Cannot even make expenses with him. Last of this star's work for our house.—Mrs. J. A. beautiful scenery.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

A Gun Fighting Gentleman, with Harry Carey.—One of the best Westerns. Good clean comedy-drama. Carey is next to Hart in clean Westerns.—W. T. Hayes, Dreamland theatre, Providence, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stromheim.—Very good. Interesting story and beautiful scenery.—Elks theatre, Prescott, Ariz.—General patronage.

Lost, with Ora Carew.—Here is a good picture of the crook type. More patrons stopped at the box office and said it was worth going to than had done so for a long time. Slippery sidewalks hurt business.—Chancellor Bros., Dreamland theatre, Arcanum, O.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Peddler of Lies, with Ora Carew.—Good. Nothing to offend. Universal is for small exhibitor. Give them a chance. They read prices must live.—Harry Pace, Lyric theatre, Orange City, Ia.—Critical patronage.

Blind Husbands, with Eric Von Stromheim.—A fine picture. Played two days to big satisfied audience.—Summons & Love, Riddell theatre, Clarksville, Ark.—General patronage.

Marked Men, with Harry Carey.—Don't let anybody stop you from getting this knockout. Absolutely the best Carey we ever played. It gets under the skin.—W. H. Creal, Suburban theatre, Omaha, Neb.—Neighborhood patronage.

Vitagraph

The Sporting Duchess, with Alice Joyce.—We did very well with this Drury Lang melodrama. A good picture that will act as a magnet for your box office in pulling patrons. It is a good all round picture. It is in seven reels.—Charles H. Ryan, Garfield theatre, 2414 Madison St., Chicago, Ill.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Black Gate, with Earle Williams.—A good picture. It pleased all. Everyone seemed satisfied.—Altman & Trifon, Cozy theatre, Goose Creek, Tex.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Third Degree, with Alice Joyce.—Good picture.—Louis Frana, Olympic theatre, Calmar, Ia.—Neighborhood patronage.

In Honor's Web, with Harry Morey.—Morey is a good strong actor and women and men both like him for he is every inch a man.—W. T. Hayes, Dreamland theatre, Providence, Ky.—Neighborhood patronage.

The Golden Shower, with Gladys Leslie.—Fine picture with attractive subtitles. Wonderful work by the little star.—Chas. Blaine, Morgan theatre, Henryetta, Okla.—General patronage.

The Gamblers, with Harry Morey.—The best Vitagraph picture Morey has ever made. It has all the elements necessary for good picture such as action and suspense. Will please anywhere.—Ernest Stellings, Grand theatre, Washington, Ind.—General patronage.

The Yankee Princess, with Bessie Love.—Was a good Irish picture and replete with Irish wit. Show it.—R. Ross Riley, Wigwam theatre, Oberlin, Kan.—Small town patronage.

The Black Gate, with Earle Williams.—Just a picture to fill in an empty space.—Stephen Dziadik, Derby theatre, Derby, Conn.—Mixed patronage.

Fifty Productions Issued by Kremer Leaves New York on Trip to Various Independent Exchanges

More than fifty productions are being distributed on the state right plan by Victor Kremer Film Features, Inc., according to an announcement from the New York offices where Mr. Kremer made a brief visit prior to the trip he is making to the various independent exchanges over the country.

Since his acquisition of the five Essanay Chaplin productions, Mr. Kremer has extended rapidly his business. Included in the list of fifty productions are comedies, dramas, short subjects and the novelty topical film, "Screen Smiles."

Mr. Kremer announces that he has disposed of large blocks of territories for the Chaplin productions and the various Essanay pictures. He is now beginning a sales campaign in the interest of "Screen Smiles" and "Skinner's Dress Suit."

Organization Is Formed to Obtain Suitable Material for Adaptation

An important development in the present situation confronting producers in obtaining suitable material, lies in the announcement of the Authors' Stage and Screen Plays, Inc., a recently-formed organization. The object of this organization is to specialize solely in supplying adequate material for screen production, and marks an attempt to remedy the serious condition now confronting motion picture producers.

The following statement concerning plans of the new company was issued from the executive offices:

"The death of suitable material constitutes today the chief worry of the average motion picture executive's existence. That the demand far exceeds the supply is proven by the fact that every available story or play, irrespective of its adaptability for the purposes of screen visualization, has been snapped up by producers in their efforts to keep up the business of presenting to the public productions of a high standard.

Field Practically Exhausted

"Even this questionable field of 'nearly successful plays' and ordinary magazine stories, are now practically exhausted, and the producer is faced with the alternative of doing over some of the plays and stories which have been done several years ago. This condition is unfortunate and if permitted to exist, will work great havoc to the industry in general."

"This organization has been formed for the express purpose of assisting the producer in this present situation. We have secured an organization of men who know every angle of the motion picture business. They can differentiate between a poor stage play or magazine story of questionable value, for which an enormous price is asked, as against the story possessing all the elements necessary for perfect picturization and real box office value. Authors of international reputation will write these stories, always keeping in mind the fact that they are intended for filming. This point has been sadly overlooked by authors in a great deal of material now being used.

Start Publicity Campaign

"A special 'direct to the public' publicity campaign will be inaugurated with every story the author writes, as well as a campaign publicizing the author to the public. The value of this can be appreciated as against the haphazard publicity attached to a play which has a Broadway run for several weeks, probably never sees the road, is taken off and then done in pictures as a big special production. Whereas in our publicity campaign, the stories of the authors will be published in magazine or book form, or both, in conjunction with the production and release of the picture."

"All plays or stories will be handled by us only under exclusive arrangements. Producers will readily appreciate this, as it will eliminate the competitive bidding and prohibitive prices which is now being paid for an average story or play."

"The chief object of this organization is to become a valuable link between the producer of motion picture material, as well as the producer of the motion picture itself."

FAIRBANKS TAKES SCENES FOR "MOLLYCODDLE" IN ARIZONA.

Down among the Hopi Indians, Douglas Fairbanks and his company of seventy-five players obtained many unusual and picturesque scenes. One of the novelties of "Mollycoddle" is a fully equipped yacht which was transported to the desert on wheels. The strange craft plays an important part in the play's plot. Incidentally "Doug," taught the Indians a new kind of "shimmy" dance while he was with them.
NEILAN RAPS RISQUE PICTURES

Producer-Director Points Out That the Most Successful Pictures Financially Have Been Absolutely Free From Any Suggestive Taint

By Marshall Neilan

There always has been good and bad in everything and perhaps always will be. The motion picture industry is no exception and there seems to be keen competition among a few directors to see who can make the most suggestive photoplay and still keep within the law. The days of these producers are numbered unless they change their type of work.

The future will bring cleaner, more wholesome pictures than we have had in the past. Most producers already have realized the fact from a commercial standpoint, pictures that are entirely free from suggestiveness are by far the most successful and the same motives which prompted nuclear pictures in the past will ultimately cause the great majority of directors to eliminate biff from their productions in the future.

Greatest Successes Clean

It is a matter of record that the greatest successes from a financial standpoint in the history of the screen have been absolutely free from any taint of suggestiveness. "The Birth of a Nation," "The Miracle Man," "Civilization," "Daddy Long Legs," these are only a few of the great screen triumphs I can name which were fit for any man, woman or child to see.

Recently Thomas H. Ince, Maurice Tourneur, Allan Dwan, Mack Sennett, George Loane Tucker and myself combined to make pictures independent of outside affiliations and one of the principal points agreed upon was that every one of our productions shall stand for cleanliness if nothing else.

The day has arrived when exhibitors have given their support to keep the screen clean, by refusing to permit the exhibition of films that might tend to encourage censorship fanatics. No exhibitor who expects to maintain a steady patronage from family audiences can afford to suffer the feeling that he would not show his own children.

Public Is Educated

The public has been educated to the point where it selects its entertainment freely and does not (or should not) just as it suits its books by past achievements of the author, and secondly it is the theatre that does it. If they are in doubt about the type of pictures made by a certain producer their selection of an evening's entertainment will be governed largely by the theatre that offers it. If they know that a certain theatre shows nothing but clean pictures, they patronize that theatre.

As I say, there are a few producers, just as there are a few publishers who still have the feeling that the public wants entertainment bordering on the sensuous and to a certain limited extent they are right in their supposition. There is a class of people that seeks such entertainment. However, the returns on such an investment today are limited so that even these producers must begin to realize that to get the most out of a production it must have universal appeal and to have universal appeal a picture must be clean.

Screen Being Cleansed

Through natural evolution the screen is being cleansed. Looking at it from a purely mercenary viewpoint, it does not pay to produce anything but clean pictures.

No established producer will jeopardize his reputation and those who have nothing to lose to jeopardize it will realize that they will never attain success via any but the clean route.

Then again there are certain distributors that do the industry harm by the type of advertising material they use. Even if the picture is harmless, some seem to think by preparing paper that will appeal to the morbid element in human nature, a great box-office attraction is created. Sometimes this is done under the guise of "art" and other times it is a bold illustration or a suggestive caption.

Is Blow to Industry

Nothing can be gained—not even for those who perpetrate this kind of advertising—while on the other hand, a direct blow to the entire industry is registered.

A movement, such as that started by the National Association, some time ago to take steps toward the showing of unclean pictures should be encouraged and enlarged. Let us cleanse house from within and there will be less energy necessary to fight outside opposition. Exhibitors are the point of contact between producers and public. They are in a position to control the class of entertainment the screen will offer.

Then again let trade and other publications do their share by refusing to run any advertising that would harm the industry. Some of those who have continually preached against censorship of pictures have run advertisements that might tend to prove the very cause for censorship. There is still much to be done in this connection. Regardless of that, the day of the suggestive picture and the suggestive advertising is rapidly going.

Realart Will Issue

Two Big Mayflower Productions in May

Realart Pictures Corporation announces that it will depart from the custom of holding special productions for early fall presentation by publishing in May two big Mayflower features.

The two features are "The Law of the Yukon," a Charles Miller production, which was inspired by Robert W. Service's famous poem, and "Purple," an R. A. Walsh production, founded on the famous stage success by Paul A. Muni and Wilson Mizner.

The innovation of presenting the features resulted from a survey of conditions throughout the country among motion picture exhibitionists. There is a brisk demand for lookings through May and June, it is declared.

Dempsey Serial Made

In Ninety-Six Days

Jack Dempsey has completed work on "Daredevil Jack," his Pathé serial, the filming of the fifteen episodes consuming just ninety-six working days, and is now taking what he terms a well earned vacation.

The picture was directed by W. S. Van Dyke, under the supervision of Robert Brunton. Pathé officials state that reports from exhibitors and newspaper comment on the episodes so far published agree in according the "Daredevil Jack" production a place among the feature offerings of the current market.

Death Valley to be In First Kohn Scenic Producer to Head Expedition
Of Cameramen to Film
Beautiful Scenery
Marion H. Kohn, president of Marion H. Kohn Productions, will head an expedition of cameramen and geographers into Death Valley to photograph scenes which will mark his entrance into the scenic field.
Death Valley has been made the locale in many novels because of the treacherous expanse of waste territory and beautiful scenery. The expedition headed by Kohn will set out in two specially equipped motor cars and will trail a tank car containing 100 gallons of water to combat the difficulties of water shortage.
Besides photographing Death Valley, the expedition will film Furnace creek,
the infamous borax beds, Dry lake,
Funeral range, the Panamint mountains, and will make the ascent of the mightiest peak, Mount Whitney. It is estimated that the two weeks' trip will cost about $15,000. The film will be carefully edited by geographers. The pictures will be issued shortly after in the form of a two-reel scenic by Joe Brandt, eastern representative for the Kohn Productions.

First Film Version of Kaufman Editorial to Be Issued on May 10
The first Herbert Kaufman weekly,
"A Good Fellow," will be available for exhibitors on May 10, according to Lewis J. Selznick. On May 17, "Content" will be published, with "Pity the Fool" next.
 "The Herbert Kaufman weeklies," said
Mr. Selznick, "do not need to be splashed in any way, shape or manner.
His name alone has been the by-word of the literary world for years, and his writings have been read by millions of people. In offering the first release, 'A Good Fellow,' I feel certain that exhibitors, who have been awaiting eagerly news of the release, will be more than pleased with our announcement."

Ainsworth Remodeling
Fond Du Lac Orpheum
FOND DU LAC, WIS.—An expendtiture of $25,000 is being made by W. E.
Ainsworth on the Orpheum theatre.
When completed, says the manager, it will be one of the most attractive and one of the most complete in its appointments, for the whole theatre.
The seating capacity is to be increased from 550 to 750, a $10,000 Bartola organ is installed in the modern foyer is being built, a mezzanine floor and adjoining rest rooms have been provided for.

Book Jester Comedies
In Down Town Houses
Lee Herz, manager of the Sitee Film Exchange, opened his campaign for Jester comedies in Chicago by placing the fun-makers in four downtown theatres for their initial runs. These included week runs at the Star, Bijou Dream and State-Congress theatre and a four-day set-in at the Bandbox.

POPULAR FEMININE LEAD

ANNA Q. NILSSON is one of the most popular players on the American screen.
She has appeared in support of many well-known stars since her first appearance in pictures away back in 1911 in the days of Kalem. Her next appearance will be in "The Figurehead" in support of the Selznick star, Eugene O'Brien.

Cochrane Raps League's Efforts to Bar Serials As Detrimental Subjects
R. H. Cochrane, vice president of Universal Film Manufacturing Company, has taken vigorous objection to published reports of the National Motion Picture League urging a ban on serials. He also criticizes the league's attitude that serials are detrimental to motion picture progress and harmful to certain classes of patrons.
Mr. Cochrane maintains that there is just as much need for good serials as for any other film product. The league, he says, "has seen fit to convey to the public a series of reports emanating from various public school principals claiming certain phases of the motion picture industry. I am heartily in accord with all attempts to better the industry, but I find it necessary to take exception to certain activities of this league.
"The National Motion Picture League," he says, "recently has disseminated reports condemning serials on the ground of sensationalism and because they are alleged to form the 'motion picture habit.' The league further pretends to trace a devious connection between serials and juvenile delinquency. Nothing could be more erroneous or absurd.

Serials have a well-defined place in moving picture programs. Any attempt to cast dispersion upon them is to exhibit an ignorance of the reason why serials are popular."

Lesser Completes Staff
Transfer and Works Out
Policy for Issuing Film
Sol Lesser is preparing a statement of the policy he will follow in publishing the product of his two producing units.
Transfer of his executive staff to Los Angeles is complete.
George Beban has finished the cutting of his initial production, "One Man in a Million," which he wrote and directed himself. His supporting cast includes
Helen Jerome Eddy, Irene Rich, Floyd Whitlock and George Beban, Jr. He has already started rehearsal of "The Sign of the Rose."
The Annette Kellermann picture, title of which is being withheld, will be completed in about four weeks. The company has returned from San Francisco where it was making exteriors. It will go to Hawaii to secure other exteriors.
The Kellermann picture is a comedy-drama presenting the aquatic genius in a new role. It is being directed by Chet Franklin and Wheeler Oakman is the leading man.
Educational Films Has Many Subjects Exploitation Aids are Being Prepared in Advance on Supply of Material

A great variety of two-reel subjects has been prepared by Educational Films Corporation for publication as soon as the final details of the exchange system to be controlled by the organization can be completed.

In addition to the material on hand, other subjects are being prepared for distribution, the titling and cutting departments both in the East and on the Coast working continuously on these subjects.

Exploitation Material Ready

This accumulation of material has been planned by E. W. Hammons, vice-president and general manager, so that a full amount of exploitation material may be ready for each exhibitor. It will also allow every exchange manager and each salesman to familiar with the product that he is to handle so that direct sales arguments may be advanced.

The product on hand includes the Robert C. Bruce Scenics, which were made during a recent visit to the coast of British Columbia and Alaska. Eight of the Chester-Outings, which hereafter will be controlled by Educational, have been completed. Mr. Chester has five cameramen in the field and these are working in remote fields. These will be published weekly. Six ChesterScenics have been completed. These single reels are divided into two subjects, containing travel and animal topics. They will be issued every two weeks.

Other Subjects Available

Final work is being done on the pictures acquired through co-operation with the National Geographic Society. More of the product of the cameramen of the American Red Cross is on its way to this country, there being already on hand a number of reels that have not been completed. Other product that will be available for early publication will be the pictures that have been secured in cooperation with the New York Conservation Commission.

Education recently has expanded its operations further by entering the comedy field. Among the first of these acquisitions are the ChesterComedies. The first of these, "Four Times Foiled," has been given pre-release showings in the New York territory. In addition, several reels of the new product of the Stereo-speed camera have been completed.

Milwaukee Theatre Books New Lloyd-Pathe Series

The last of Harold Lloyd's first series of two-reel comedies will be published on May 2 under the title, "An Eastern Westerner." Many bookings are received for the second series, it is reported. Besides the Strand and Capitol theatres in New York, the Merril of Milwaukee has contracted for the comedy subjects.

In some sections of the country the first series of Lloyd's arc only now receiving their first run engagements, owing to various local conditions. During the past week the complete series of six was booked by the New Orleans exchange over the entire Saenger circuit.

Republic to Handle Macauley Production

"The Sowing of Alderson Creek," featuring Bernard Durning, will be the third Macauley Photoplays production to be distributed by the Republic Distributing Corporation, "The Gift Supreme" and "When Hearcat Went Dry" being the first two.

The story, which was written by Prescott Montague, a short story writer, is said to deal with West Virginia mountain characters, though nothing definite as to its plot content is disclosed. Ollie L. Sellers will direct.

MADGE IS ALL DRESSED UP

"Trammed with Red," from which the above scene is taken, has its ludicrous moments. This is one of them and Madge Kennedy, the Goldwyn star, gets lots of fun out of it.

“Vanishing Trails” Is Completed by Selig New Serial Will be Placed On State Right Market By Canyon Pictures

William N. Selig has completed production of the fifteen-episode serial, “Vanishing Trails,” for Canyon Pictures Corporation, 130 West Forty-sixth street, New York. It will be sold on the state right market.

Featured players in this new continuing picture are Franklin Farnum and Mary Alderson, the former are Harry Lonsdale, L. M. Wells, Duke Lee, Vester Pegg, Pedro Leon, Bud Osborne and W. A. Orlando. Leon De La Mothe directed it.

A publicity and exploitation campaign of wide scope is being prepared for public release of the serial.

William E. Wing wrote a very unusual story for adaptation, it is said, and the finished picture is filled with suspense and thrills throughout. The serial is said to be replete with western atmosphere and presents some skilful horsemanship.

Dan Mason Stars in Betzwood Adaptation Of F. Fox’s Cartoons

Production of the screen version of Fontaine Fox's famous cartoons, "The Toomerville Trolley," has begun under the personal supervision of Ira M. Lowry. These comedies starring Dan Mason are being made by Betzwood Pictures corporation for First National Exhibitors' Circuit.

The first publication will reach the theatres in September. They will be two reels in length.

Ground has been broken for the erection of a studio in the East. The plans include the combination of both stages with additional space added to make a studio 120 feet by 90 feet.

“Devil’s Garden” First Bennett-Barrymore

Lional Barrymore now is working on "The Devil's Garden," which will be Whitman Bennett's first Barrymore production for publication by First National Exhibitors' Circuit. It will be an adaptation of the novel of the same name by W. B. Maxwell, noted European author.

Kenneth Webb is directing the picture. The story gives ample opportunity, it is said, for the display of the dramatic talent possessed by Mr. Barrymore. As a play it was produced at the Liberty theatre by Arthur Hopkins and those who witnessed it and have seen the scenario declare that the wider scope offered by the screen has permitted the strengthening of the situation.
Listen to me! Listen to me! Fling the lapel of your coat around my finger and let me tell you.

Boy, I’m there. T. H. air—there. I’m a riot. When folks see me ramble out on the screen they throw their hats in the air and fall out of their seats. I’m good. I’m a Hindu—I admit it.

Ask Sam Katz of the Riviera Theatre. He’ll tell you. Ask Andy Karzas of the Woodlawn. Let them give you the glad news.

There’s no getting around it. You need me to jazz up the box office. Gimme a chance, that’s all I ask. I’m a young fellow trying to get along, and if I don’t make good I’ll die trying.

Gimme a chance—and make it sudden.

Take heed ye nomads of filmdom. 'Tis safer to have an extra change while traveling than to face the old toot after these days. Ask E. E. Tarrell, district manager for Vitaphraph, how we know. At that, Easter was a good day to stay close to the fireside.

"Chick" Keppler is now greeting the local exhibitors ensconced in a nifty new Buick tourer. "Chick" admits this method of approach has the "flat-wheel" style of those happy, bygone days spent in France with the famous faded to a whisper.

Jake Handelsman, sales manager of the organ department of the W. W. Kimball Company, dropped off at Evansville, Ind., long enough last week to pour forth several bars of melody on the salient points of his company's organs. Did he sign the dotted line Jake?

L. Y. Chump, erstwhile member of the local First National office, is now associated with the Chicago branch of Pathe.

Harry Weiss, manager of the Superior Screen Service, announces the acquisition of "The Confession" for this territory with the premier showing taking the screen of the Playhouse May 16, for an indefinite run.

L. A. Schiff, who for the past couple of years has been a popular member of the Unity Photopals sales staff, resigns to affiliate with his brother in the stock and bond business, the firm to be known as Schiff and Company.

R. T. Smith, former Triangle manager and associated with the sales department of the U. P. T. exchange, is now greeting the local exhibitors under the banner of the Superior Screen Service at 207 South Wabash Ave.

John Frank, owner of the New Grand Opera House, Jacksonville, Ill., announces the appointment of the genial Fred W. Sherratt as manager. This pretty theatre, which has been dark for the past eighteen months, will henceforth give patrons an opportunity to enjoy the best films, road shows and vaudeville obtainable.

Phil Solomon, manager for the local office of the Masterpiece Film Corporation, certainly registered a big scare among the many exhibitors of this territory with that legal summons he shot out last week. A rather novel and clever way of informing customers, though.

Cress Smith, manager for the United Artists Corporation in these parts, was certainly putting on the "mad scene" the other day when he peeped up. Never mind. Cress, the Sox are scheduled to play lots more games. Besides it "can't" shower every day, you know.

After that splendid run "The Woman He Chose" established at the Ziegfeld theatre April 10, they moved to the big loop Barbee theatre April 25 for a week. F. O. Nielsen, manager Mickey Film Corporation, can afford to wear those smiles.

This company controls the United States and Canadian rights for this big feature and reports that state rights buyers are fighting for a slice of it.

NAT WOLF is now covering the city clientele for the First National exchange, having recently resigned from the Republic Distributing Corporation's Chicago branch.

Pete Wales, with a circuit of houses scattered about Lanark, Kirkland, and other towns of western Illinois; D. S. Smith, who runs the Opera House, Hoopes ton, and W. H. Cadoret, proprietor of the La Petite, Kankakee, were among the strangers seen about the local exchanges last week. By the way, we learned that the Rialto of Kankakee had changed hands. How about it, brother Cadoret?

Up at the Celebrated Players exchange it certainly looks like circus day. The most gigantic and stupendous cardboard manager in existence holds sway up there. At the left as you enter is the Andalusian man eating elephant. And then there is the large, ferocious Numidian lion. Everything in animal life is on display up there with the exception of the Whizzelepazz of Africa. You must not confuse Johnny Mizzentowski with the polar walrus, or St. Greiver with the Man Masticating Marmot. All of which is just an idea of the extensive lobby display which J. L. Fried man has had built for "The Lost City." Do not fail to see the performing Mexican jumping beans as you pass out toward your right.

ST. GRIEVER and DAINY DUBIN are getting right chummy these days. Every afternoon at 2 they leave the Celebrated exchange arm in arm. These boys either know where they can get a little on the side or else they're afraid to let each other out of each other's sight, if you get what we mean.

Lost, strayed or stolen: One hand chiseled, semi-blonde Airedale mustache; Answers to the name of "Arabella." Finder please return to I. VAN RONKEL, Goldyn Pictures Corporation. No questions asked. This is an heirloom and highly prized as a keepsake.

Wait For The Red Letter In The Back Of The Book! It's Next Week.

Clothiers—Gaze on This and Shudder

The Greater Stars Productions, Inc., Chicago, claims the distinction of being the first independent exchange in the country to deal old H. C. L. a solar plexus blow by adopting overalls. Left to right we have Clyde Elliott, W. E. Callaway, Floyd Brockell and H. J. Corbett.
Visiting the Milwaukee Exhibitors

With H. E. N.

FRANK J. DUFFY, short subject manager for the Republic Film Corporation, spent several days in the city.

IRA COHEN, special sales representative for Pathé, is in St. Louis.

BOB READ is now selling Vitagraph to the exhibitors in Southern Illinois. Someone asked why JERIL GOLDMAN is wearing cheaters. For protection, of course.

CHARLIE McDoNALD, new manager of the Fox Liberty theatre, has been springing some new and unique exploitation ideas with the result that the Liberty theatre is doing better business than ever. Charlie is from Jersey and is more showing them in Missouri.

GENE FRIEND of the Cinderella theatre has the plans for a new house to be built on the corner of Sixth and Chestnut streets. The seating capacity will be 1,100.

The Delmonte theatre is nearing completion. This will be a first run house. This theatre is owned by the Famous Players-Lasky Corporation in Missouri.

CHARLIE GROZEL is wearing rubber tired glasses now. Loc-see-Bird Harold Lloyd, Sr.

A. H. BARTLETT, owner of the Empire theatre, has just purchased the 9th Avenue theatre in Milwaukee. This is a new house but a great many changes will be made. The booking policy will remain the same.

GEORGE LEVINE, manager of the "Big Un," office of this city, advises that he has been compelled to borrow extra prints to handle the heavy bookings on "The Virgin of Stamboul." Six prints are at present working out of this office.

SONAGLIO & GIACCO, who own the Butterfly theatre of Iron Mountain, Mich., have just finished equipping their theatre with the new "7000 D" Mutoskops, a Gold Fibre screen and opera chairs.

The Neenah theatre at Neenah, Wis., has been purchased by John Haeke, manager of the Doty theatre of the same city.

F. L. KOEPELBERG, of the LaCrosse Theatre Company, was in Milwaukee April 20, and was seen in good company. Fred C. Aiken was helping the popular La-Cross exhibitor put away some near beer.

SAXE BROS., in line with their policy of having only the best and liveliest staff for their chain of houses, has employed Ann McMurry, formerly of the Minneapolis Tribune, to handle the publicity for the downtown houses. Miss McMurry was responsible for the first motion picture department in the Tribune.

TOM SAXE let us in on a secret, but stated we could publish same. The work of breaking ground for the new downtown theatre will start this fall. The new theatre will have a seating capacity of 2,900 and will be built on the present site of the Princess. The house will cost in the neighborhood of $250,000. Initial plans call for a building 900 by 150 feet.

FRANK COOK is still in Milwaukee. Frank has only been identified with the show business in this city fourteen years, and as manager of the Strand he is giving the rest of the boys a run for their money. But lest you get the scribe wrong, the friendliest feeling exists among the managers.

J. J. WISEFELDER, exploitation director for the Saxe Theatre Enterprises, continues to make the natives sit up and take notice at the Alhambra.

J. B. OLINGER advises that the American theatre will be enlarged from 495 seats to 1,000 in a few months and much new equipment will be installed.

J. H. SULLIVAN, who operates the Murray, Astor, Miramar and Downer theatres, reports business fair in his neighborhood houses. A new style 50 photo-player will be installed in the Murray soon.

E. J. STHub, formerly with the Saxe Theatre Enterprises, is now manager of the Astor. A new Gold Fibre screen has been installed in this house.

Joy reigns supreme around the Pathé exchange these days. J. H. McGEEVER, manager, just received the welcome news that his office wins the Brunet first prize. Nothing strange about that though, when you cast your eye over the following list of salesmen: S. J. Honeek, B. Luthain, H. A. Wolferan, Joseph Meyer and H. C. Holah. The last named will now be sport- ing $100 watches.

J. H. ULMEYER, manager of the Ulmeyer films, in a busy last week looking pictures of the contestants in the Wisconsin News contest to be shown at the Palace theatre, the winner of which was announced at the recent F-14-M Motion Picture Award.

JOE LEVINSON, who will be remembered by the Chicago film fraternity as a salesman for the Unity Film Corporation, is now holding them out at the Saxe Bros. theatre, the Modjeska. Joe, who successfully managed the A. M. Schwartz houses at Oshkosh and Appleton, Wis., is continuing to run true to form at the Modjeska.

Milwaukee has now one of the finest neighborhood houses to be found in Wisconsin. This house, the Riviera, cost around $125,000, and under the able management of EARL RICE is playing to capacity business.

JOS. J. SCHWARTZ has just purchased the Liberty theatre and Mrs. Schwartz will manage this house. Joe has his hands full with the Kosciusko.

OLLIE, one of the team of tight wire work- ers, OLLIE and JOHNNY VAN, remembered on the "big time," is now an exhibitor at the Layton Park theatre at Milwaukee. Johnny died some time ago.

FRANK BREMNER, who runs the Idle Hour, and who has been rendering manager of the same house for ten years, advises that he is playing to capacity business since he has raised the admission price from 15 cents to 22.

HENRY IMBERG, owner of the Apollo theatre, has just finished redecorating his house.

HEUG LANGFELDBRICH, manager of the Burleigh, has just installed new $800 Concert Grand piano for his four-piece orchestra.

F. R. SMITH, who manages the Bijou theatre of Fond du Lac, and W. L. ANS- WORTH, of the Orpheum theatre, the same city, were in Milwaukee last week signing up for "Sex" and "The Lone Wolf's Daughter."

SAM R. PILOT, one of the old-timers in the game, is still at the Columbia, a house formerly owned by HENRY TRINZ. Sam has been in the show game for sixteen years, and was once an operator for Trine at the old Electric theatre on the South Side. Plans have been completed to place a large electric sign on the Columbia, also a new canopy.
